It is a remarkable report. I pay tribute to the Committee, its Chairman, the hon. Members who served on it and its officers. I was deeply impressed when, on 4 December, as my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) said, I witnessed the work of the Committee when it interviewed Sir Clive Whitmore, the accounting officer at the Ministry of Defence. I was deeply impressed by the penetrating questions that were put by the Chairman, the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon), by my hon. Friends the Members for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw), for Rutland and Melton and for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) and by the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours). They had mastered a complicated subject matter.

Considering the huge work load that the Public Accounts Committee carries, it was a very impressive performance by the Committee. It was completely on the ball. Its report is very thorough. It seems to me that if it can produce reports of this kind the Public Accounts Committee is working just as the House and country would wish it to work.

The decision of my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley has aroused deep feeling in both my constituency and in neighbouring constituencies. Kneller hall is greatly cherished. As I said in the Army debate on 30 January, 5,000 people attend the best of the summer concerts, and 3,000 to 4,000 people attend the smaller ones. Those people are drawn from all over west London.

The band from Kneller hall performs at schools, for old people, on civic occasions and in local high streets for Christmas shopping crowds. Kneller hall itself is a listed building, standing on the only hill in the area, and flies the Union Jack. It is a profoundly British institution, part of our heritage, and people love it. It is not surprising that 18,679 people from my constituency and neighbouring ones signed a petition that I presented, first to the Prime Minister in January, and then to the Secretary of State in March.

Nor is it surprising that the views of people in west London were echoed by right hon. and hon. Members when no fewer than 164 Conservative Members signed early-day motion 397, which refers to the excellent report of the PAC and expresses the hope for the Army, and for the Royal Marines at Deal and the Royal Air Force at Uxbridge.

"that band training will long continue to flourish at Kneller Hall, Twickenham"

The views of the House and of residents of west London were endorsed in a debate in the House of Lords on 5 February, when five peers—Earl Cathcart, Lord Mulley, the Earl of Cork and Orrery, Lord Westbury and Lord Graham spoke strongly in favour of retaining Kneller hall as the Royal Military School of Music. No one spoke against that, although Lord Trefgarne, who replied for the Government, spoke in somewhat guarded terms——

Sir Michael Shaw: Surprise, surprise.

Mr. Jessel: Quite, but I always want to be polite—even about those with whom I disagree.

Kneller hall is greatly beloved of the Army and respected in the music world. The great conductor Sir Charles Groves, who recently was a guest conductor at Kneller hall, is a stalwart supporter.

The PAC said in paragraph 19 of its report:

"We are gravely disquieted that the MOD should have decided on a DSM at Deal, which could have entailed expenditure of around £10 million, and would inevitably cause considerable disruption to the present arrangements for training Service musicians, before carrying out a full investment appraisal."

It then said in paragraph 22:

"we have no confidence that the appraisals carried out to date provide justification for the MOD's decision. In this connection we welcome the Treasury's firm statement that they are not happy with the MOD's figures. We trust that they will scrutinise any MOD submissions on this subject very closely."

Following the publication of that report, I wrote to the Chief Secretary to the Treasury drawing his attention to that passage. I asked him to confirm "that the Treasury will continue to make its views known to the MOD."

He replied on 6 March:

"I can, therefore, assure you that the Treasury views will most certainly be made known and that the request in paragraph 26(iv) of the PAC report will be met."

The decision of my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley was not only unsound financially, as the PAC report shows, but lacked sentiment and soul. He failed to allow for the strength of feeling in Whitton, Twickenham and the whole of west London. The reappraisal deals with costs, but I hope that the Government, having originally ignored costs, will not make the opposite error of assuming that costs are the only factor. It should consider not only costs, but the strength of feeling to which I have referred.

The importance of Kneller hall is not confined to Twickenham and neigbouring constituencies. It is of importance to the entire country, which values the high standards of military bands. I hope profoundly that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will decide to save Kneller hall not merely for the next three years, which is what has been decided so far, but thereafter to save it permanently, so that for generations to come the glorious sounds of the finest military bands in the world will continue to reverberate throughout the nation.

9.10 pm

Mr. Terry Davis (Birmingham, Hodge Hill): As usual, our annual debate about the work of the Public Accounts Committee has been poorly attended. Unusually, we have heard several contributions this afternoon and evening from hon. Members who are not members of the Committee. I cannot remember hearing so many stimulating and interesting speeches from hon. Members on both sides of the House who are not members of the Committee on matters about which they have special knowledge, either for constituency reasons or, in the case of the hon. Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim), for reasons that attach to previous work before coming to this place. The debate has been especially stimulating and interesting for that reason.

A regular feature of this annual debate are the tributes which are paid by hon. Members on both sides of the House to the Chairman and members of the PAC. It is not a matter of ritual to reiterate our appreciation. The fact is that they undertake work which is often unpublicised, and which is certainly unglamorous. It is especially important, however, as the Committee acts as the watchdog of the House over Government Departments. I associate myself with the tributes which have been paid to the members of the Committee, and especially those directed to my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon).

As my right hon. Friend explained, the work of the Comptroller and Auditor General and the National Audit Office has several facets. First, it is intended to prevent corruption, and it is fair to say that there is nothing in the reports before us that identifies corruption. Secondly, their work is designed to seek to obtain value for money. It was disturbing when my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne told the House that the NAO has been able to devote only one third of its time, instead of one half, to projects involving the test of value for money, as distinct from ensuring that the accounts are accurate. I hope that the NAO will be assisted by the Government to recruit enough staff to change the present imbalance.

It is a fact that the PAC, assisted by the Comptroller and Auditor General and his staff, has found much inefficiency in several Government Departments. We must all be concerned about what has been uncovered. My hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Park) said that the PAC has identified many instances where money has been wasted. I suppose that the most serious allegations, at least in scale, have concerned the torpedo programme. We have been told that the programme will cost £5 billion by the mid-1990s, and my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne asked what we shall get for that expenditure. The relevant report tells us that we have obtained "poor value for money". Those are the precise words that appear in the report.

The hon. Member for Horsham (Sir P. Hordern), who has great experience in these matters, told the House that in his opinion it was the largest single waste of money that he has ever seen. I regard that charge as being extremely serious. The hon. Gentleman asked, for example, whether we should continue to bear the burden of the programme. The truth is that we do not know how much money has been spent or wasted on it. As I have said, the total cost will amount to £5 billion by the mid-1990s, and the hon. Member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Griffiths) told us that less than £5 billion has been spent at present. I think he said that half that amount has been expended.

However, we do not know exactly how much has been spent, let alone how much has been wasted. This information has been blanked out in the PAC's report. I refer especially to the answer to question 2108 from the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham). The question was asked and an answer was received. The Members of the PAC may have that information, but the rest of us are not aware how much money has been spent on the programme.

Only the hon. Member for Portsmouth, North seemed to disagree with the suggestion that the torpedoes do not work. However, not even he tried to suggest that all the money had been spent wisely and nothing had been wasted. He seemed to accept that there were grounds for criticising the Ministry of Defence, if not Marconi. What has happened to civil servants in the Ministry of Defence who are responsible for what the hon. Member for Horsham described as the largest single waste of money he has ever seen? That is a serious matter. Ministers have changed from time to time, but the waste of money has continued under Governments of both political parties. However, civil servants do not change that often. The question must be asked: what is being done about those civil servants who are responsible for waste of money on that scale?

The hon. Member for Amber Valley dealt in some detail with Nexos. I thought that his contribution was interesting. There is a lot to learn from his experience and comments about the reasons for the failure of Nexos, even though I would not agree with the hon. Gentleman's political views. He agreed that there had been incompetent management at Nexos. He said that the National Enterprise Board had been largely responsible for insisting that Nexos should make a series of poor deals with other NEB-backed companies. He also told us that a large measure of responsibility rested with the NEB.

The hon. Gentleman drew the conclusion that no Government, no politician and no civil servant should ever attempt to set up new companies or new industries. That is where I part company with the hon. Gentleman. On that basis, no industrialist or business man would ever set up a new company or industry, because it is not unknown for business men, industrialists or merchant bankers to make mistakes and to have failures. I disagree most strongly with the hon. Gentleman's conclusion, but I am concerned about some of the information that he put before the House.

It seemed, from what the hon. Gentleman said, that there were grounds for criticising the civil servants at the National Enterprise Board who were responsible for dealing with Nexos, and perhaps those in the Department of Trade and Industry. That also came from the report of the Public Accounts Committee. The people at the top of the company lost their jobs. From what we have read between the lines of the report from the Public Accounts Committee, I suspect that many people employed at Nexos also lost their jobs when it was wound up and split up. But what happened to the civil servants who were partly responsible for that failure—those who decided to "drip feed" Nexos, as the Public Accounts Committee put it? What has been done as a result of those examples of inefficiency in the Civil Service?

The hon. Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw) made two other points about the Nexos report. First, the hon. Gentleman argued that there were grounds for criticism of the relationship between the Government and Government-appointed non-executive directors on the Nexos board. Similarly, he said that there were lessons to be learnt from the contents of the report on nominee directors — an investigation which arose from the De Lorean case.

It is clear from the Treasury response to the Public Accounts Committee report, and from the contribution of my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne, that the Government have responded by issuing a new guidance to nominee directors as a result of the PAC report. It is interesting to see in the report that many of those nominee directors are former civil servants. I hope that those civil servants responsible for the torpedo project and Nexos have not been appointed nominee directors by any of those NDPBs.

But what about the other directors? As I understand it from the report introduced this evening by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne, the directors of British Leyland and Rolls-Royce are not included on the list of nominee directors. The Treasury seems to regard them as special directors, for reasons which I do not understand, although I have read the report several times.

The Government have a shareholding of nearly 100 per cent. in both British Leyland and Rolls-Royce. What guidance is given to the directors? We are told, it seems that the directors are appointed by a self-perpetuating elite. The chairman of BL, the chairman of Rolls-Royce and existing directors scout about for people they think will be good, congenial directors, and then make recommendations to the shareholders—the Government — for endorsement at some annual general meeting. That is not good enough.

I hope that at some time in the future the Public Accounts Committee will go on to consider the relationship between the Government and those directors who are not covered by the report about nominee directors. What are the duties and responsibilities of these other directors who deal with much bigger companies and enterprises in important industries compared with the directors who are the subject of the report? What is the relationship between those directors and the Department of Trade and Industry? We should be told.

The hon. Member for Scarborough made a second point in relation to the Nexos report. He argued, rightly, that political considerations had been involved in the decision to establish Nexos and that political lessons should be learnt from that experience. Again, the lessons will vary according to one's political views.

The Nexos report is not the only one that we need to read with political views in mind. As my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-East made clear, political considerations were involved in the way in which the sale of Government shareholdings in British Telecom was handled. That sale was strongly criticised by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne, who asked why there was such a rush to sell everything at once, because that was bound to depress the price and affect the income received by the taxpayers through the Government. My right hon. Friend argued that the Government had not received as much money as they could have done from the sale, and that the taxpayers had lost. He asked several times: why was there a rush? The answer — which perhaps we should not expect the Chairman of the PAC to give us—is "political reasons". The Government had to rush through the sale of BT to finance their deficit. The whole of the Government's strategy on public expenditure and income is based on the sale of assets. The Government rushed the sale — regardless of getting the best possible price for BT—for political reasons.

That brings me to the report on the proposed defence school of music, the implications of which are the most disturbing of all these reports. The hon. Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) questioned the fundamental decision on the amalgamation of three existing schools of music. I think that he will be pleased to learn that the Treasury has agreed that that fundamental decision will be reviewed. It has said also that there will be other investigations, reconsiderations and reappraisals of the economics of where the merged school will be located.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne told us that if there was to be a merger of those schools of music, it was clear that Eastney was the best site and that Deal was less suitable and more expensive than Eastney. Then why was Deal chosen as a site by the Ministry of Defence? The hon. Member for Rutland and Melton told us that the paper was the "least convincing" one he had seen in all his time on the PAC.

The hon. Member for Scarborough went as far, or further, in the examination of Sir Clive Whitmore. It is important to put on record what the hon. Gentleman said:

> "Reading this document one gets the clear impression, which has been borne out by your answers so far, that the decisions were not made on financial grounds and that after the decisions had been made, then a financial investigation was carried out in the hope that perhaps the decision already taken could be justified."

[Mr. Terry Davis]

Having read that report, I think that the way in which the hon. Gentleman put that point was justified. That is the impression one gets from the wriggling that went on in trying to answer the Committee's questions.

The PAC concluded that it viewed the decision with "grave disquiet". It reminded me of some of the decisions I saw when I worked as an auditor. Decisions were taken for non-commercial reasons and then an economic justification was prepared. Not surprisingly, the results did not match the economic justification, and eventually the chickens came home to roost. If people had said at the beginning that they were taking the decision for non-commercial reasons, there would have been much less criticism and no blame would have been attached to it.

It sounds as though this decision may be more serious. The hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) made a series of serious allegations, and there are some serious points to be answered by the Financial Secretary, or perhaps by the Government on a later occasion.

The question is whether the decision was taken for political reasons. My right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne told the House that Deal was included on the list only as a result of representations by the right hon. and learned Member for Dover (Mr. Rees) who, at the time, was Chief Secretary to the Treasury. But the question raised by the allegations of the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South is whether there might be some other reason for the decision having been taken — a reason which would be regarded by everyone in the House as being even more serious. I am not clear how we will be assured that there has not been an example of the sort of corruption that we all fear to find in the public service. The Financial Secretary owes the House a statement on how the Government intend to proceed to ensure that the public interest has not been betrayed.

It is clear from the report that both inefficiency and political considerations have been involved in the control of nursing manpower. My right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne and my hon. Friends the Members for Coventry, North-East and for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton) fastened on to that report and explained how the Department of Health and Social Security imposed centralised controls over the numbers of staff being employed in the National Health Service without knowing whether the right numbers of nurses were being employed in the first place and, indeed, without knowing whether they needed to increase the number of nurses. Obviously that is a matter of political consideration. It is clear that, by any managerial test, it was a grossly inefficient decision to take.

I end on a point with which I began. The prospect of an examination by the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton may frighten permanent secretaries, as my hon. Friend the Member for Fife, Central suggested. The reports of the Public Accounts Committee may be as damning as my hon. Friend called them. However, as my hon. Friend asked, what has happened to the people who were responsible for this waste of money? What happened as a result of the 1980 report by the Public Accounts Committee on the torpedo programme? What has happened as a result of the latest report published a year ago? We should be told whether civil servants are expected to be accountable for their inefficiency.

The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Norman Lamont): I have to confess that this is the first time that I have had the pleasure of attending a debate on reports of the Public Accounts Committee. I am slightly embarrassed to make that admission, because it is only a few months ago that I was standing here admitting that it was the first time that I had attended a debate on the Army. The response then was much the same as it is now. I thought that I should make that admission before going on to make any ritual noises about how sad it is that more hon. Members have not joined in the debate. However, I agree with the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davies) that one of the interesting things about the debate is the number of Members who are not members of the Public Accounts Committee who have participated and contributed to the debate.

I now find, rather suddenly, that I am a member of the Public Accounts Committee. I thank the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon) for writing to me no less, and inviting me to attend the sessions of the Public Accounts Committee. As a good Conservative I have sought precedents in this matter, and I believe that that has not happened much in the past. I shall certainly bear his kind invitation in mind.

Being a stranger to these debates, I was somewhat puzzled when, as the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne was finishing his speech, the Chamber filled up with about 50 hon. Members, all of whom appeared deeply concerned about the defence school of music. I found it a puzzling phenomenon. However, it later became clear why they had arrived.

Even if I have not attended these debates before, as a Minister I am certainly extremely aware, and have always been aware, of the effectiveness of the Public Accounts Committee and of the importance of its recommendations. I can certainly say to the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne that its recommendations have a considerable impact on Departments and Ministers.

My hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) said that the Public Accounts Committee struck terror only into mandarins. I can assure him that it strikes terror not only into mandarins. It has a far wider impact than that.

My hon. Friend made an outstanding speech. I think that everybody who was here to hear it will agree with that. We became a little alarmed at the force of my hon. Friend's attack on back slapping. I thought that he was going to go in for a bit of back stabbing, instead of back slapping, such was the vitriol of his attack. I became a little alarmed about the friendship that seemed to be growing up between the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton) and my hon. Friend. It seemed as though, in his mellowing and ripening years, he felt that he had found a good successor on the Public Accounts Committee, but I can assure the hon. Member for Fife, Central that, having known my hon. Friend for some 25 years, despite his acid remarks, he is a very nice person, although he is an effective member of the Public Accounts Committee.

I think that everybody is agreed that the function of the Public Accounts Committee is of enormous importance. Obviously it is a matter of public interest that the influence and scope of the Committee should be increased, as it has been increasing. There is one measure, which perhaps is not adequate, of how that has been happening, and that is the number of reports coming from the Committee. In the current session the Committee has already passed the 1984-85 total of 38 reports. Of course, it is not just the quantity of reports that matters, but it shows that the area of accountability and the ability of the Committee, supported by the National Audit Office, has been widening, which is a welcome development.

As a newcomer to the debate, I pay tribute to the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne for his work as Chairman of the Committee. Even in the short time that I have been in the Treasury, seeing the paperwork, and having access to all the papers that go before the Committee, I know that it is a demanding job, and that it is one to which the right hon. Gentleman has given an enormous amount of care and dedicated attention. The House is very much in debt to him for the way in which he has done that.

The dilemma for a person in my position responding to the debate is normally the difficulty of having to reply to so many different subjects with which the Financial Secretary is unconnected. Perhaps my problem is different. I am slightly embarrassed at the extent to which I have been in the Departments that are connected with the reports. I am relieved to say that, as far as I can see, in none of them have I had direct, intimate and immediate involvement, but I have been skirmishing around them.

Two defence subjects have been raised in the debate. One is simple and one is complicated. The simple one is torpedoes and the complicated one is the defence school of music. I feel that I have been extremely close to that, first by being in the Ministry of Defence, and secondly by being a parliamentary neighbour of my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel).

This may be only the 11th report, but it must be at least my hon. Friend's 12th speech on the defence school of music. I pay tribute to the tremendous campaign and assiduity of my hon. Friend in his determination to see the school in his constituency retained. Although I am his neighbour, I confess that I have never had the pleasure of visiting the Kneller hall school of music. Alas, I have found that in public life it is sometimes necessary to angle, even in public, for invitations, and I look forward—

Mr. Jessel: My right hon. Friend will be extremely welcome to visit Kneller hall, provided that the Government take the right decision.

Mr. Lamont: That seems to be a somewhat conditional response. It does not fit very well with my hon. Friend's normally very generous, open and spontaneous nature.

I agree with the hon. Member for Hodge Hill that serious issues have been raised in the report and in the debate. The central and obvious point is that the Government have accepted the Committee's recommendations and taken its points extremely seriously. Because of that, the decision is being reconsidered and a fresh and full evaluation of the best way to proceed is now being undertaken. As my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham stressed, that evaluation, which includes the use of professional accountants outside the Department, will include the option of leaving the present schools where they are. I can assure my hon. Friend that the Treasury will have to be satisfied about the finances of the chosen solution. The reassessment is not yet completed, but my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will announce the decision as soon as possible.

The hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) raised a serious point. I do not think that the hon. Member for Hodge Hill chose to follow that up, but he would agree that that point was serious. The hon. Member for Portsmouth, South asked whether there had been contact with Portsmouth council about the valuation of the land. It was made clear in Sir Clive Whitmore's evidence to the Committee, on page 11 of the report, that the PSA had been asked by the MOD and had informally consulted city council officials. That is, it had consulted not members of the council, but city council officials. That is what happened.

The hon. Member for Portsmouth, South—who has explained the reasons for his absence from the Chamber to me—referred to the differential unemployment rate. It is true to say that unemployment in Deal was higher than in Eastney, although not higher than in Portsmouth as a whole. The hon. Member for Hodge Hill asked why Deal was chosen. As I understand the position, when the former Secretary of State considered the matter, one of the factors that he took into consideration was the number of defence establishments in the Southampton-Portsmouth area. That is one of the reasons why he wanted to look elsewhere and why, with his well-known passion for devolution and regional development, he wanted to look for a site in the north of England. However, when no suitable site could be found there, the decision was made in favour of Deal.

The employment position was considered, on the ground that although the investment appraisal favoured Eastney, it was only just so. My right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State felt that when one took into account the employment position, the balance was swung in favour of Deal.

Mr. Terry Davis: As the Financial Secretary to the Treasury appears to have concluded his remarks about that report, may I press him further on that point? I did not choose to pursue the issue raised by the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), as the Financial Secretary said. I do not have the intimate knowledge of that subject that the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South has. However, he made several allegations about the dubious nature of the valuation of land, and that was endorsed by the hon. Member for Portsmouth, North. The hon. Gentleman questioned whether anyone had given misinformation about the value of the land. He also commented on what had not happened since the Treasury minute was issued.

The whole thing leaves a lingering smell. I am not criticising the right hon. and learned Member for Dover (Mr. Rees). Even the former Chief Secretary to the Treasury is entitled to press his constituency interests, but the House should be assured that there is nothing more serious here at a lower level in some branches of the Civil Service. I am not saying that there was any truth in the allegations, but they were serious and should be investigated. We cannot leave the matter in this way.

Mr. Lamont: I shall certainly follow up other things that were said by the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South. I felt it right to comment on some of the things that he said even though the hon. Member for Hodge Hill had not pressed them, because I felt they were important. I hope that no aspersions will be cast on the actions or motives of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for

[Mr. Lamont]

Dover (Mr. Rees). I know that the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill did not do that. I knew that I would be responding to this debate, and when I inquired, one of the things that I was told immediately was that when my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Dover was Chief Secretary he asked that he should play no part in the Treasury on any decisions taken on this matter, because he wished to be free to press his constituency interests.

Mr. Terry Davis: I have already made it clear that I am not raising any questions about the former Chief Secretary, for whom I have a high personal regard. The allegations made by the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South deserve to be answered. They cannot be answered now from the Dispatch Box by the Minister, who had no notice of those questions, and I do not expect him to deal with them now. I am asking him for an assurance that those allegations will be investigated by the appropriate people.

Mr. Lamont: I had hoped and thought that I had given that impression. If I did not, I now give the undertaking that I will look into the matters.

I shall now move from the subject of the defence school of music to another subject that was raised by the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne and by the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Park). I think that it was also touched on by my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw) when he talked about Nexos. It is the whole question of nominee directors, which has arisen out of a few cases. I say a few, but that is not to say that they are not important cases, because they include the De Lorean case and the Nexos case, in which the argument has been advanced that where the taxpayer is investing money it is right that he should be represented by nominee directors.

As the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne said, we have issued a revised and expanded guidance note on the appointment of nominee directors. Copies of that were sent to the Committee. I am sorry that the right hon. Gentleman received one only today. I understood that it was sent yesterday, and while I appreciate that that is short notice, I had a choice of either sending it at short notice or delaying it until after this debate and opting for a comfortable life. I thought that it was a good thing that it should be available for the benefit of the Committee. I hope that when the right hon. Gentleman has had an opportunity to study the note in greater detail he will find that it meets many of the anxieties put forward by the Committee.

The prime responsibility for appraising projects and for monitoring lies with the sponsoring Department, the agencies or the non-departmental public bodies concerned. One has to strike a balance between commercial freedom and accountability. The guidelines we have issued do not mean that the funds invested in a commercial business will always be protected by a nominee director. The Department or the non-departmental public body will have to consider in each case whether the appointment of a nominee director is appropriate, bearing in mind the size and nature of the investment. The guidance note draws a distinction between large listed companies, where perhaps the Government have a residual shareholding following privatisation, and companies which are having funds invested in pursuit of regional or inward investment policies or for selective assistance.

In the former case — residual shareholding in the large company — detailed monitoring is not usually required. The role of the nominee director in such a company is to keep a general eye on the value of the Government's investments. He may be concerned with things like the golden share. Careful monitoring is certainly required when it comes to companies where money has been invested in pursuit of regional or inward investment policies. In this case the nominee director may be required to strengthen the board and to provide certain skills.

The hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) put his finger on one of the points of concern to the Committee. The director of a company, as we are all aware, cannot just represent an interest, and a nominee director has the same responsibilities as any other director of a company. The problem that we face is how to reconcile what the PAC wants with the obligations that are placed by law on directors. We have reached the conclusion that, where assistance is provided, there should be agreement between the company and the Government, agency or sponsoring Department about the degree of monitoring and the freedom of the director to report back.

The hon. Gentleman asked whether companies would be free to decide not to accept the financial assistance offered on such terms. The answer is yes. People will be asked whether they wish to accept the terms on which this monitoring will take place.

My hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough identified the problem of a conflict of interests. I agree that one can have a conflict of interest if a director is the person responsible for deciding on assistance within a Department or within a Government agency. That is not a desirable situation, and in my view it should only occur exceptionally. When such conflicts arise, we intend that the appointment should require the agreement of the permanent secretary as well.

Another question which has been raised in the debate concerns nursing manpower and whether there is a formula for the right number of nurses for a complex organisation such as the National Health Service. The Government believe that this is a matter for the health authorities in the context of their own needs and strategies. When one reflects on the problem, one realises the degree of nursing for a given standard of medical care can vary in different parts of the country, because of morbidity rates, the pattern of services and the cluster of mental illness and mental handicap hospitals in certain areas. The sheer mathematics of a formula for the entire country does not make a great deal of sense.

It is right, however, that within a region there should be a formula, and one ought to be able to make an assessment within each region. A short time ago we did not have a formula in any region for making an assessment of the right number of nurses. Although we have not reached the position whereby each regional health authority has such a formula, we are moving to the situation where most of the health authorities have one or are planning to adopt one. That is the way the Government see it, rather than having an overall formula for the country.

The hon. Member for Fife, Central asked when the Cumberlege report would be available. I am afraid that the only information that I have is that it will be available later this year. I shall find out whether I can get anything more precise, and if so I shall communicate it to the hon. Gentleman.

A certain amount of time was taken up with the privatisation of British Telecom. A question was raised concerning the basis for the accounts and why we have moved from current cost accounting to historic cost accounting prior to privatisation. I am sure that many hon. Members will recognise that there are strong reasons why one needs to have current cost accounting in nationalised industries, where often there is heavy investment in old assets. In contrast, current cost accounting has not been generally adopted by the private sector. The policy that we followed at the time of privatisation was to have accounts on both bases available because we were aware that investors would want to have the type of accounts that are most commonly used in the private sector.

The right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne asked whether we could not have accomplished the sale of equity on a bit-by-bit basis. I was not sure whether he was not advocating drip feeding of the type condemned when applied to Nexos. We have looked at the matter, but phasing of sales is not favoured because, leaving aside the fact that the political objective of privatisation would not be achieved, there is a problem of the overhang of the stock on the market.

The right hon. Gentleman contrasted the position of the gilts market with that of the equity market on privatisation. With respect, there is a difference between the two markets. Although it would be a simplification to say that gilts are much alike and although it would be wrong to say that there is no room for relative price movements, it is a fact that the overhang of stock in one particular company tends to have an effect on the prices of that one company rather than on the wider market, which is the effect of a tap stock on the gilt market. The effect of phasing would have been adverse on the price.

The hon. Member for Coventry, North-East talked about the terms of privatisation, the fat cats in the City and the commissions that are being earned. Sometimes one hears that the Government are driving a hard bargain on commissions and privatisation. Following the British Telecom sales there have been some secondary sales, including Cable and Wireless, British Aerospace and Britoil, in which the commissions have certainly been lower than those negotiated for BT.

We want to negotiate a good price and the best and keenest commission that we can possibly get, but the BT sale was the biggest share offering ever, and when arguing over commissions we had to bear in mind the natural anxiety about whether the issue of the share could be guaranteed to be a success. Obviously that was a major factor in the negotiations of the commission.

The hon. Members for Fife, Central, for Hodge Hill and for Portsmouth, South and my hon. Friends the Members for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Griffiths) and for Rutland and Melton rightly talked about the torpedo programme. No one could disagree with the general dismay at the problems that have been encountered in the development of Tigerfish, and no one could quarrel with the fact that it has been expensive and that there has been a long delay. It is the function of the PAC to identify that and to investigate why it has happened. But I agree a little with my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, North. We must identify the cost overruns and where things have gone wrong, but it is wrong to imply, even if a project has had cost overruns and things have gone wrong, that a weapons system which we are desperately anxious to export is not working when it is working. The hon. Member for Portsmouth, South went somewhat far in his condemnation of the Tigerfish torpedo. It has been successfully tested and the Royal Navy has professed itself well satisfied with the results of the test.

The hon. Gentleman seemed to think it rather odd that a torpedo should be tested on a stationary ship. I am not sure what other sort of ship it could be tested on. Perhaps it is a new version of scrap and build, which is, I know, a way in which people always like to aid the shipbuilding industry. It seems rather odd to think of having a moving ship with men on it in order to test our weapons. The Royal Navy has professed itself well satisfied with the Tigerfish torpedo. The new development incorporates some of the technology in the Sting Ray torpedo, which was the point made by my hon. Friend for Portsmouth, North. As a number of foreign countries have the torpedo and we are anxious to export more, I think we ought not to be ashamed to say that those who have bought it have a good product. The right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne and the hon. Member for Fife, Central are right, of course. It is a matter of enormous concern that we have had the problems that we have in the development of this torpedo.

Some of the points raised go back a long way, to the early 1970s and, in terms of the price and contractural arrangement, we have a very different situation today. All the contracts now are fixed-price contracts—that applies to Tigerfish, Spearfish and Sting Ray. It is true that we do not have a prime contractor for all three torpedoes. There is a prime contractor for Tigerfish, for the weapons handling system and for the torpedo. The problem is that Sting Ray is fired from several different platforms—helicopters, aircraft and ships—and one cannot have a prime contractor that covers the lot. The Ministry of Defence said that it would consider whether the prime contractorship could be widened in the case of the Spearfish contract. That is being considered. No decision has been made on it. It was felt that it would not be commercially right to disrupt the existing fixed-price contract to go for primary contractorship across the board.

Various hon. Members raised the question of competition for torpedos in future. It is intended that when Spearfish has finished its development there should be a contract for production. I assure my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton that there will be some vigorous competition at the subcontract level. Three quarters of Sting Ray will be subcontracted and two thirds of that three quarters is being placed by competition. I am assured that companies outside the GEC group are filling a large part of that. I think that there is a real prospect for competition there.

The hon. Member for Fyfe, Central raised the question of collaboration on a future generation of torpedoes. I entirely agree with him. This is the logical way to go. His logic applies not only to torpedoes, but to many other weapons systems.

Mr. Terry Davis: The Minister has not answered the important question about what happened to the civil servants who were responsible for the waste of money on the torpedo programme and also partly responsible for the waste of money on Nexos. If the Minister does not know the answer, will he find out and write to me?

Mr. Lamont: I am willing to write to the hon. Gentleman. When I was a Minister at the Ministry of Defence, I can well remember that I asked exactly the question that the hon. Gentleman has put to me. Trying to find out which civil servants dealt with a programme stretching over 25 years is a pretty difficult and lengthy thing to do. I assure the hon. Gentleman that people's performance is taken into account, but it would be wrong to think that only a very small group of people are connected with the project. It would be quite wrong also to think that all the fault lies with civil servants. As a number of my hon. Friends and Opposition Members have indicated, much of the fault lies also with British industry.

The method adopted in the debate, of concentrating on about six subjects, has proved extremely worth while and has targeted the debate most usefully. I therefore thank all those hon. Members who have participated in it.

ESTIMATES

Resolved,

That this House agrees with the Report [26th June] of the Liaison Committee.—[Mr. Neubert.]

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

10.1 pm

The Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Nicholas Ridley): With — [Interruption.] — permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement.

My consultations on privatising the water authorities have shown that, while preparations for their privatisation are well under way, more time is needed to prepare the necessary legislation. I have therefore concluded that we are unlikely to be able to introduce the Bill in the next Session.

I understand that further powers may be needed to enable water authorities to prepare themselves for privatisation.

I reaffirm the Government's intention to proceed with water privatisation as soon as practicable.

Dr. John Cunningham (Copeland): Apparently, at least for once in a while — judging from the noise coming from the Conservative Benches — this is the news that the Conservative party, like the rest of the country, wanted to hear. Is the Secretary of State aware that this is a scandalous way for him — [Interruption.] — and his Cabinet colleagues to behave, as a statement has had to be dragged out of them at 10 o'clock on a Thursday night. At that, it is a pathetic and inadequate statement to meet the information needs and requirements of the House and to meet the needs and requirements of those responsible for managing the industry, those who work in it and the public. It is a pathetic performance, and a humiliating introduction to the Secretary of State's tenure of his high office.

Will the Secretary of State make it clear that several major legal questions, which are unanswered, and which the Government are currently unable to answer, lie behind this humiliating climb down? Will he confirm that the Government have no legal title to those assets, and are unable to sell them for that reason alone? Will the right hon. Gentleman also confirm that the water authorities have no legal powers to prepare themselves for privatisation in the way that this Government have been urging them, or indeed pushing them, to do? Will he further confirm that privatised water authorities would not be recognised as competent authorities by the EEC, could not, therefore, be acceptable to the Community, and would not be eligible for the sort of Community investment that is currently being made in order to try to clean up the pollution, for example, in the Mersey basin?

Will the Secretary of State also make it clear that his friends in the City have told the Government that there is no way in which the water authorities can be sold effectively for any realistic price, given the pending prosecution of Her Majesty's Government by the European Economic Community, because the quality of bathing water on dozens if not hundreds of British beaches does not match the minimum requirements? [Interruption.] Given that these proposals were at the heart of the Government's future programme and their legislative intentions, it is amusing to see how light Conservative Members are making of the retractions. They will not be laughing when they start looking for money for the tax cuts in the next Budget.

Is it not clear that the creation of private monopolies would fail completely to provide any realistic safeguards for consumers? In that respect, among others, the Government have failed to provide any convincing rationale for their proposals [Interruption.] —

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a very serious statement.

Dr. Cunningham: I can understand why Conservative Members are anxious to get this over as quickly as possible. How could the Government have ensured the necessary regulation of privatised water authorities, which may well have major shareholdings of some of the biggest polluters in the country, to guarantee that they would meet the requirements for environmental protection that millions demand and expect?

Has not this whole episode been an example of how a reckless and despondent Prime Minister was willing to gamble with the health and well-being of the people of this country in a desperate grab for cash to bail out yet another election promise? We make it clear that, like the vast majority of people, we warmly welcome this recognition of the abject failure of the Government's thinking. We shall go on opposing these proposals if ever, or whenever, they return.

Mr. Ridley: I find the hon. Gentleman's mood a little difficult to interpret. I cannot discover whether he is angry or pleased. Some of his concern seems to be thoroughly misplaced. He said that the statement had been dragged out of me, but it was not a bit like that. I am all eagerness, but only a few days ago the Labour party was asking for the Bill to be postponed. I quote his words when he was told that we were proceeding with the Bill. He said that the Government's "motivation is a crude, desperate grab for cash to buy votes."

—[Official Report, 5 February 1986; Vol. 91, c. 289.]

Now, when we have abandoned that immoral technique for a year, he seems to be thoroughly disappointed. I cannot help thinking that the hon. Gentleman is a little sad because he thinks that we may have shot his fox.

There is no suggestion whatsoever that we do not have legal title to sell these assets. Although the legal powers are utterly adequate for what the water authorities have done so far in co-operating to further the cause of privatisation, as flotation comes nearer their powers to plan and prepare for their operations as a private company are not entirely without doubt. For that reason, I included in my statement an undertaking that we would remove any such uncertainty so that in due course we may continue with the policy when we are returned to power after the next election.

The hon. Gentleman had further contradictions to put before the House. He said that he thought that the water authorities were unsaleable because of the state of the beaches in certain parts of the country. Then he went on to say that what we had done was to deny ourselves massive tax cuts. He cannot have it both ways. He was all over the shop tonight. I have never seen such a deplorable performance, and I know why: because it is the last time that the hon. Gentleman will be able to make the kind of silly speech that he made tonight.

Mr. Michael Colvin (Romsey and Waterside): Will my right hon. Friend acknowledge that it is a little unfair to make a statement like this at 10 o'clock on a Thursday evening, because Opposition Members normally enjoy a four-day weekend? For them to be expected to be here on a Thursday evening to listen to a statement like this is really asking a little bit too much.

[Mr. Michael Colvin]

However, as Conservative Members are here in strength, I should like to ask my right hon. Friend to give an undertaking to the House that he will think again about the disbursal of the proceeds from the liquidation of these assets. When the water authorities were originally set up, certain water boards that provided water, such as the Andover borough council, had their assets sequestered and no compensation has been paid to them. When my right hon. Friend comes to decide how the proceeds from the privatisation of the water authorities are to be disbursed, I hope that he will bear in mind the original owners of those water assets.

Mr. Ridley: I agree with what my hon. Friend says about the impending departure of the sleepers, which has caused and will continue to cause me to keep my answers as short as possible, so that the weekends of Opposition Members are not truncated and made short. I do not believe that there is a case of the kind that he mentioned relating to who owns the assets. However, a little time will enable us to examine all such questions, and I am sure that my hon. Friend is grateful that we shall do so.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I congratulate the Secretary of State on responding so promptly to the points that we made to him when we initiated a debate on the subject about 10 days ago. We told him then that his plans would not succeed. Will the next election manifesto contain a reference to water privatisation, unlike the previous one, so that if the Government wish to proceed with privatisation they will have a mandate for it, for a change, if they are elected?

Secondly, given that the Secretary of State's Department has now abandoned rates reform, local government structure reform and rent decontrol reform, does the Department of the Environment have any other plan left to bring out on this side of the general election?

Thirdly, has the Secretary of State made any estimate of how much the Government will have to find from another budget in terms of additional revenue, since the prime motivation appeared to be financial gain to the Government from privatising the water authorities?

Lastly, when was it that the Government realised that what was always bound to be a several stage process lasting several years could never be completed within the maximum remaining length of this Parliament? To the rest of us, it was obvious a long time ago. Did it take the Secretary of State to make clear what was clear to the rest of us a long time ago?

Mr. Ridley: I must confess that when I heard the hon. Gentleman's speech in the recent debate on privatisation I thought that perhaps we ought to look again at the case for proceeding with it even more quickly.

I believe in the privatisation of state assets just as much as I believe in the privatisation of water. However, I actually believe it important to get it absolutely right so that when the Bill comes before the House, as it will, although the hon. Gentleman probably will not be here because it will be after the next election, and perhaps will be included in our manifesto—he will not be able to find one part that does not fully satisfy the House in all reasonable quarters.

I assure the hon. Gentleman that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor will not lose revenue that could have been available for tax cuts this side of the election. The great advantage is that there will be even more revenue available for tax cuts after the election.

Mr. Roger Sims (Chislehurst): Is my right hon. Friend aware that Conservative Members who warmly supported the policy of privatisation are disappointed that he has found it necessary to make this statement? However, I assure him that we realise the complexity of this legislation and are anxious that, when it comes forward, it is comprehensive. We welcome the reaffirmation of his adherence to the policy of privatisation. When he brings forward the legislation, it will have the wholehearted support of Conservative Members.

Mr. Ridley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, to whom the information was first imparted because it was he who inquired about this matter not long ago. I am also grateful for his support for both the principle of privatisation and the obvious need to ensure that we get all aspects of this massive and complicated matter correct before presenting proposals to the House.

Mr. Michael Cocks (Bristol, South): I congratulate the Secretary of State on maintaining his reputation for always making the worst of a bad job. Since the motivation for privatisation is mainly political, what bearing will his announcement have on the timing of the next general election?

Mr. Ridley: I do not quite understand whether the right hon. Gentleman welcomes my statement or is against it. He appeared to be somewhat ambivalent. Many Conservative Members, and quite a few Opposition Members, believe that the Government have taken the right decision to present proposals that are fully worked out and correct.

The right hon. Gentleman must reach his own conclusions about the timing of the general election. On a personal note, I hope that it is a long time away so that we can have the pleasure of the right hon. Gentleman's company a little longer.

Sir John Page (Harrow, West): Is my right hon. Friend aware that the country will find the bogus indignation of the Opposition absolutely absurd? Does he appreciate that the captain of the Opposition ship that is sailing tonight has produced a unique feat of navigation by running into both Scylla and Charybdis on the same statement?

Does my right hon. Friend accept that all sides of the water industry will be grateful to him for giving a little more time to study the complications of privatisation before it occurs?

Mr. Ridley: I entirely agree with my hon. Friend on all but one point—I do not think that the Opposition's indignation is bogus, I think that it is genuine. I believe that the fury unleashed by the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) is because he wants us to proceed with the Bill. I cannot think of any other reason for there being so little welcome for my statement.

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): Does the right hon. Gentleman accept that any prolonged period of uncertainty cannot be good for those who work in the industry and that there needs to be clarification as quickly as possible?

In view of the difficult legislative position to which the right hon. Gentleman referred, will there be any paving legislation during the next 12 months? If not, will there be more than one parliamentary year in which it will be necessary to introduce legislation before the matter is concluded? If so, will it not be a period of three or even four years before the matter is satisfactorily concluded?

Mr. Ridley: I can assure the hon. Gentleman that there is no uncertainty. The water industry will be privatised as soon as the general election is over and it will be done by a Conservative Government. The hon. Gentleman can assure his constituents that they have no need to worry about returning to the dead hand of state ownership. All necessary steps will be taken to ensure that when the legislation is presented it is in complete shape and perfectly proper. I cannot go beyond what I said in my statement earlier about any necessary changes beforehand.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls (Teignbridge): Does my right hon. Friend agree that, far from this being a humiliating climb down, it is no more than what might have happened given the reply which the Minister of State made in response to the debate on water privatisation? When responding to doubts that had been expressed by Conservative Members, he said that the Government would listen.

Does my right hon. Friend agree that it is possible, if we are now to take further time to consider the privatisation proposals, to decide to abandon the proposals entirely once the exhaustive examination has been completed?

Mr. Ridley: Although my hon. Friend is right to say that this is not a climb down, perhaps he exaggerates. This is neither humiliating nor exhilarating. I do not think that we need the extra time to review whether we shall continue with our policy. I tried to tell the House that it would be necessary to come to a conclusion on many important and complex matters in an extremely short time scale. It might be better to take a little longer to ensure that we get the right answers to the questions.

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton (Fife, Central): Does this statement imply a U-turn? If not, why should it be made at 10 o'clock on a Thursday night?

Mr. Ridley: It does not imply a U-turn. That is why it would have been perfectly proper not to make a statement. However, the House wanted me to make one. I have done so.

Dr. Keith Hampson (Leeds, North-West): Does my right hon. Friend accept that for some of us there is genuine concern and not bogus indignation? That is partly because many of us have recently been defending the Government's privatisation policy. We have been defending the Government's policy on the royal ordnance factories as well.

Is my right hon. Friend aware that it caused some concern when he did not come to the House earlier to make a statement? The statement which he has made is less extensive than the written answer which was arranged. In that written answer he talks about extra powers being necessary to take part in privatisation. What are the necessary extra powers? It would have been much better for us all if a statement had been made honestly, frankly and in detail earlier today.

Mr. Ridley: I much admire my hon. Friend's efforts to convince people that the policy of privatising water is right. I hope that he will continue to defend that policy. There has been no change made to that policy and we have not abandoned it. I do not think that it is necessary for the Government to make a statement every time that they have not changed their policy. All that I am saying is that we are not able to see a proper way to bring a Bill forward for the next Session. I think that there was a general expectation that we would be able to do that. It is right in the interests of all concerned that I should make that abundantly clear. I think that that can be done just as well by means of a written answer as by making a statement.

Mr. Peter Snape (West Bromwich, East): May I tell the Secretary of State—I add my sincere congratulations on his statement — how much we miss his sure-footed political agility in transport matters? Does he agree, fresh from his triumphs in that Department, where he managed to lose three court cases and not privatise British Airways, that not to privatise British water is entirely consistent, and could be regarded as the glittering pinnacle of a distinguished career? Bearing in mind that at the time of the right hon. Gentleman's recent promotion the Prime Minister said that he had been promoted because he was a man who gets things done, should the House, at the very least, start questioning the Prime Minister's ability as well as the right hon. Gentleman's faculties?

Mr. Ridley: The hon. Gentleman is a welcome convert to the privatisation squad. I may not have achieved anything else other than to persuade him that it is desirable to privatise both British Airways and water. I greatly appreciate his support. I shall even have a word with his leader to see whether I can arrange for him to have preferment as I have had.

Mr. Spencer Batiste (Elmet): Does my right hon. Friend agree that the spectacular success of the Government's privatisation programme can be maintained only if each measure is considered at the right time and in the right way instead of trying to meet some pre-arranged arbitrary timetable? If as a result of his consultations he is satisfied that more work needs to be done before the important measure can proceed, he will be widely supported.

Mr. Ridley: I entirely agree with my hon. Friend. I am grateful to him for making the point that the policy of privatisation requires that we get each individual industry or company absolutely right before we offer it to the market and ask the House to approve its privatisation. I think that my hon. Friend will have noticed that in the queue for privatisation are gas, British Airways, British airports and Rolls-Royce. I should have thought that that was a sufficient programme to convince the House of our determination to proceed.

Mr. Allan Roberts (Bootle): In view of the fact that the Secretary of State claimed that one of the reasons why he wanted to privatise water authorities was to allow them to borrow in the open market—to raise funds to do things such as cleaning up the Mersey basin—will he release the publicly owned water authorities from the restrictions that are imposed on them by the Government? The restrictions prevent them from raising money to do necessary work.

Will the Secretary of State give an assurance that money will not be taken from the Mersey basin project in order to clean up beaches in the north-west area, such as Blackpool beach, which is terribly polluted, but that extra money will be made available either from the private sector or public expenditure? Does he accept that if the high priest of Thatcherite monetarism turns heels and runs in the face of opposition from all the trade unions in the water industry — the public opinion is that the Government are doing a U turn and that privatisation has not been postponed, it has been cancelled because a general election will intervene — it will be one of the industries that the next Labour Government will not have to take back into public ownership?

Mr. Ridley: We are doing awfully well tonight. We have another recruit in favour of water privatisation in the unlikely figure of the hon. Gentlemam, as well as the hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape). Do the Opposition want, or do they not, the Government to privatise the water industry? When we said that we intended to do so, they criticised us. When we said that, unfortunately, we had to postpone it, they criticised us for postponing. They really are all over the shop. The desire for opposition seems to have got the better of their judgment. I had better not reply at great length because I do not want the Opposition to miss their sleepers, which is the best thing that could happen to the House.

Blackpool beach may be polluted, but it is not polluted with radioactivity as the MEP, Mr. Huckfield, keeps saying. I think that it is disgraceful for him to make such accusations to try to frighten people away from the beaches of the north-west. Those beaches are the finest in the land. I encourage everyone to spend their holidays there.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels (Leicester, East): My right hon. Friend is a very dear friend. I must say that I am disappointed to hear of the delay, as someone who has campaigned for water privatisation and raised the matter in business questions today. Will my right hon. Friend assure the country that water privatisation will take place and that it will be a commitment in the Conservative manifesto? Will he assure the House also that, in the meantime, a full explanation will be given for the delay by his Department to Roy Watts and the Thames Water Authority, because Mr. Watts has been a great supporter of water privatisation?

Mr. Ridley: Yes, Sir. We shall proceed with privatisation. There is little doubt about that, because I believe that we shall be in a position to proceed with it after the next election. I understand that Mr. Watts was on television tonight showing his complete understanding of what the Government are doing and agreeing that it is right to ensure that the Bill is correct rather than introduce legislation that is not yet in proper shape.

Dr. John Marek (Wrexham): Will the Secretary of State be a little more specific and say whether, if the proposals are not enacted by the next general election, they will be part of the next Conservative manifesto? If he cannot answer that question with a simple yes or no, will he say whether he personally will fight to ensure that they do become part of that manifesto?

Mr. Ridley: The anwer is yes.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): The hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) talked about pathetic behaviour. Is not the only pathetic thing his attempt to make a mountain out of this molehill of a statement? The hon. Gentleman rushed into the Chamber at 6.30 today in a lather demanding a statement. He had to be dragged off his sleeper to come here tonight. All he found was that the Government, in a sensible and pragmatic way, have listened to the people's representations and intend to carry on with denationalisation as early as possible. Should we not be asking the hon. Member for Copeland: where is the beef?

Mr. Ridley: The hon. Member for Copeland would have been wiser if he had caught his sleeper and gone away tonight.

Mr. Martin Flannery (Sheffield, Hillsborough): Will the most arrogant Minister in the Government now talk reality to us and tell us what has dragged him kicking and screaming at 10 o"clock on a Thursday might to the most monumental climb down we have heard for years? Will the right hon. Gentleman finally admit that the Government — [Interruption.] The laughter of the Leader of the House, so feigned and obvious, shows that I am telling the truth. Will the Secretary of State now admit that the Government are in a terrible mess and do not know where they are going?

Mr. Ridley: I do not know where the hon. Gentleman comes on the arrogance table, but I do not think that he is at the bottom of that league. If the Government take a sane and sensible decision — first, to listen on the privatisation matters which worry people and, secondly, to give enough time to get the answers right — it is, as has been said, very worrying to the Opposition parties

Mr. Tony Marlow (Northampton, North): I totally share my right hon. Friend's, commitment to water privatisation I am interested, as is my right hon. Friend, to hear the commitment of that relatively moderate member of the Labour party, the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts), to renationalisation in the unlikely event of a Labour Government ever being returned. I wonder whether my right hon. Friend can find an appropriate adjective to describe the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), who said that he was scandalised about the sensible decision which my right hon. Friend took this evening, but would have gone on to say that he was scandalised if we had proceeded with water privatisation?

Mr. Ridley: We must look at this point. Labour Members want the water authorities to have the freedom to spend capital as though there was no limit. Of course, the only way in which that can be done is by privatising those authorities. It is clearly impossible in a planned public sector economy to have freedom to spend capital — the two are totally inconsistent. We are increasingly seeing from the Labour party a recognition of the importance of private capital, which of course means private ownership. I welcome that. I am sure that Labour Members will join me in supporting the Bill as they sit in opposition after the next election.

Mr. Dave Nellist (Coventry, South-East): If the privatisation of the water authorities is not now to take place during the life to this Parliament, will the Secretary of State produce figures on the costs of the appointment of J. Henry Schroder Wagg as bankers and Touche Ross as the accountancy firm? When those estimates have been produced, will he send the bill for this exercise so far to the place that should pay it—Conservative Central Office in Smith square?

Mr. Ridley: No. We have had excellent advice from those banks and advisers, and I am sure that more advice will be needed as we move towards privatisation. I cannot believe that the hon. Gentleman would want us to advance in this matter without taking the proper advice.

Mr. Gary Waller (Keighley): Is my right hon. Friend aware that many of those who espouse the principle of privatisation in general look for certain pre-conditions—for example, that the enterprises to be privatised will market their products in as competitive a way as possible and will require as little control and regulation as possible? They recognise that the situation in the water industry is different from that in many other industries. Before new proposals are brought forward, will careful consideration be given to those factors?

Mr. Ridley: I agree with my hon. Friend. Those are important considerations which require proper study. That is why it would be difficult for me to complete the Bill in time for early introduction next Session, and that is all I have said.

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East): Does not the postprandial performance on the Tory Benches and the inane grin on the face of the right honourable Tewkesbury cat prove that the Government have yet again had to retreat from a most embarrassing, ill-judged and disastrous policy?

Mr. Ridley: No, Sir.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): Will my right hon. Friend confirm that in this, as in all things, the Government will put the consumer and the people first? Has he noticed that in all the exchanges tonight no member of the Labour or Liberal parties has mentioned the consumer and the people of Britain? They do not care, and never have cared, about the consumers or the welfare of our people.

Mr. Ridley: Yes; and it can only be described as an uncaring party that opposes the Bill and then opposes its delay.

Mr. Ray Powell (Ogmore): Has the right hon. Gentleman consulted the Secretary of State for Wales—one of the most ardent supporters of privatisation—about abandoning the privatisation of the water industry? Perhaps the Government's reasons for abandoning the idea will be explained to the people of Wales. I welcome the right hon. Gentleman's assurance that the matter will appear in the next Conservative election manifesto, because that will represent a rare occasion on which the people will have been consulted on a major issue before action has been taken. On that occasion the electors of Wales will give the Conservatives a vote similar to that which the House gave the proposed Sunday trading legislation.

It is high time that the right hon. Gentleman came clean and admitted that he has been persuaded to drop the idea of privatising the water industry by the arguments of the 10,000 workers in the industry and the statements of local authorities throughout the country.

I assure the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) that the consumer's interest was well represented at a recent conference in London, when those concerned with the water industry made it clear that in no way would they support the privatisation of the industry.

Mr. Ridley: I have the full support of the Secretary of State for Wales in what I have said tonight. He feels, as I do, that proposals that we present to the House must be correct. The hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) and his hon. Friend the Member for Copeland do not seem to be speaking with one voice tonight.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): If the right hon. Gentleman claims that his statement does not represent a climb down or a U-turn, will he accept that most people will see it as a Government cock-up? He owes it to the public to explain whether he inherited the decision that he has made or whether it is all his own work.

Mr. Ridley: The hon. Gentleman may not have heard my statement. I said that we were not able to proceed in the next Session of Parliament but would certainly proceed with the legislation, if necessary, immediately after the election. I do not see how that changes the policy in any respect.

Mr. Robert N. Wareing (Liverpool, West Derby): Is not the accident-prone right hon. Gentleman admitting that, in view of the fact that there was a commitment in the Queen's Speech only a few months back that there would be privatisation of water, the Government did not do their homework and are now having to cancel this not just for one Session but for two? Is it not also the case that he has had umpteen representations from people with expertise, including Tory councillors, saying that privatisation was ideology, not reality? Should not the message of the House this evening to the consumers and workers in the water industry be "rejoice" because the industry is now safe and there is no chance of privatisation because the Government will not win the next general election?

Mr. Ridley: I am afraid that it is the hon. Gentleman who has done his homework wrong. He should look at last autumn's Queen's Speech: he will find no mention of water privatisation.

Mr. John Home Robertson (East Lothian): Thankfully, the Government never threatened to inflict this lunatic idea on Scotland, but, since the right hon. Gentleman is apparently writing the next Conservative party election manifesto here this evening, can he give us an undertaking that the idea will be excluded from the manifesto as it affects Scotland?

Mr. Ridley: No, Sir.

Mr. Alfred Dubs (Battersea): Whatever the Secretary of State thinks the position is tonight, by tomorrow morning his statement will be seen by the majority of his supporters as a humiliating climb down and, at the very least, what he has said tonight is an indication of utter incompetence by the Secretary of State and his Department? Opposition Members who are utterly opposed to water privatisation are naturally pleased that there will be a delay, but will the Secretary of State have a bet with me that it will never happen?

Mr. Ridley: I think that the headlines tomorrow morning will be: "Labour party in turmoil; split down the middle"; "Totally incompetent Front-Bench position, backed up by idiotic statements from the Back Benches"; and, finally, to the House's relief, "All departed for sleepers".

Finance Bill

Mr. Terry Davis (Birmingham, Hodge Hill): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I remind you that during business questions today I asked the Leader of the House to explain why the Government were insisting on taking the Report stage of the Finance Bill next week in spite of the fact that the Government have not tabled all their new clauses and amendments to the Bill? I also remind you that the Leader of the House was kind enough to express some concern. May I, through you, Mr. Speaker draw the attention of the Leader of the House to the fact that tonight the Government have tabled another 68 amendments to be taken on the Report stage, which begins next Tuesday?

Mr. Speaker: That is not a matter for me. The hon. Gentleman prefaced his remarks by saying that he had raised the matter at business question time.

Bedford Commercial Vehicles (Redundancies)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Lennox-Boyd.]

10.47 pm

Mr. David Madel (Bedfordshire, South-West): I am grateful to have this opportunity of initiating a short debate on the consequences of the recently announced redundancies at Bedford Commerial Vehicles .I am especially pleased that my hon. Friend the Minister of State, the hon. Member for City of Chester (Mr. Morrison), will reply to the debate. I am also grateful to my next door neighbours, my hon. Friends the Members for Luton, South (Mr. Bright) and for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) for being present.

This is a depressing time for Dunstable and Luton with General Motors' plan to reduce the work force by 1,700 employees. My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South and myself were most grateful to my hon. Friend the Minister for seeing us on the day the announcement was made.

In my view, if the merger talks with British Leyland had been successful — successful to me would have meant that Dunstable had a secure and proper place for the continuation of production of commercial vehicles as well as Luton — we would not now be having this debate on the redundancies. I do not want to spend too much time answering the critics of General Motors and the merger talks, some of whom, alas, are in the parliamentary Conservative party, but running through their criticisms is a thread of considerable ignorance about the activities of General Motors in the United Kingdom. The sort of things that critics of General Motors forget are as follows. They forget the contribution by General Motors to this country's war effort between 1939 and 1945, in the enormous production of vehicles to help the British Army.. They especially forget 1939 to 1941, when America was neutral, and we were virtually on our own, yet General Motors continued with its production in this country, thereby completely contradicting the argument that somehow or other General Motors cannot do anything unless the American Government tell it to.

Secondly, critics forget 1956. We shall learn a lot about that this year, 30 years from Suez, when there was a tremendous row between the American and British Governments, but that in no way disturbed General Motors' production and investment in this country. Thirdly, people forget Vauxhall's move to Ellesmere Port in the early 1960s, to a black spot unemployment area, with considerable investment, providing brand-new jobs. My goodness, were not certain of my right hon. Friends pleased to be able to say at the 1964 general election how delighted they were that Vauxhall had moved to Ellesmere Port. Critics also forget the heavy losses that Vauxhall and Bedford Commercial Vehicles have, alas, sustained over the years, yet General Motors continues to stay with us, and very welcome it is, too.

The present situation is grave. It is summed up by part of the information bulletin given to employees last week at Bedford Commercial Vehicles, at both Dunstable and Luton. The announcement says that General Motors "have now announced the 1985 net losses of £73 million, up from £62·4 million in 1984 and £52·5 million in 1983. Bedford's losses continue to run at around £1¼ million per week and further urgent action must therefore be taken to reverse this trend."

In spite of that, I believe that General Motors is here to stay. I want it to stay in Dunstable and Luton in a big way, and so do the people of Bedfordshire, who have confidence in the company as employers.

The present situation poses two challenges for management and unions. For management, maximum information on investment and product development plans, especially how Bedford Commercial Vehicles will now fit into General Motors' worldwide operations, is absolutely vital for the employees at Dunstable and Luton. For the unions, the challenge is that there must be continuing full co-operation with management to work to turn the company round to profitability. I have already mentioned the losses which have been drawn attention to in the information bulletin. They are serious, and they must be reversed. In my view, they can be reversed with the full co-operation and commitment of management and unions.

In that grave situation, the challenge to us three Members of Parliament representing Bedfordshire is to make some suggestions as to what we think can now be done to help Bedfordshire. First, we should be using Dunstable college as a base for further training and training opportunities. Local employers express great confidence in what Dunstable college does on training. I want to see additional places on the courses, and new courses set up to help. As I said, local employers have confidence in the college. I believe that we can build on that and help people who are being made redundant.

Secondly, there is Bedfordshire's structure plan. The emphasis now must be on industry. Where we in Bedfordshire can successfully and sensibly develop land, the emphasis must be on developing that land for industry that will provide new jobs. That is not just me and my hon. Friends who are saying that because the councils are also saying it. Just the other day I had a communication from mid-Bedfordshire district council in part of my constituency. It wants to see sensible industrial development to underpin the community and to provide new jobs.

Thirdly, south Bedfordshire district council has raised a considerable sum of money from its policy of selling council houses. I would like to see a large portion of that money released so that the council can get on with the vitally needed modernisation programme on its council houses. That would provide new jobs and give people confidence and opportunities.

We have just heard quite a to-do on water. The Anglian water authority must look carefully at the amount it spends in Bedfordshire to make sure that it is not denying us the infrastructure needed for industrial development. We do not want to lose jobs and curtail the expansion of industry because the Anglian water authority cannot provide the necessary supplies and drainage that will allow new industry to come in and develop and provide new jobs.

Each time we have more scheduled airline services at Luton airport it provides welcome new jobs. Luton airport is a major employer in Bedfordshire and things must be done by the Civil Aviation Authority and by others to provide more scheduled services. As I say, the more scheduled services there are in the airport, the more jobs are created, and that helps our area.

[Mr. David Madel]

I welcomed yesterday's statement on TVEI by my right hon. and learned Friend the Paymaster General. He said:

"We also need to improve the vocational qualifications system to encourage more people, young and old, to improve their skills when they have left school."—[Official Report, 2 July 1986; Vol. 100, c. 1004.]

That obviously means that the Government are moving to provide more opportunities for Bedfordshire. The "Action for Jobs" publication by the Manpower Services Commission is sub-titled, "Opening more doors". I appeal to the Government to make sure that all doors in Bedfordshire are open to provide those opportunities.

In my short speech, I have called for maximum co-operation in the county because I want to see people working together to get us out of this difficulty. My final plea to the Government is please to do all they can by their economic and purchasing policies to encourage and help General Motors. Through the Government helping and working with General Motors we can start to turn around this difficult unemployment situation.

General Motors is a most welcome employer in Bedfordshire. We want to find more opportunities for new employers and industries to come in and help us out of our difficulties, but above all we want to do things that will make General Motors say that the United Kingdom, and especially Bedfordshire, is a good bet for investment and that it intends to increase its investment in the county of Bedfordshire.

Mr. Graham Bright (Luton, South): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel) for the opportunity to take part in this debate. The bulk of the redundancies announced by General Motors, some 1,000, were in my constituency. We face the unpalatable prospect of losing 660 jobs in the van plant and 340 from the press shop.

There is chronic overcapacity in vehicle production in Europe and that has been known by the trade and by the House for many years. There are too many vehicle producers competing in a depressed market and Bedford Commercial Vehicles has suffered badly. Until 1979 it was profitable, but in 1980 it incurred a record loss of £83 million. Since then, it has lost a further £300 million and losses are currently running at £1·5 million a week.

Bedford Commercial Vehicles and its parent company General Motors recognise the scale of the problem and have acted to meet it. They have invested over £70 million since 1983 restructuring the whole of the van operation in Luton and reorganising heavy truck production at Dunstable. Bedford's heavy vehicle production capacity has been reduced and two imaginative new light vans, the Midi and the Rascal, have been introduced, both at the Luton plant. The company has been actively seeking partners and I thought that it was an extremely imaginative idea that it should join forces with Leyland to produce a base in the United Kingdom commercial vehicle market of some 26 per cent. The company has also been talking with MAN and Renault in an attempt to get together for future operations. None of those ideas have come to fruition.

I still hope that we get General Motors and Leyland back together. I believe that that is the only solution which will help United Kingdom limited. I fully support GM's efforts in seeking deals because it must get together with someone else. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West has said, GM has played a major part in the British motor industry and it has sustained the economies of Luton and many other towns in both good and bad times. Many other companies would have been driven out of the United Kingdom as a result of the losses it has endured both at Vauxhall Motors in the 1970s and now at Bedford since 1980. However—and I stress this—GM has kept faith in Britain. It has put its industrial relations, product range, and marketing for Vauxall Motors right. I am sure that the same can be done for Bedford Commercial Vehicles.

The first steps—tighter control of manpower, better stock control and greater production efficiency—are under way. These will restore the company to profitability. It would be a grave mistake to underestimate GM's determination to rationalise its heavy truck and van operation. It is perfectly capable of reviving them and taking first place in the European truck and van market, just as we have seen it revive its motor car section in Britain.

Unfortunately, the re-shaping of the GM strategy is likely to be at the expense of others. The deal which the Government sought a few months ago—to transfer Leyland Trucks and Range Rover to GM—would have ensured that Britain was the centre piece of the company's European production. The marketing and the production resources of the companies would have meant an overall increase in jobs, not to mention the prospect of new engines being designed and produced in Britain.

Because of short-sighted and ill-judged criticism, that opportunity has been lost. I have no doubt that, sooner or later, Bedford will find another partner, if it is not BL. If the partner is French, the design, manufacturing and the new range of trucks that GM requires—let us remember that it abandoned its world truck concept only last week—could shift to the continent.

I believe that Luton and Dunstable will continue to build vans and trucks, but I wish to issue a warning about the after-effects of the failed GM deal. It may well happen that the component manufacturers situated in the Birmingham and midlands area will lose their trade if a source of manufacture was started on the continent and the centre of gravity moved to France. Those Members and the people who scuppered the GM/Leyland deal could suffer far more than we have in Luton.

Leyland is too small to survive on its own indefinitely and it will be left out in the cold. In Luton we have paid the first instalment of the price to be met for rejecting the Bedford/Leyland merger . . . Other companies will have to face the realities of not supporting that deal. I regret the fact that that has happened and only hope that there is a chance of getting GM to base itself in Britain with possibly, Leyland, as its partner.

Mr. John Carlisle (Luton, North): I am grateful for the opportunity to make a short contribution in support of my hon. Friends the Members for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel) and for Luton, South (Mr. Bright) in this important debate.

The absence of any representative of the Labour, Liberal or SDP parties is regrettable. Indeed, we would not be gathered here, on this sad day for the Luton and Dubstable district, but for the posturings of the right hon.

and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith). He was one of the prime movers in scuppering the deal that was laid out between General Motors and British Leyland. For the right hon. and learned Gentleman not to have the courtesy to the House, to the people of Luton and Dunstable and to the unions from which he so regularly sought advice at the time of the intended merger, to be present tonight is disgraceful. He should be here to make a speech or, at least, to hear about the anger and frustration of our constituents at General Motors having to lay off 1,700 men because of the decision made. There is no doubt in my mind, nor, I think, in the minds of my constituents, that that is a direct result of the fact that the merger did not take place.

I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will share our disappointment that the Government did not see fit to go ahead with the original recommendation. Although I understand the pressures that they were under from Opposition parties and from Conservative Members, particularly my right hon. Friends the Members for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) and for Henley (Mr. Heseltine), it is to be regretted that the jobs were lost because the merger did not take place.

At the time we were extremely worried about the antics of the right hon. and learned Gentleman. Having had the nerve to turn up at Ellesmere Port in a Japanese car to talk to the unions at General Motors, he had the utter cheek to come to Luton to stir up the unions to such an extent that many of their members who came to lobby in the House turned up with pro-BL and pro-Land Rover stickers. In effect, it was like turkeys voting for an early Christmas. Now that Christmas has arrived in Luton and Dunstable, the results of his efforts and those of the Opposition parties is that we could well see the end of the United Kingdom truck industry as we know it.

My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South gave a warning. I repeat the warning that I gave in an Adjournment debate some weeks ago that there is now a real chance that that industry will disappear. The Opposition parties do not care about the needs of their members which is why we are present to help our constituents and to help rectify the matter. It is good to see my hon. Friend the Minister in stout defence of what we have sought to do in the Luton and Dunstable area, and I thank him for the assistance that he gave us at that difficult time.

There is still a chance for our truck industry if the Government would go back to GM and say, "All is not over". If GM returns to the table with the sort of genuine proposals which it made at the time, something could be salvaged from this sad affair. It seems that those 1,700 jobs may have gone for ever, but we have absolute confidence in GM making an extremely generous settlement to those unfortunate people who have lost their jobs because that is it's history as an employer in our area.

We face an overcapacity market and extreme difficulties, and GM will need every assistance. That is why I fully endorse the comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West when he asks the Minister, if it is within his power, to provide every opportunity for more training, investment and assistance from the Government to our area to help those who have lost their jobs and, more important, those who now will not have the privilege of working for GM.

We are not downhearted, but, obviously, extremely disappointed. We look forward to the future with great optimism, but the Minister's help and guidance will be imperative if we are to survive these traumatic times and put GM back where it belongs, at the top of the motor and truck industry.

11.4 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry (Mr. Peter Morrison): I am glad that my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel) has had the opportunity to raise this difficult, awkward matter on the Adjournment this evening. Nobody could do more for his constituents than my hon. Friend and my hon. Friends the Members for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) and for Luton, South (Mr. Bright). I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his kind remarks about my meeting with him. He has been very helpful to me in the nine months for which I have held my present position in terms of keeping me fully abreast of the position in his constituency and in Bedfordshire as a whole. For that I am grateful. Indeed, I hope and that he and his constituents, and the constituents of my hon. Friends the Members for Luton, North and for Luton, South will be aware that their calls and their concerns are constantly brought to the attention of the Department of Trade and Industry.

My hon. Friends have reminded the House of the long and important history of General Motors in the United Kingdom. My hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West asked me to do all that I can to encourage General Motors. Of course I will do everything that I can to encourage General Motors — how could one do otherwise. Vauxhall, for example, as my hon. Friends the Members for Luton, South and Luton, North will know, was established in 1903, and it was merged in 1925, so that its history in the country is very long and significant.

I believe that I am right in saying that some 3·5 million commercial vehicles have been built in Britain for worldwide markets. But, as my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West reminds us, it remains a major supplier of trucks to the British Army. That supply has gone on through what have been awkward and difficult periods in the course of the previous decade.

We forget at our peril that over 80 per cent. of the content in Bedford Vehicles is United Kingdom sourced. Vauxhall's United Kingdom content is increasing to 60 per cent. this year, while 64 per cent. of the cars and vans sold here in 1986 will be built in the United Kingdom. Not only does General Motors' investment in the United Kingdom continue; it has gone on for a long time, and General Motors currently employs directly some 27,000 people.

Like my hon. Friends, I very much regret that the redundancies have proved necessary. But, as my hon. Friends have reminded the House, I regret to say that in the European truck industry there is some 40 per cent. overcapacity so that rationalisation is necessary.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South that, listening to what happened in debates and at Question Time in the earlier part of this year, one would not have noticed that the Opposition realised that rationalisation of the truck industry was at all necessary. I regret to say that they are burying their heads in the sand if that is what they continue to believe. Rationalisation — and I am sorry that no Opposition Members are present this evening in what is an important debate — however it comes is bound to come, and it is bound to be better if it is on a planned and rational basis rather than as a result of putting off what will be awkward and difficult decisions. Redundancies are bound to be unpleasant, but in terms of getting rationalisation they are part of a total package. That package includes lower inventory costs, the raising of efficiency and better marketing.

The final solution—as all my hon. Friends who know the Bedford and Vauxhall situation will agree—is that management and work force act and co-operate. I have no doubt that that can and will be the case, despite the fact that the industry has a difficult and complicated decision to take. I understand that a considerable number of applications have been made for voluntary redundancies. Given that quite a considerable number of the workers are aged over 55, I hope that the company will be able to meet its job reduction objectives without having to have recourse to involuntary redundancies.

My hon. Friends have mentioned at some length the general employment position in south Bedfordshire. I agree about the schemes that have been installed there, not least because in a previous incarnation I had something to do with the youth training scheme, the community programme, with the original launch of the TVEI, and with the adult training programme.

Like me, my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West has considerable confidence in Bedfordshire's future. Given what the public sector is doing through the Manpower Services Commission to help with training and education, and the entrepreneurial initiative that has always been evident in Bedfordshire, I am sure that the county will continue to grow. My hon. Friends have raised a matter that is very important to them. This debate has not come as a surprise to me, because we have already had endless discussions, letters and telephone calls, as all my hon. Friends take their constituents' position very seriously, and wish to keep me fully informed of what may be best for the future. I can assure them that I shall do everything that I can, having carefully considered the advice that they give me.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twelve minutes past Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITIONS

Plessey Company plc

9.35 am

Mr. Stephen Ross (Isle of Wight): I have the honour, Mr. Speaker, to present a petition from the employees of Plessey plc at Cowes in my constituency, where about 1,350 people work, and it is signed by nearly every one of them. It says:

That the undersigned object to the proposed takeover of the Plessey Company plc by the General Electric Company plc because such a takeover would result in very heavy job losses, serious harm to the research and development in which the Plessey Company plc has up to now been involved and the creation of a monopoly which would limit the choice facing major customers in the electronics and defence markets.

I should add that such a merger would be catastrophic for the economy and my constituency.

Nuclear Waste Disposal

9.36 pm

Mr. Austin Mitchell (Great Grimsby): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition from the people of Humberside, which showeth

That United Kingdom Nirex Limited are looking for sites for the storage or disposal of radioactive waste. It is known that sites in Humberside are among those being considered. It is also known that the Secretary of State for the Environment is proposing to make a Special Development Order granting planning permission for related exploration purposes. The undersigned are totally and absolutely opposed to these proposals because they believe that they could threaten public safety, that they would seriously damage the area's economic and social development prospects and that radioactive waste should be stored or disposed of at the site of origin.

Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your honourable House will under no circumstances approve a Special Development Order allowing preliminary site exploration or associated works in connection with the storage or disposal of radioactive waste in Humberside and will take all such action within the powers of the House to prevent a national radioactive waste storage or disposal facility being established in Humberside.

The petition is signed by 1,550 signatories and it completes a series of petitions from Humberside which have been signed by over 160,000 people a tremendous voice from Humberside — asking the Minister not to agree to the special development order. Unfortunately, the Minister has betrayed those aspirations. I am afraid that we shall now pay the price in public opinion which, as a result, turns against the nuclear programme and is driven to more extreme action than signing petitions.

Social Security Bill

9.39 am

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): I beg to ask leave to present a petition signed by Mr. John R. Ellis of Park Road, Bradford 5, and 1,745 of my constituents. They are petitioning against the Government's Social Security Bill, arguing that it will reduce the incomes of poor families, including pensioners and the unemployed.

Figures were recently produced which showed that 19,000 households in my constituency, including those of pensioners, the sick and disabled, single parents, the unemployed and low-income families will lose income, and that 2,700 households, including, in particular, pensioners will lose more than £5 a week if the Social Security Bill becomes law.

The petitioners, who include many pensioners, pray that your honourable House will oppose the Social Security Bill.

Indeed, they are demanding that the Bill be scrapped.

No. 27, in line 22, leave our subsection (2).

Mr. Mates: A few months ago the Bill completed all its stages, without amendment, in this House and had the warm support of all those hon. Members present. It has returned from the other place with what some may think is a formidable list of amendments. They are all Government amendments.

Amendment No. 1 was itself amended in the other place. Lord Grimond proposed the removal of a subsection which restricted the Secretary of State's powers relating to the designation of controlled sites. He felt that Secretaries of State could be trusted not to go completely round the bend, and it appears that the Government had some sympathy with that view. It was agreed that, in the interests of brevity, that subsection could be omitted.

I welcome these amendments, and I shall leave it to my hon. Friend the Minister to say a brief word about the Government amendments. Their Lordships accepted the amendments, after consultation, without reservation, and I hope that the House will do the same.

I am grateful to all those in both Houses who have taken an interest in this small but necessary Bill. I should particularly like to thank my noble Friend Lord Sandford for bringing forward this measure in the other place. On Report he paid tribute to the Government for the concern that they had shown for the special problems of those with a legitimate interest in the remains of military aircraft and vessels. I should like to do the same. I am delighted that these problems have been recognised and satisfactorily answered. I can, therefore, warmly commend their Lordships' amendments to the House.

Mr. Ian Mikardo (Bow and Poplar): I begin by congratulating the hon. Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) and Lord Sandford on the progress that they have made and on bringing the Bill to the House in a condition which they believe to be a considerable improvement as a result of the amendments before us.

The range and complexity of their Lordships' amendments are an indication of what a difficult area of law it is. It is vital that there should be clarity, because there may be some quite powerful commercial vested interests in military remains. As we know, there is much souvenir and treasure hunting among the remains of vessels, and the same might apply to aircraft. No doubt that was one of the factors that the Government had in mind in seeking to make the legislation as precise as possible.

In general, the House has a duty to ensure that legislation is not ambigious. I say that with a smile, because, after long experience, I know just how difficult it is to achieve that. If someone has to go to court to pursue what he believes to be his rights, and has to find out whether they really are his rights, it must represent a failure on our part. We have then failed to make the legislation so clear that no learned judge needs to put his mind to interpreting it.

As I am anxious that we should get the legislation right, as the Bill is important and, as the hon. Member for Hampshire, East has said, valuable — we will all be happy when, in a short time from now, it completes its progress through Parliament — I want to ask either the Minister or the hon. Gentleman some questions about the amendments.

Lords amendment No. 1 seeks to omit the word "vessel" from subsection (1). It has the effect of confining the application of that subsection to an aircraft. What puzzles me is that subsection (2)(b) of the amendment applies to "an aircraft to which this Act applies or a vessel which has so sunk or been stranded".

I am sure that there is a good explanation. Although I am not the most astute reader of legal language, I am not the dimmest either. If the legislation is not clear to me, it will not be clear to many of our citizens, and so may cause a lot of trouble.

Is there not an inconsistency between subsections (1) and (2)? Subsection (2) gives powers to the Secretary of State to make an order within the area covered by that subsection, but subsection (1) says that the area covered involves only aircraft, not vessels. Thus, subsection (2) says that the Secretary of State can make an order about a vessel which is now, as a result of subsection (1), outside the ambit of this part of the Bill.

I am sorry if what I am saying sounds complicated and jargonish, but the whole Bill is like that. Moreover, why is subsection (4)(a) confined to a "crash, sinking or stranding" that occurred less than 200 years ago? That seems to be an arbitrary cut-off point and I wonder why it was chosen. There were crashes, sinkings and strandings more than 200 years ago. For example, if the Bill had been enacted a couple of years ago, the Mary Rose might not have been protected. What would the justification have been? There may be other Mary Roses. Bits of Spanish galleons that sailed in the armada are still littered round St. George's channel and round the coast of south-west Wales. Does that mean that they are not protected? If so, why?

I have read amendment No. 2 four times side by side with the original text. I cannot for the life of me see what change has been made or what the purport of it is. I cannot understand its effect. It would be helpful to the House and to the people who will be affected by the legislation if the Under-Secretary of State would tell us what has been changed.

Under clause 2(3), in certain circumstances

[Mr. Ian Mikardo]

"An excavation or diving or salvage operation is prohibited by this subsection—

(a) if it is carried out"— on

"any remains of an aircraft or vessel which are comprised in a place"

which is wholly or partly a controlled site. I have, to some extent, translated the text. Amendment No. 8, in page 3, line 42, is to leave out "is, or". Under the original text, the provision applies to remains in an area that is wholly or partly controlled, but, under the amendment, it applies only to remains in an area that is partly controlled. That puzzles me no end. If the site is controlled, what does it matter whether it is wholly or partly controlled? Surely we want the provision to apply equally in both cases.

In respect of amendment No. 11 I shall repeat the point that I put on amendment No. 2. I do not believe that the proposed wording as a different import from the original wording. It is only a little longer and more involved. The House should be given an explanation.

Finally—we do not want to spend more time than is necessary on this—I shall refer to amendment No. 26. Proposed subsection 9(1B) lays down the criteria against which it is decided whether "an aircraft or vessel shall be regarded as having been in military service" at a particular time. That definition is necessary because many of the Bill's provisions hinge on whether an aircraft or vessel was in military service at a particular time. This is puzzling. Under proposed paragraph (a) an aircraft or vessel is defined as being in military service if it is in service with "the armed forces of the United Kingdom or any other country".

That is simple and obvious. Under proposed paragraph (b) an aircraft that is not in service with any of the armed services but is in transit on the way to being put into service with the armed forces of this or any other country shall be deemed to be in military service. That, too, seems to be sensible. Why does that provision not apply equally to a vessel? It applies only to an aircraft. The first three lines of the proposed new subsection (1A) refer to "an aircraft or vessel". Why, then, does it not cover proposed paragraph (b)? For example, if an aircraft which had been on its way to service in the Falklands campaign had, unhappily, crashed, its remains would be covered by the Bill. If a ship on its way to service in the Falklands had, unhappily, sunk, its remains would not be covered by the Bill. What is the difference in principle? If the principle that an instrument of war in tranist to a place where it will be used in military operations is deemed to be in military service, why does it not apply to all instruments of war —ships as well as aircraft?

I understand from the hon. Member for Hampshire, East that the Government are responsible for the amendments. I shall not, therefore, burden the hon. Gentleman with the task of replying to my detailed questions. I shall be grateful to the Under-Secretary of State if he will give some guidance in these matters. Indeed, it is necessary that he should do so.

Mr. Denzil Davies (Llanelli): My hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo) has, as usual, with his sharp eye for these matters picked out a number of difficult parts in the Bill. I mean no disrespect to the hon. Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates), but the Bill seems to be a Government Bill.

Mr. Mates indicated dissent.

Mr. Davies: I would not call it a hybrid Bill because it is not "hybrid" in the parliamentary sense. The Bill is somewhere between a private Member's Bill and a Government Bill. However, that is not an important point.

In the main, we welcome the Bill. We understand the sensitivity of these matters and the difficulty involved, as my hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar has shown, in drafting once one gets down to trying to provide in legislative form the type of protection that we all wish to see.

I think it is fair to say that the Bill went through its earlier stages quickly. I am not blaming anyone for that. I do not know why it happened. There was concern in some circles about the Bill in its original form. There is always a conflict between the desire and necessity to protect military remains of this kind and the commercial interests involved in legitimate work. I would not pretend to be an expert on the Bill, but it seems to me, having looked at it quickly late last night, that to some extent these conflicts have been resolved.

My concern in respect of the amendments is with jurisdiction. This perhaps goes to the heart of the Bill. This concern was expressed by various organisations, although I do not argue their case. Amendment No. 1 which is an amendment to clause 1, states in subsection (2)(b) that the Secretary of State may make a statutory instrument designating an area as a controlled site

"(whether in the United Kingdom, in United Kingdom waters or in international waters)"

Reading that without looking at the background I thought what a powerful Secretary of State we have who can designate anything he likes in international waters. That seems to be a contradiction because, by definition, we have no power to designate anything in international waters. However, no doubt Acts of Parliament can do almost anything. As Professor Jennings has told us they can deem a man to be a woman or a woman to be a man. Therefore, I suppose it is possible to deem that international waters shall be covered by the Bill.

The amendment is in respect of clause 1, but, as I understand it, we then have to refer to clause 3 because if an area in international waters is designated as a controlled site, and presumably we are talking about an aircraft or a ship, the Secretary of State has to do something in respect of that. Presumably the intention of the Bill is to protect that piece of hardware in international waters whether it is a ship or an aircraft. However, the writ of the Secretary of State does not run to international waters, it runs only to Britain. And that is where we have a problem. Clause 3 "Extraterritorial jurisdiction" seems to be the heart of the Bill. Clause 3 talks about offences where there is a contravention of subsection (2). It says

"a person shall be guilty of an offence".

That is a serious matter. Parliament is not just legislating about protection, but laying down criminal offences. No doubt people could go to prison or be heavily fined. I have not seen what the actual penalties might be, but that does not matter. The penalties apply

"if the acts or omissions which constitute the offence are committed in the United Kingdom, in United Kingdom waters".

The writ of the Secretary of State does run to the United Kingdom and to United Kingdom waters. It goes on:

"or on board a British-controlled ship".

Therefore, the wide intention of the first part is confined because the Secretary of State does not have any powers in international waters.

Mr. Mikardo: Can my hon. Friend tell us—I am not too clear about this—whether the provision of the Bill would be in conflict with the law of the sea treaty?

Mr. Davies: My hon. Friend asks an interesting and difficult question. Of course, we know that there has been a treaty, but I do not think that the Government ratified that treaty. I think that, rather shamefully, the United Kingdom Government followed the United States and refused to ratify the new law of the sea treaty, which took about 10 years of intense work to negotiate. Whether this is in conflict with the general body of the law of the sea I would not know. I suppose, again, we can do whatever we want to do in an Act of Parliament.

The jurisdiction for the offence is confined under clause 3(1)(a) to acts committed in United Kingdom waters. However, that is not the point I am making. We now have to look at international waters. We are talking about whether the offences are committed on board a "British-controlled ship", which is presumably defined somewhere, in international waters. Therefore, any British-controlled ship in international waters which transgresses or contravenes the provisions of the Bill is subject to a fine.

Clause 3(1)(b) states:

"in a case where those acts or omissions are committed in international waters but not on board a British-controlled ship".

The offence is then confined even more because the person who commits it has to be "a British citizen, a British Dependent Territories citizen or a British Overseas citizen".

The law of nationality was never my strong point and I would not wish to try to go down that road. These may be precedents for establishing offences that British dependent territories citizens or British overseas citizens can be convicted for and a law passed in the House. There are new citizenship rights, if they can be called rights. It seems to me that they are derogations of rights.

Mr. Mates: They are five years old.

Mr. Davies: Yes, they are five years old, but I merely, ask whether there is a precedent for making those people guilty when they are not here. Perhaps our legislation does cover people who are British overseas citizens.

Mr. Mikardo: Is there not also another point? Would it not be possible for a British citizen to contravene the provisions of the Bill by employing a Frenchman or American to do what it would be illegal for him to do himself?

Mr. Davies: That is a good point. The Bill says only if the offence is committed "on board a British-controlled ship".

The person committing the offence may be too clever to do it from a British-controlled ship so it may be on a French-controlled ship. It also says that the act must be committed by a "British citizen". Maybe the British citizen could be said to be an acccessory before the fact. I do not know whether one can be an acessory to an offence which is not an offence, if that is not a roundabout way of saying it. I shall come back to that point later.

That is taken a little further by amendment No. 2. My hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar referred to that. I find it slightly difficult. Amendment No. 2 states:

"but no place in international waters shall be a protected place by virtue of its comprising remains of an aircraft or vessel which has crashed, sunk or been stranded while in service with, or while being used for the purposes of, any of the armed forces of a country or territory outside the United Kingdom."

Obviously, we are not protecting other countries' ships or aircraft.

What protection is there? It seems that British companies—I use the phrase generally because there are closer definitions—will be confined or prevented from carrying out these acts on British aircraft or ships or aircraft or ships that have been in the military service of the United Kingdom in international waters. I am not saying that that is wrong because we agree with the Bill. However, it seems that foreign companies are not so confined. I wonder whether that was the intention of the Bill. It is probably the effect of the Bill because I do not know how that can be stopped. My hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar mentioned the law of the sea treaty. He is absolutely right. The only way in which these things can be dealt with adequately is by international convention or treaty, through the numerous law of the sea agreements that have come down over the years. It is not the case of arguing for commercial interests. It seems strange, however, that British companies will be prevented, apparently, from making money out of these remains while other companies—French, American or Japanese, for example—can go ahead and disturb the remains. Is that the intention of the Bill? Are the Government concerned about that? Are the Government trying to do something in collaboration with other countries so that the Bill does not remain British in its scope, limited, and ineffective to some extent in its jurisdiction? What are the Government's views on these matters?

It seems that the central problem has not been resolved. We have been told that certain assurance have been given. I have read the report of Lord Sandford's speech in another place and he seemed confident that assurancess were coming from left, right and centre. It seems that people did not get as far as reading Lord Trethgarne's reply in full. The assurances which have been given seem not to cover the possible activities of non-British companies and perhaps they cannot. I shall not continue to advance the argument as it is fairly straightforward and clear. I shall be grateful if the Minister addresses himself to it.

Mr. Alfred Dubs (Battersea): I welcome the Bill, but I wish to make a few brief observations and to ask some questions. One of my most poignant childhood memories is when, during the war, an RAF Lancaster crashed on a hillside near to where I was. I remember the agony and concern over the aircrew who were unfortunately killed and who had to be removed from the wrecked aircraft. I remember the Lancaster being guarded by troops.

I fear that there is a flaw in the nationality provisions as set out in the Bill. There is an omission which I accept did not apply when the Bill started its passage through Parliament. However, since the recent Order in Council on Hong Kong, one might have expected the point to be covered. I refer to the concept of British nationals overseas, who are not included, as I understand it, in clause 3. As recently as yesterday evening the Outer Space

[Mr. Alfred Dubs]

Bill was before the House, a measure which contains similar provisions covering citizenship and nationality. There is a reference in the Outer Space Bill to British nationals overseas. I refer to clause 2(2)(a).

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. Perhaps I am not following the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs) with sufficient care, but I would be grateful if he would tell me to which of the Lord's amendments he is referring.

Mr. Dubs: I fear that you have caught me out, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in trespassing on your tolerance. There is no Lord's amendment to the issue that I am raising. I have taken it up because my right hon. Friend the Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) mentioned it. The omission of British nationals overseas is a minor matter but a real one.

I move on swiftly, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to the amendments. I shall refer particularly to Lords amendment No. 1, and develop briefly the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo) on time limits. As I understand it, the concept of the 200-year period applied, although in a different form, in the original version of the Bill as it appeared in another place. The reference to 4 August, 1914 has been added and it is that which causes me to be puzzled. I am puzzled also about the 200-year period. We are all aware of the tragic war that began on 4 August 1914, but it is not clear to me why that date, and that date alone, should enable some of the Bill's provisions to be brought into being. I have studied the amendments and I cannot understand the thinking behind that date and the 200-year period. For example clause 1(3)(a) states:

"unless it appears to the him" — that is the Secretary of State — "that the vessel sank or was stranded on or after 4th August 1914".

The House will be aware that there are vessels such as the Mary Rose, and there may be many in that category. It is difficult to understand why the date 4 August 1914 has been selected. It seems that no such time limit should have been necessary, given the spirit of the Bill, and that respect for the remains of people should apply to dates before 1914.

10.15 am

I am concerned also about the change in the definition of military service. The original version of the Bill referred, in clause (1)(1)(b) to

"while in the service of the Ministry of Defence of or any other authority which at the time exercised functions in relation to anyof the naval, military, or air forces of Her Majesty".

That passage has been dropped, and we now have the expression "while in military service". By changing the terminology are we not excluding certain aircraft or vessels which would otherwise have been covered by the Bill? I would think that the definition "military service" is more limited than

"while in the service of the Ministry of Defence or of any other authority".

I have no doubt that the Minister will advance the argument that if a civilian aircraft were to be used to take soldiers from one part of the United Kingdom to another, it would be covered by the term "while in military service", but I wonder whether "Ministry of Defence" does not go wider than "military service". Perhaps the Minister will elaborate on that.

Thirdly, there is the phrase

"armed forces . . . outside the United Kingdom", which appears in Lords amendment (1)(4)(c). That is a reference to the "armed forces of a country or territory outside the United Kingdom".

I am not sure about the intention behind that. Will there be definitional difficulties in referring to other armed forces? I understand that if an aircraft carrying American soldiers who were based in the United Kingdom were to crash, the intention would be for the Bill to cover such an event. Perhaps the reference to other armed forces goes wider than that. If that is the intention, it would be helpful for the Minister to provide clarification.

I apologised earlier, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for referring to something which was not covered directly by the amendments. I took up the matter because I was genuinely puzzled and because there will be no further opportunity to question the Government on these matters after the consideration of the Lords amendments has been completed. I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for having gone beyond the bounds of the amendments.

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): I do not wish to detain the House for long as I wish the Bill to take its proper place on the statute book within a reasonably short period. However, there is one matter which concerns me about Lords amendment No. 1, which relates to the extent of the controlled site designated by the Secretary of State. We have before us two alternatives, one of which is contained in the Bill. Clause 1(4) says that the Secretary of State

"may by order made by statutory instrument designate as a controlled site so much of that area as he considers it appropriate so to designate for the purpose of protecting or preserving any remains comprised in that place."

That wording seems to be clear and unambiguous, and seems to cover all possible parts of territories which the Secretary of State might wish, for the purposes of the Bill, to designate as a controlled site. However, the other place has somewhat expanded on that definition, and by subsection (5) of amendment No. 1 appears to wish to substitute for that wording a rather more complicated wording which, on my initial reading, does not add very much to the possibilities open to the Secretary of State. It also includes the strange phrase:

"or on account of the difficulty of identifying that place".

My concern can perhaps be exemplified by one particular crashed aircraft of which I know. As some hon. Members may know, I spend considerable amounts of the little free time that I have walking the hills and mountains of Scotland, and an extremely pleasant and healthy exercise it is. There is one particularly beautiful part of Scotland, in Torridon, where a mountain called Beinn Eighe has, at the back of it a coire called Coire Mhic Fhearchair, one of the most spectacular spots in the mountains. It is contained on three sides by mountains with a lochan at the foot of it and at the back three triple buttresses of about 1,000 ft., in height, which provide an extremely popular rock climbing ground.

Back in the 1950s, sadly, an RAF aircraft flew, by mistake, into the coire and before it was able to rise sufficiently to clear the summit of the mountain it crashed near the top of the triple buttresses. The wreckage spread — tragically, because everyone involved was killed — right the way down the cliff face and into the floor of the coire. In the context of the Bill, the problem is that the wreckage is spread over a considerable area. My concern is over the definition of the controlled area.

Mr. Mates: I think that I recall this case. Were not all the bodies recovered, which would mean that the Bill would not apply?

Mr. Smith: I think that most of the bodies were recovered, but I am not certain whether the hon. Gentleman is correct. Even if he were, my point would none the less apply on a general basis, because there are other similar examples.

The terms of the Bill are very stringent. No one can move or tamper with any of the parts of a crashed aircraft or wrecked ship. That might place restrictions on people, for example, walking in the mountains. I am concerned that the controlled area should be no greater than what would be required to effect the purposes of the Bill.

The wording of the Lords amendment seems to offer rather greater scope than the wording of the Bill and might lead to unnecessarily large areas being designated as a controlled site and to particular restrictions being put on that which not necessarily be needed to pursue and promuwitylgate the purposes of the Bill. They might then be to the detriment of some of our citizens. I shall be glad to hear from the Minister some of the thinking that might be leading the Government to accept the new wording rather than the wording of the Bill.

Mr. John Prescott (Kingston upon Hull), East): The proceedings surrounding the Bill have been deplorable. I know that it is the practice for Departments to seek the assistance of hon. Members to promote private Bills, and that practice has been followed by both sides of the House. I am not complaining, because the process can be of advantage to the House. However, I have been watching the progress of the Bill with care for some time. I am one of the few hon. Members who dive on wrecks, and I have some knowledge of the problems that are likely to be brought about by the Bill.

The Bill started with some controversial principles. Some are embodied in the amendment — for example, how we extend British jurisdiction into international waters. I notice that this provision will apply only to British ships and British personnel on British vessels in international waters. However, I am told by international authorities that it is extremely difficult to define this problem, and that it discriminates between British and foreign companies involved in salvage operations. Perhaps we shall hear from the Minister about this.

The other place made considerable changes, and has made the Bill better, but it has transformed a private Bill into a Government Bill, because all the amendments are Government amendments. The substance of the change, particularly that made by amendment No. 1, is considerable. I intervene now, but I hope to catch your eye at a later stage, Mr. Deputy Speaker, after the Minister has spoken. We are asking questions when it might be better for us to hear first what the Minister has to say on the changes that have been made.

The Bill came from the other place only two or three days ago, and I have been watching for it to appear on the Order Paper. Unfortunately, as this is a private Bill, it does not come in our normal notice of business. Therefore, I did not appreciate that it was on the Order paper this morning, due to something that happened last night. Therefore, we are expected to consider many amendments, involving important principles, at short notice.

Amendment No. 1 says that a statutory instrument will be laid before the House. That is an improvement. The original provisions of the Bill, which was rushed through its stages here, meant that the Department had total powers of designation for just about any vessel or aircraft. At least the statutory instrument, which seems to be a major change, now applies to aircraft. The Government must bring forward a statutory instrument designating a particular aircraft or vessel. If that is the case, it is to be welcomed. I hope that the Minister will confirm that when he gives the Government's view.

What will be the process of designation of a controlled site? Will it be by statutory instrument? The rather global approach that the Department adopted before meant that any area could be so designated, provided it fitted in with the date restriction of after 1914 and the 200-year qualification. Every hon. Member would want to do everything possible to protect the burial remains of military vessels. Nobody wants to interfere with that important priciple. However, anybody who dives knows that one finds a ship not in its complete state, but in bits and pieces buried below or resting on top of the sea bed. Not often does one find a whole vessel. I recall diving on the Mary Rose in the early 1970s. I had to put my hands through the mud to find the timber.

The Bill, as originally drafted, meant that even to move or tamper with any vessel became an offence. Unless one had done a great deal of research, one would not know whether a vessel was used for military or commercial purposes. The situation is quite different from the vessels that were sunk in Scapa Flow. Ironically enough, though, under the Bill one would still be able to dive and do salvage work on the Scapa Flow vessels, because I understand that everybody escaped from them and no bodies are associated with them. Therefore, a certain amount of flexibility is associated with salvage operations.

10.30 am

When those who are associated with the industry first became aware of the Bill, their first reaction was to oppose it. In reality, the Bill came before the House without the industry having been consulted about it. The Department decided that something must be done. However, it did not consult anybody; it simply produced a Bill and asked the hon. Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) to introduce it because it was a worthy cause. I understand why he would want to co-operate with that particular cause. Therefore, he must have been surprised by the vehemence of the reaction to the Bill. The number of amendments that this House has been asked by the other place to consider — amendments on very important issues — should make us very cagey about listening to Government Departments that want Bills containing perhaps only a few sentences to be introduced by Back-Bench Members.

The reason for the introduction of the Bill was to allow the Department to deal with the problems created by people who want to dive on vessels and carry out salvage work. A case in my constituency is particularly relevant to this amendment. Shell were found on a vessel. As a commercial operation, people wanted to dive on this vessel, which was sunk in 1914. There has been one heck of a hassle with the Department as to whether, these shells having been found, they can be used to commercial advantage.

The Bill would prevent that kind of hassle. I had to intervene on behalf of certain of my constituents who had found these empty shell cases and wanted to use them, because they had found a profitable market for them. The Government took the shells into safe keeping, but somebody burgled them, using 4-tonne lorries. Nobody has been able to find out where the shells went, after having been in the safe custody of the Government. After all the fuss that I had with the Department, the purpose of the Bill was to try to solve all those problems and to designate any area that it was thought should not be dived on or tampered with.

Many major matters are covered by the Bill, but it is an unsatisfactory way of dealing with them. In the other place the industry battled intensively against the Bill. As a result, we are considering these amendments. I hope that the Minister will be able to give us a clear indication of the Government's attitude towards them. If the Minister would do that, we could consider his reply and make points upon it later in the debate.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Roger Freeman): I am grateful for the Opposition's contributions and I shall deal with the points that have been made. First, however, I ought to underline the fact that the purpose of the Bill is to protect military remains—that is, aircraft which have crashed or vessels which have been sunk with human remains on board. The purpose of the Bill is to treat them as war graves. This is a serious and important subject. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) on introducing the Bill, looking after its passage through the House of Commons and speaking to it this morning. It is an important and serious Bill and I shall seek to answer all the Oppositions contributions, which I think I have interpreted correctly as points of detail rather than as objections to the Bill.

I intend to comment briefly on the Lords amendments and with your permission, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I shall deal briefly with the other Lords amendments that are grouped for debate later, because, already, the debate has ranged widely. All but one of the 28 amendments were put forward by the Government. No fewer than 22 of the 28 amendments relate to a change to the designation of a regime for vessels, as opposed to designating vessels as a class—those that were in military service but were sunk and that are believed to contain human remains. A major change in the procedure was introduced in the other place, and the Government accepted it as a sensible response to some of the points that have been referred to this morning by hon. Members. Military vessels will no longer be protected as a class. They will need to be individually designated by an order made by statutory instrument. The reason for this is simply because of the difficulty of defining a class of military vessels. The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott), referring to diving interests, in particular sub-aqua interests, put his finger on the problem: that if one is interested in diving to observe but not to interfere with a vessel, how does a diver or the Ministry of Defence know for certain whether a particular vessel was being used for military or civilian purposes?

In wartime, many merchant vessels are commandeered and used for military purposes. Therefore, the dividing line between the civilian and military use of vessels is not so clear as it is in the case of aircraft. It is much easier and simpler to identify a crashed aircraft as having been fulfilling a military purpose and role as opposed to a civilian role.

Vessels can now be so designated, even where their exact location is not known. I shall deal later with that point when answering the question that has been raised in relation to controlled sites. The change was made to reduce the uncertainties for divers about whether particular vessels were covered by the Bill, which I am sure both sides of the House hope will soon become an Act.

Amendment No. 5 redefines the offence involved in the protection of military vessels and aircraft. The prosecution now has to show tht the person believed or had grounds for suspecting that the vessel was in military service. The effect of amendment No. 5 is slightly to change the onus of proof and it is an intelligent and sensible response to the representations. It is designed to draw a clearer distinction between the intention to commit an offence and an offence that might be committed unwittingly and without particular intent or purpose.

Amendment No. 6 removes the offence of boarding and defines that of entering. The purpose of the amendment is to introduce an offence that is not so strong as boarding. This amendment was introduced partly in response to representations from diving interests. The act of entering and interfering with parts of a vessel is covered now by the Bill, as a result of amendment No. 6.

Amendment No. 14 provides that no offence will be committed by those exercising statutory powers. I am sure that that amendment will commend itself to the House. Amendment No. 20 relates to the powers of boarding by authorised officers and makes it clear that the Secretary of State and authorised officers can authorise persons not only individually but also by description—for example, naval officers. Amendment No. 28 enables the provisions to be extended to the Channel Islands by Order in Council.

I am grateful for the tribute that was paid by Lord Sandford in another place to the Government's efforts to protect the interests of British salvage companies and others who may be affected by the Bill. We have agreed to issue licences to reputable British salvage companies to enable them to salvage protected vessels in international waters, provided that they adhere to a code of practice designed to minimise disturbance to any human remains.

Mr. Prescott: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Are all the amendments being moved in one block?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are following the amendments listed on Mr. Speaker's provisional selection list. The Minister made a passing reference to an amendment that is not in the group that we are discussing, but as I thought that it might be helpful to the House I did not comment. The other amendments will be dealt with as we reach them in the proper order.

Mr. Prescott: I am grateful for your advice, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The Minister referred to reputable salvage operators. How will he judge what is reputable? Quite frankly, many of them are little more than pirates. What criteria will the Minister use? Will they be non-members of certain associations or bodies?

Mr. Freeman: If the hon. Gentleman will bear with me, I shall deal with that matter later. I confirm that I am addressing the first group of amendments, but I thought that it might help the House if I touched briefly upon the purpose of other amendments.

On Second Reading, the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) expressed concern that the interests of fishermen should be safeguarded. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement wrote to him saying that we would issue a general licence for fishermen that would protect them from prosecution under the Bill if they exercised reasonable care. Preliminary discussions have been held with fishing organisations on the content of the licence, and we believe that they are satisfied.

The hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) expressed concern about sports divers. Indeed, other hon. Members have received letters from their constituents on that matter. The Government's amendments have been welcomed by sub-aqua associations, and I hope that they are now reassured that the Bill will not restrict the activities of divers who respect the sanctity of war graves.

The Government have been heartened by the expressed view of all concerned that, despite the problems, the Bill is worthy. I hope that, in due course, the House will approve the Lords amendments, all of which the Government fully support.

The hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo), in welcoming the clarity that the Lords amendments bring to the Bill, raised a number of points. His first related to what he believed to be inconsistencies in amendment No. 1. The hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs) also make that point. He courteously informed me that he would have to leave the debate, but I understand that he is returning later.

10.45 am

Amendment No. 1 is the key amendment and its purpose is to change the policy from designating a class of vessels to designating specific vessels. The Bill still retains a provision to designate classes of military aircraft. this group of amendments enshrine our change of policy from blanket protection to a procedure that involves a great deal more work. However, I hope that that means a great deal more clarity, especially for such interests as divers. Vessels will be designated by statutory instrument, and I will explain the procedure later.

The hon. Member for Bow and Poplar also asked about the 200-year provision, which is not covered by the Lords amendments. He specifically asked about the Mary Rose, as did the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East. Certainly the Mary Rose foundered and sank more than 200 years ago, but she was protected by the Protection of Wrecks Act 1973, which protects vessels of historic or archaeological interest. Therefore, there is sufficent protection for any vessel that sank prior to 1914. The Bill deals with those involved in the great war, the second world war and subsequent conflicts where the classifications historic or archaeological would not be appropriate.

Mr. Prescott: Why include a date of 1914—why not leave it open and bring in a statutory instrument, as the Minister explained, to deal with specific military vessels? The state of the ship is not really relevant.

Mr. Freeman: We are seeking to respond to the reasonable request of the diving fraternity and others who want clarity of purpose. The designation procedure will involve considerable effort. For the sake of clarity, good order and procedure, we intend to start from August 1914 and work to the present day. We are satisfied that existing legislation is sufficient to deal with vessels that sank earlier than that—even if there are human remains—because they would be regarded as of historical or archaeological interest.

The hon. Member for Bow and Poplar asked me the purpose of a number of amendments. Amendment No. 2 simply relocates, with minor drafting changes, clause 1(2). That technical change is required if dealing with the amendments as a whole. Amendment No. 8 removes provisions rendered unnecessary by amendment No. 1, which changes policy from a class to a designation regime.

Amendment No. 11 puts beyond all possible doubt that where it is claimed that an act was done in accordance with a licence, the onus is on the defence to prove that it was. Amendment No. 26 inserts a definition of military service that is already used elsewhere in the Bill.

The hon. Gentleman asked why vessels being delivered to the Royal Navy were not covered by the Bill. We are not aware of any such vessel that was sunk or severely damaged during military conflict, so there was no reason to include them in the Bill.

The right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) generally welcomed the Bill, but he posed a number of questions to which he wants satisfactory answers. The kernel of the hon. Gentleman's points concerned jurisdiction. He asked why we are considering designating particular vessels or controlled sites in international waters, if we have no jurisdiction over foreign companies or individuals. He asked whether we were not disadvantaging our nationals and British salvage companies. That is a perfectly fair point, but before I respond to it, I confirm that there are specific procedures regarding vessels. The intention is to designate a few controlled sites. They could be mainly or, even exclusively, in territorial waters, and would be specifically designated by geographical co-ordinates. Within them no diving would be permitted. That would be where there was an important national war grave. Designated vessels could be either in territorial waters or international waters.

We are responding to representations made by salvage companies which are worried that if we prevent them from entering into controlled, sensible, salvage operations in international waters, they will be disadvantaged by companies from other countries. We have responded that we shall permit them to carry out controlled salvage on most designated vessels by issuing a licence to reputable companies. I shall deal with the definition of reputable in a moment. However, there will be a few vessels where we would not like any salvage to occur and they will form a restricted class. I hope that that assurance will be satisfactory to the salvage interests.

We shall not seek to restrict a designated vessel some time after the designation of that vessel. In other words, when we designate the vessels by statutory instrument we shall not subsequently, after the salvage company has put great effort, trouble and money into preparing the salvage operations, tell that company that the vessel falls within the exclusion subcategory of designated vessels. I hope that that assurance will satisfy the hon. Gentleman. I think that it has satisfied salvage operators thus far.

Mr. Prescott: In the case of the Edinburgh the Government had a great of interest in salvaging the gold and presumably, as seamen were on it, it could be designated as a burial site. Under these regulations, would the Government designate it as a war grave, which presumably would be legitimate, and then allow a salvage operator to salvage the gold so that they could get their greedy hands on it, getting over the principles of interfering with a burial site?

Mr. Freeman: That raises a specific question and I hope that the hon. Gentleman will allow me to answer it in writing in due course. It depends on whether we would intend, under the provisions of the Bill, specifically to designate a particular vessel. He is asking questions about a specific controlled site or vessel, and I hope he will permit me to answer subsequently.

Mr. Mates: Ministers cannot give specific answers, but I remember the case, as I followed it closely. Edinburgh was a designated war grave. There were remains of the crew on board and before the Government gave permission for the salvage operation to take place, the most detailed stringent arrangements were made about not disturbing those remains. A long period of negotiations between the salvage company and the Government took place before permission was granted. I have no doubt that if the same position arises any future Government will take the same care to ensure that the remains are not disturbed.

Mr. Prescott rose——

Mr. Freeman: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will let me make a little progress and then I shall be happy to give way again.

Mr. Prescott: I understand that the Minister may not know all the details of the case. That is normal and I make no criticism of it. But we are dealing with a fundamental point. The Government may designate sites in this legislation, whether or not it is a private Member's Bill, and that then becomes law. The Government will have to decide which areas they wish to designate as burial sites, for which a statutory instrument may be tabled and discussed in the House. Therefore, the Government's view is relevant. Are we to assume from the evidence that it is possible that the Government will judge that an area deemed a burial site, for example the Edinburgh, would be allowed for salvage operations so long as it is done carefully, the bodies are not disturbed and the gold is salvaged? Is it possible that a deemed burial site can still be a site for salvage operations?

Mr. Freeman: The intention is to permit reasonable, sensible, salvage operations and to issue licences to specific named salvage companies to salvage on——

Mr. Prescott: Burial sites?

Mr. Freeman: If the hon. Gentleman will allow me to complete my sentence, he will have an answer. We shall judge salvage companies to be reputable according to their past performance, experience, ability and behaviour to carry out salvage. The intention would be to permit as broad an activity of salvage as possible. I can assure the hon. Gentleman that the intention is not necessarily to restrict legitimate salvage operations.

Mr. Denzil Davies: As I understand it, the Government are saying that it is a crime to carry out salvage operations in territorial waters, but that they will license some people to carry out a crime in international waters. That is the point about jurisdiction. Although it is a crime, if one is reputable and goes along with the Ministry of Defence, one can be licensed to commit a crime. That is an extraordinary attitude.

Mr. Freeman: The representations of the salvage companies were that in international waters we have no power to prevent a foreign company from carrying out salvage operations on a sunken vessel, and that if they do not carry out the work some other company will. Our response has been to draw a balance. We have said that we will issue licences to reputable salvage companies so that they are not put at a disadvantage. I appeal this morning to foreign companies and citizens to respect the purpose and intent of the Bill, which we hope will shortly become an Act. Although our jurisdiction does not cover them, we hope that they will respect the legislation.

Mr. Denzil Davies: The Government are making a certain act in international waters a crime but the crime will apply only to British citizens, residents, ships and so on. The problem is that foreigners can do those acts and cannot be stopped. Are there any moves towards an international agreement because, obviously, that is the real solution? Now the Government are telling us that there is a genuine problem caused by the drafting of the legislation, and to get round it they will give some people, no doubt nice people whom they like, a licence to commit what would be a crime if somebody else did it. Perhaps there are other precedents in legislation for that.

Mr. Mates: There are.

Mr. Davies: It is certainly not to be encouraged that the Minister of Defence or any other Ministry, with no disrespect to them, can decide who commits a crime and who does not.

11 am

Mr. Freeman: Obviously, this Parliament can legislate only for its own citizens, but I hope that foreign companies and citizens will respect the intents and purposes of the legislation.

The hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) asked about controlled sites, which are dealt with in clause 1. The provision will cover all vessels within a specific prescibed area of the sea. All diving within that controlled site will be prohibited. It will be an offence to dive in that controlled site, but the intention is to designate by statutory instrument only a few such sites.

I hope that I have satisfied the hon. Gentleman that named vessles will be disignated. It will be an offence to enter—board is too strong a word—to damage, remove or disturb the contents of a maritime war grave.

The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East made two implied criticisms. He welcomed the Bill, but he stressed that it was a private Member's Bill. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East on introducting the Bill. The Government support the Bill strongly and warmly. The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East is not against the Bill's principles, but he is worried about the speed with which the Bill is being examined. This morning we are considering Lords amendments and the hon. Gentleman will agree that they do not affect the purposes of the Bill.

Mr. Prescott: I was complaining about the speed with which the Bill is being considered. It went through all its stages in one go. It has set some precedents in the speed with which it has been rushed through the House. Today's debate is revealing the difficulties involved in considering the Bill in this way. Once the Minister sits down we cannot intervene to question some of the essential points that he is making in his reply. That is not satisfactory, but we have to operate under the rules of the House.

I have already asked the Minister about international jurisdiction. I am sponsored by the National Union of Seamen, the members of which are concerned. When a vessel in international waters is designated, a British salvage company can operate with protection under the law because it will have a licence. That applies to British companies and British seamen. However, salvage is an international industry.

Some members of the NUS sail on ships flying foreign flags. British divers might have to work from a ship flying a Greek flag. They will be commiting an offence under the legislation because they are British citizens. They will be affected by the Greek law. What protection does a British seaman have under these circumstances?

Mr. Freeman: The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East is thinking on his feet and I am impressed with the speed with which he is doing that. He is asking important questions. The hon. Gentleman will appreciate the dilemma. The Bill's purpose is to protect military vessels with human remains on board. We are talking about war graves. Some such vessels sank outside British territorial waters. In a reasonable and constructive way we are seeking to indicate during the passage of the Bill how seriously we take war graves and to provide a limited procedure for the control of British salvage companies when salvaging such vessles.

We intend to issue licences to reputable British companies so that they can operate in competition with foreign companies.

Mr. Prescott: The Minister has made some important comments about British citizens. I appreciate his difficulty, but I ask him again, what advice can he give to British seamen on a ship ruled by the law of another country because it bears the flag of that country? What happens if the British seaman disobeys the law of that country? Does he face prosecution under British law or Greek law? What advice can the Minister give to members of the NUS in that dilemma?

Mr. Freeman: I understand the hon. Gentleman's anxiety. His question is more than hypothetical. The hon. Gentleman accepts the principles behind the Bill. I hope that the dilemma that he describes will not occur. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman's union will be able to give its members guidance.

The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East also asked me how a controlled site will be designated. This will be by statutory instrument in which the House will be involved. That provision is contained in clause 1(2).

The hon. Gentleman also asked about Scapa Flow. I assume that he has in mind the tourist attraction which that has become. We are talking about German ships which were scuttled, not sunk, with human remains on board. I confirm that those German vessels will not be covered by the legislation so there will be no problem for divers or for the tourist industry.

I commend the amendments to the House.

Clause 10

SHORT TITLE, COMMENCEMENT AND EXTENT

Lords amendment: No. 28, in page 9, line 31, at end insert

"any of the Channel Islands or"

Mr. Mates: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Mikardo: It is clearly right that the Channel Islands should be included in the Bill, but why has the Isle of Man not been added?

Mr. Prescott: We have arrived at the last amendment, which proposes to add the Channel Islands to the areas where the Bill will apply.

I was not prepared to vote for the previous amendment that we discussed, although the Minister assured me that he would write to me about the difficult problem that I presented to him. It seems that British seamen could also be affected by amendment No. 28. The house has a resonsibility to look after the citizens of this country and I do not believe that the Minister can give me a satisfactory answer to the questions that I asked him.

Amendment No. 28 is also in conflict with international law. The law of this country can apply only to our ships and citizens in British areas. The Bill proposes — uniquely, I think; I should be interested to hear whether the Minister knows of any other such case — to cover areas outside our jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction in international waters was to have been dealt with by the law of the sea conference, but opposition by the Americans and by our Government prevented a satisfactory solution.

I shall hope to use the Minister's letter to me to advise NUS members, many more of whom now serve on foreign flag ships, how to deal with salvage operations. I hope that the Minister will confirm that he will write to me. We shall let the Bill go on its way, on the understanding that the Department will look at the problem and give us some advice.

Mr. Freeman: I confirm that I understand the point that has been put with great force by the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott). I shall write to him.

The hon Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo) asked why the Isle of Man was excluded from the Bill. The Isle of Man Government have advised us that the permissive extension clause — clause 10 — would not be appropriate in their case, because responsibility for making orders in respect of wrecks of ships and aircraft on the seabed of the territorial waters of the island is vested in the Isle of Man Harbour Board under the Wreck and Salvage Act 1979 of the Tynwald.

We are advised that if any military wrecks are discovered within the territorial waters of the Isle of Man the Government would no doubt favourably consider a designation order under Manx legislation in respect of that site. I hope that that satisfies the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar.

Protection of Children (Tobacco) Bill

Lords amendment considered.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 18 OF THE CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS (SCOTLAND) ACT 1937

Lords amendment: No. 1 in, page 2, line 21, at end insert—

"(d) after subsection (5) there shall be inserted the following subsections—

"(6) For the purposes of subsections (1) and (2) of this section, any substance sold in a container (whether sealed or not) shall, subject to subsections (7) to (9) of this section, be presumed to conform to the description of the substance on the container.

(7) Where a prosecutor (within the meaning of section 462 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975) intends to rely on subsection (6) of this section, he shall give notice of his intention to the accused or his agent not less than 14 days before the commencement of the trial.

(8) The accused shall not be entitled to challenge the presumption in subsection (6) of this section, unless he or his agent gives notice to the said prosecutor of intention to do so not less than 7 days before the commencement of the trial.

(9) A notice under subsection (7) or (8) of this section shall be by recorded delivery letter, and the execution of the recorded delivery shall be sufficient evidence of the date of posting and of intimation of the notice, which shall be presumed to have been intimated to the addressee on the day after the day on which it was posted, except that, in the case of a notice posted on a Friday or a Saturday, it shall be presumed to have been so intimated on the Monday next following."."

11.15 am

Mr. John Home Robertson (East Lothian): I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

This is a technical amendment, which applies only to Scotland. It arises because of the rules of evidence applicable to a criminal trail in Scotland. A prosecutor must prove the nature and contents of a container, such as a bottle or a tin, and evidence would require to be led of scientific analysis of the contents having been carried out by two forensic scientists. That is so even when the contents are specified on a label on the container or where the nature of the contents is not a matter of dispute between the Crown and the accused.

The amendment will do away with the need for full scientific examination in every case by creating a presumption, for the purposes of any trial, that any substance in a container, whether or not the container is sealed, shall be presumed to conform to the description of the substance in the container.

It is important to emphasise that that is a rebuttable presumption and does not compromise the accused's position. When the matter is contentious the accused can insist on full scientific proof. Under subsection (7) the prosecutor must give notice to an accused person of his intention to rely on the presumption, and thereafter it is open to the accused to give counter-notice of his intention to challenge the presumption.

The use of the presumption is, therefore, expected only in cases when the matter is not in dispute. In such cases, much time and expense will be saved in proceeding to trial without needing full scientific evidence. I understand that there are precedents for that principle.

The amendment would do away with the need for a procurator fiscal in Scotland to have the contents of packets of Skoal Bandits or cigarettes chemically analysed if all parties agree that the packet contains what it says it contains. I am grateful to the Lord Advocate for introducing this useful technical amendment in the other place, because it should further simplify the prosecution of those who sell tobacco products to young people under 16, but it will not prejudice the fundamental rights of the defendant.

I do not wish to delay the House, in view of the importance of our next business. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on his excellent Bill for the benefit of disabled people and I am pleased that I was able to assist him during its Committee stage. However, I shall dwell on my own Bill for another couple of minutes, because the amendment provides a useful opportunity to press the Minister on the enforcement of the Bill when, as we hope, it comes into effect in about three months' time.

The Bill has two fundamental purposes. The first is to make it easier to prosecute those who sell cigarettes to youngsters. It is a national scandal that this poisonous trade is being carried on to the tune of £90 million a year. A new generation is getting hooked on the lethal addiction to nicotine and we expect the Government and the prosecuting and police authorities to take action to deter the trade when the Bill comes into effect.

The most recent Government figures show that fewer than 50 prosecutions a year are made against those involved in the £90 million trade. It is clear that the old legislation has become a dead letter. My Bill should make it possible to crack down on that trade and I hope that the Minister will confirm that that is his intention.

The second intention of the Bill is to extend the ban on the sale of tobacco to youngsters to include tobacco for oral and nasal use, which specifically includes the notorious Skoal Bandits. Many of us would like to ban these dangerous products altogether, and it is nonsense that the people who produce them have been able to escape the ban on sales to youngsters. They are exempt from tobacco duty, they do not yet have to carry a Government health warning on the products and the United States tobacco company that manufactures them has even had a Government grant to establish a factory in East Kilbride.

I hope that my Bill will be the beginning of the end for Skoal Bandits in Britain. I am grateful to the House for supporting this measure to deal with a serious problem, and I am grateful to my noble Friend Lord Pitt of Hampstead for piloting the Bill through another place.

We must stress that legislation is not enough. It must be enforced, to deter the unscrupulous people involved in this trade. I hope that the Minister will confirm that the Government intend to crack down on this trade as soon as the Bill comes into effect.

Dr. John Marek (Wrexham): The Opposition welcome the amendment. It is useful, in that it will speed up justice and save time and administrative costs in a number of cases. In the past, prosecutions may not have been successful because the evidence has not been proved beyond doubt or because it was suggested that the contents of a box were different from those described on the label. Do the terms of the amendment already apply in England? If not, why has a similar procedure not been introduced to save the public analyst's time when a dispute arises?

Finally, I again congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on bringing the Bill forward. It will be a useful addition to our legislation. Under-age smoking is one of the most serious questions before us, and if this small step helps young people not to become addicted to nicotine before the age of 16, as I am sure it will, all hon. Members will welcome the Bill, and I hope that it will receive Royal Assent as soon as possible.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland (Mr. Allan Stewart): The hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) has rightly pointed out that this is a technical amendment that arises because of the rules of evidence applicable to a criminal trial in Scotland. The amendment applies only to Scotland, and I can tell the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) that I understand a similar problem does not arise in England. The hon. Member for East Lothian spelt out clearly the reasons for the amendment and it would serve no purpose for me to repeat them.

The hon. Gentleman asked about the Government's intention regarding enforcement of the Bill. Clause 3(3) states that the Act will come into effect three months after the day on which it is passed. I can assure the hon. Gentleman that it is our intention to have a wide-ranging publicity campaign through the Scottish Information Office, to educate the public and we shall bring the Bill to the attention of health boards, the police and prosecuting authorities in Scotland.

I am sure that the passing of the Bill and the publicity which it receives will have a substantial deterrent effect on those who may be tempted to sell tobacco or tobacco products to young people below the statutory age. Clearly there is limit to the extent to which chief constables can deploy resources to combat the problem, but I am sure that they will have due regard to it within the competing demands on their resources.

Finally, I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on steering the Bill so successfully through and I assure him that Ministers with responsibility for health will use their best endeavours in the current discussions with United States Tobacco to ensure that Skoal Bandits are not sold to anyone below the appropriate age.

Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Bill

Lords amendments considered.

New Clause

APPOINTMENT OF AUTHORISED REPRESENTATIVES OF DISABLED PERSONS

Lords Amendment: No. 1, before clause 1, insert the following new clause:

"—(1) In this Act "authorised representative", in relation to a disabled person, means a person for the time being appointed by or on behalf of that disabled person (in accordance with regulations made under this section) to act as his authorised representative for the purposes of this Act.

(2) The Secretary of State may by regulations make provision with respect to the appointment of persons to act as the authorised representatives of disabled persons, including provision—

(a) for the manner in which the appointment of a person as an authorised representative is to be made; and

(b) for any such appointment to be notified to the relevant local authority (as defined in the regulations) if made otherwise than by that authority.

(3) Any such regulations—

(a) may provide for the parent or guardian of a disabled person under the age of 16 or appoint himself or some other person as the authorised representative of the disabled person (but shall not permit a person under that age himself to appoint a person as his authorised representative);

(b) may provide for the appointment of a person as the authorised representative of a disabled person who is a child in the care of a local authority to be made by that authority in such circumstances as may be specified in the regulations;

(c) may, in accordance with subsection (4), provide for the appointment of a person as the authorised representative of a disabled person to be made by, or under arrangements made by, a local authority in a case where the disabled person appears to the authority to be unable to appoint a person as his authorised representative by reason of any mental or physical incapacity;

(d) may contain such incidental or supplementary provisions as the Secretary of State thinks fit.

(4) Regulations under paragraph (c) of subsection (3) may make provision—

(a) for requiring a local authority, for the purpose of enabling them to determine whether a disabled person is unable to appoint a person as his authorised representative as mentioned in that paragraph, to obtain the opinion of a registered medical practitioner;

(b) for authorising a local authority, where they determine that a disabled person is so unable, either—

(i) themselves to appoint a person as the disabled person's authorised representative, or

(ii) to make with any voluntary organisation, person or persons approved by them for the purpose of such arrangements as they think fit for such an appointment to be made by the organisation, person or persons concerned;

(c) for requiring or authorising a local authority, before determining the question specified in paragraph (a), or (as the case may be) before making any appointment of an authorised representative, or any arrangements, in pursuance of paragraph (b), to consult any of the following, namely—

(i) a person or persons appointed by them for the purpose, or

Mr. Tom Clarke (Monklands, West): I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Clarke: Before I address the detailed amendments to clause 1, I want to make a few general comments about the progress of the Bill in another place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will do his utmost to keep in order. We must address ourselves to the content of the amendments before the House.

Mr. Clarke: As one who has witnessed the expertise from the Chair this morning in controlling difficulties on other measures, I shall do my utmost to keep in order. However, it is appropriate to acknowledge the efforts of Baroness Masham of Ilton who steered through almost 100 amendments in concert with the Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, Baroness Trumpington, to whom warm thanks are also due, especially in view of her other responsibilities.

The small band of civil servants — indeed, key officials — in the DHSS has also laboured hard to improve the Bill. They, in consultation with Mr. Peter Mitchell, Mr. John Healy and Mr. William Bingley, have done a superb job in bringing the Bill to the House in its present shape with the new clause and the amendments. I think that the Minister will agree that they have made our task this morning a great deal easier and we must thank them for it.

I apologise to the House for the reams of Lords amendments, including those that we are now discussing, which need to be considered today. I am sure that all hon. and right hon. Members will appreciate that another place was in many ways compelled to do the Committee work on the Bill that emerged from this House which might will have been done upstairs if Ministers had accepted rather earlier the principles which I am now happy to say they so warmly espouse.

Clause 1 has been split into two for convenience. The new clause contains all the provisions relating to the appointment of authorised representatives by disabled people or on their behalf. Most of the new clause consists of regulation-making powers in relation to the complex balance needed where the disabled person is unable to appoint someone himself.

After five months of intense thought by all concerned, including a seminar held at MIND — to whom the presence of these clauses are largely due — it has been concluded that there are no organisations in the country other than local authorities on which the duty to make the necessary arrangements for these people could be laid in primary legislation. I understand that "double delegation" would have been frowned on by the courts — that is, giving the Secretary of State a free hand to choose the intermediary bodies at a later date and also giving those bodies the power to delegate the responsibility as they wish.

Nevertheless, the local authority will also be the authority providing the services in relation to which the representative will operate. This potential conflict of interest is not wholly satisfactory, as the Minister will probably agree. One of the most important characteristics of the concept of representation or advocacy for disabled people as it has developed in this country and abroad is that the representative owes sole loyalty to the disabled person and is truly independent of the service-providing authority.

Where representatives are perhaps too pushy, too demanding, or too successful, there may be a temptation to get rid of them. It is vital that once the Bill becomes an Act careful consideration is given to the rules that will cover this issue to ensure that sufficient independence is built into the procedure, especially where, under (4) (b) (i) local authorities appoint representatives themselves. Therefore, the wording of the amendments explicitly leaves open the possibility that the local authority might set up a panel, or appoint a voluntary organisation, to fulfil this function so that it can remain at arm's length. I wish to make only one other brief comment on the procedures relating to adults who are unable to make an appointment themselves on account of incapacity. The decision whether someone is unable to appoint an authorised representative himself may not be cut and dried, and the amendments include a stipulation that the regulations may require the advice of a doctor. However, they also allow others to be consulted on that question. Those caring full-time for a disabled person may have valid views on this as valid as a doctor, who only sees a person occasionally.

11.30 am

On the detail of new clause 1, I should like to say a word about the arrangements for disabled children. In most cases parents will appoint representatives for their children, but at a late stage the Department expressed concern about parents who had, for example, harmed their children in some way. Therefore, the amendments envisage the appointment of an authorised representative for children in care, to be made by the local authority. Unfortunately, at a stage too late for amendment, it was pointed out that there might be a few children who had neither a parent nor guardian and who were not in the care of a local authority.

Perhaps I may be permitted a mild criticism. Some of the technical problems with what was, after all, the Government's new clause — which was introduced on Report — have been rather late in emerging. Nevertheless, I do not want to appear to be ungrateful or churlish. I am convinced that the new clause provides an adequate framework for achieving the Bill's intentions.

I am sure that you will be pleased to learn, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that there is little to say about Lords amendments Nos. 2 to 10 to clause 1, which are largely consequential. However, amendment No. 3 is most important, and will greatly assist people who are seeking to move from hospital into the community. It allows access for the authorised representative to people in hospital in advance of the general extension of the clause to the NHS. I am rather sorry that it appears there is some accommodation for children in England and Wales — but not apparently in Scotland — excluded from the list. Again, that was discovered rather late in the day. However, I am assured that that will be tidied up in the forthcoming child care Bill, and the Minister may also have something to say about that.

In connection with amendment No. 6, may I ask the Minister when he intends to commence the consultation regarding the extension of the clauses to the NHS and other local authority services. The vast majority of people and organisations, in response to the Government's consultative document on the Bill earlier this year, expressed concern that the Bill recognises the representative only in relation to social services provided by a local authority. As I am sure that the House would agree, one of the main purposes of representation is to prevent disabled people from falling through the net of services that are increasingly provided by different authorities. It makes little sense to limit the scope of a representative to just the social services.

Finally, it might be appropriate if the Minister, when he responds to each group of amendments, could say when he expects to be able to bring each clause into force. I am aware of the Minister's commitment to the principles of the Bill, and I welcome that. It was helpful at several stages. I am sure that he appreciates the despondency, not to say anger, that would be widespread in the country if key parts of the Act languished ineffectually on the statute book.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris), whose assistance I most readily acknowledge, just as my fellow sponsors would do, received a letter from the Prime Minister which was rightly widely publicised, and which is relevant to this clause and the amendments. In response to my right hon. Friend's question about resources, she did not appear to be particularly generous. I must admit that that happened at a fairly early stage in our discussions, and so, given the Government's rethink on these matters and the Minister's input, especially in recent months, I hope that it will be accepted that this part of the Bill will lack true meaning unless the necessary resources are provided.

I do not believe that the House or the other place would appreciate any Government who hid behind the Treasury in saying that the resources cannot be made available. After all, both Houses have expressed themselves clearly on the priorities that we hope to identify. Today of all days, on 4 July, it is important to assert the independence of disabled persons. They are intitled to that independence. They are entitled to enjoy the same liberties as the rest of us: true liberty in the meaningful sense of that word. I believe that the Bill will assist in many ways in achieving that objective, which is widely shared by both Houses and by the people of this country. We know that the authorities want to implement the Bill. The message from this House, supported overwhelmingly by the country at large, must be, "Give them the money, and let them get on with the job."

Mr. Ian Mikardo (Bow and Poplar): Unhappily, in the past seven years or so there has been some diminution and erosion of elements of our social services provision, and that has adversely affected some groups of people. Probably no group has suffered more as a result than handicapped persons. My hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) has, therefore, done a great job in introducing a Bill that at least makes some contribution towards making up for the losses that have been sustained by handicapped persons. He has earned himself much credit in the House, and if there is a heaven he has earned himself some good Brownie points there.

I rise only to ask about some minor points. My right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) has unparalleled expertise in this area, and perhaps he will be able to put me right. Subsection 4(a) of the amendment requires the local authority to "obtain the opinion of a registered medical practitioner" and would seem to be a sensible provision, but subsection 4(c) requires the local authority to consult

"(i) a person or persons appointed by them for the purpose, or

(ii) a person or persons falling within any class or description."

What sort of people could they be if their views were authoritative but if they were not medical practitioners? Why has a distinction been drawn?

Incidentally, there is also a typographical error on page (3) of the Amendment Paper, in that at the end of line 5 there are some closing inverted commas for which there do not appear to be any corresponding opening commas. I just mention that so that the error can be put right when the Bill is reprinted, as it will have to be.

What is the reason for amendment No. 9, which would leave out line 8? Its effect would apparently be to leave that part of the Bill without any definition of a health board. I cannot think why we should want to define everything else except that. But perhaps I have misread it, and if so I apologise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I shall try to help the House by pointing out that the closing inverted commas to which the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo) referred are those which appear to follow the opening inverted commas at the beginning of the second line of amendment No. 1.

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): I welcome the fact that the Bill has reached this stage. I hope that within a short time it will complete its passage through Parliament.

I ask for some clarification of the Government's intentions with regard to Amendment No. 1. Proposed subsection (4)(b) says that regulations may make provision "for authorising a local authority, where they determine that a disable person is so unable, either—

(i) themselves to appoint a person as the disabled person's authorised representative, or"

alternatively

"any voluntary organisation, person or persons".

I should be grateful if the Minister would confirm that it is intended to make that a hard and fast provision. Subsection (4) is a permissive provision under which a local authority may appoint a representative. I should like an undertaking that that will happen. We discussed in Committee the position of those who were severely handicapped who could not appoint representatives of their own. Those are the people who most need the Bill's provisions.

Clause 1(9) presents another aspect of concern. I should like confirmation that the changes made in the other place help rather than hinder the progress for which we hope by extending the provisions to health authorities and local authorities where appropriate. Many people feel that such a provision is needed. I hope that there is no diminution in our intention to extend the provision in that direction in due course. Again, subsection (9) is a permissive provision. I should be grateful if the Minister would confirm that he hopes to move in that direction at an early date after the implementation of the Bill.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on his hard work and his achievements in getting the Bill to this stage. I hope that I shall not again detain hon. Members for too long.

Mr. Alfred Morris (Manchester, Wythenshawe): On this important day for my hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke), who has my warmly renewed congratulations and for whom I am full of admiration, I know that he will join me in paying tribute to the sustained and invaluable help he has received at all stages of the Bill's consideration from my right hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) who, sadly, is not able, because of constituency commitments, to be with us this morning. My right hon. Friend has played a distinguished part in all our proceedings on the Bill, and he will be as active in campaigning for the Bill's full and speedy implementation as he has been in its making.

I know that the hon. Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) and my hon. Friend the Member for Eccles (Mr. Carter-Jones) regret very much that they cannot be here for these final proceedings. As the House knows they, too, are tried, trusted and widely respected campaigners for disabled people.

This is an important part of the Bill. It brings representation into rehabilitation, which could do much, given the support that it merits, to improve the quality of life of people with disabilities and to ease the strain on families. Much progress has been made over the years in strengthening the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 and in extending its implementation. Yet all too often the emphasis has been too much on what the providers of help under the Act think best rather than on what its recipients see as most likely to meet their needs. Now we seek to redress that imbalance, and, as the House as a whole must agree, not before time.

Rehabilitation is best defined as giving the disabled person the right help in the right place and at the right time. The disabled person and/or his or her representative have an important role in ensuring this, and I welcome the painstaking work that has been done in another place.

With regard to subsection (4), to which my hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo) referred, for perfectly acceptable reasons the procedures for the appointment of representatives have not been fully worked out. The clause is, of course, designed to give the DHSS sufficient flexibility in writing the regulations. I am sure that the Minister will want to respond to my hon. Friend's important points.

The most important issue is whether we can extract from the Minister dates for the implementation of each clause and a commitment to allocate the necessary resources. I want strongly to press the issue at this first opportunity.

My hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West referred to the Prime Minister's letter to me of 24 April, in which she said:

> "The Government have made it clear that, if the Bill is enacted, it would not be possible to make commencement orders to bring into effect the provisions of the Bill which have significant financial implications until such time as the necessary funds could be made available."

That is just not good enough. I hope that the Minister will now give us much better news than that conveyed by the Prime Minister. For this and other key parts of the Bill to lie impotently on the statute book, without being brought into force, would be widely seen as a betrayal of the many thousands of people with disabilities whose initiative and lobbying helped to create this important and humane Bill. I welcome the work done by Lady Masham and others on both sides of the House in the other place and urge the Minister now to give us the best possible guidance that he can on implementation and the provision of resources.

The Minister for Social Security (Mr. Tony Newton): I, too, begin be extending my congratulations to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on his success in steering the Bill to this position, which we hope is almost the last stage before royal assent, to all the hon. Members and people who have been mentioned in the debate who have played an important and supportive part and to my noble Friends, who were rightly mentioned, for their work in the other place.

The hon. Member for Monklands, West made what for him must count, I suppose, as a slightly acid remark about how we might have had fewer amendments in the other place if the Government had behaved differently earlier in the Commons. I do not want to sully this morning's proceedings by engaging in an argument along those lines.

Although this is unquestionably the Bill of the hon. Member for Monklands, West, the Government have clutched it to their hearts with considerable enthusiasm, as reflected in the devoted work of DHSS officials, to which the hon. Gentleman rightly played tribute. I wish to add to that tribute. I was in some confusion when contemplating this debate as to whether the hon. Gentleman or I was supposed to be moving that the House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment. I am sure that it is appropriate that the hon. Gentleman should have done so. That is the spirit in which I and my right hon. and hon. Friends approached the Bill, although I would have been happy to have undertaken that task.

The hon. Member for Monklands, West has already explained that the main substantive change to this part of the Bill, introduced in another place, is that the clause now spells out in more detail the Secretary of State's power to make provision by regulations for the appointment of representatives for disabled people who, because of mental or physical incapacity, are unable to appoint someone themselves. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Health said on Report that further consultation with the Bill's sponsors would be needed on that matter in relation to the Bill as it then stood. I am delighted that those consultations have produced the reasonably satisfactory outcome which we now have before us. We do now genuinely have a sound legislative basis for the provision of representatives for disabled people.

Hon. Members have raised many points during the brief proceeding. Mr. Deputy Speaker, you have kindly spared me the task of pointing out to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo) that the inverted commas at the end correspond with the inverted commas at the beginning. That is not a matter which need detain the House for long. For all I know it may be that the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar has some other motives for raising these points which are, at the moment, obscure to me.

Mr. Mikardo: Heaven forbid.

Mr. Newton: I will not speculate further on that.

The hon. Member for Bow and Poplar did raise some other points, especially in relation to subsection 4 of the new clause, about the types of person, other than medical practitioners, whom we might envisage being involved. We had in mind carers and relatives in particular. However, there will be full consultations on the details of the use of the powers in that subsection. He also asked about the reference to health boards and why they were not defined. The reference to health boards was deleted because it has been included in the general definitional clause 12 under amendment 78.

The child care aspect of the clause was raised by the hon. Member for Monklands, West. I used to be, although have not been for some time now, the Minister responsible for child care matters. If one starts to look into the complexity of current child care law and the various provisions under which children may be taken into care and the associated provisions, they are of almost incredible complexity. It is a pity that the Department has not spotted every last arcane corner of this aspect in its work, but I cannot say that I am entirely surprised. We shall certainly seek to remedy any defects that there may prove to be in the legislation which, as the hon. Gentleman said, the Government are hoping to undertake in relation to child care law generally. Meanwhile, I accept what he said about the need for careful consultation and we shall seek to meet any of those tidying up points in the way that I have described.

The hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) asked about the proposed Subsection (4)(b) and what we have in mind there. We are not proposing a compulsory duty on local authorities to set up arrangements for appointing representatives for people unable to act. We feel that that should be left to local decision in the light of local priorities. I hope that that does not come as a surprise to the hon. Gentleman because my understanding is that that has been made clear to the Bill's sponsors throughout all the proceedings.

Mr. Wigley: I am afraid that it does come as somewhat of a surprise because, at earlier stages of discussion, we made our belief clear that the right to representation should be a right to a disabled person. If that person, because of his or her disability, cannot exercise that right, it should not be any less of a right. That requires there to be a responsibility either for a local authority or somebody else to make that appointment. I am not splitting hairs as to who should be doing it, but I am absolutely certain that somebody should be doing it.

It comes as a bit of a shock at this late stage to understand that it will be left to the whim of a local authority. The local authority may not use the powers available and disabled people would miss out. It may be too late at this stage of the Bill to change anything in terms of the provisions of legislation but I press the Minister strongly to think further on this matter. It does not put an additional cost on local authorities. It is a duty that can be put on them very reasonably and disabled people would expect that to happen.

Mr. Newton: I note what the hon. Gentleman said and I will think further about it. He knows me well enough to know that it would be my hope and expectation that these provisions should be used. However, we have to think with some care before deciding to go down the track of compulsion against the background of a position in which, whatever resources are made available local authorities will have a range of decisions to make about the balance of priorities and the way in which they use particular provisions and provide services generally. However, I note, not merely as a routine gesture, the comments that the hon. Gentleman has made and the strength with which he feels about this matter.

Mr. Wigley: In case I have misunderstood more in relation to these provisions, could the Minister confirm that a disabled person who is capable of appointing a representative does have that as of right, under the provisions of the Bill? What we are saying is that the right exists without question for people capable of exercising it and it is only those most in need and who are incapable of exercising it who will not have it as a right.

Mr. Newton: That is a slightly tendentious way of putting it. The hon. Gentleman is certainly right in respect of the right of disabled people to appoint representatives. The issue is whether we should impose a duty on local authorities of the kind he described in relation to those unable to appoint representatives for themselves. There is probably very little between us. Indeed, there is probably nothing between us about what we would like to see. However, I would not wish to disguise from the hon. Gentleman that at this moment it is not in our mind to impose that duty on local authorities. I shall reflect further on what he has said although, manifestly, there is now no further opportunity for amending the Bill.

The main thrust of the remarks from virtually every direction, certainly from the hon. Member for Monklands, West and the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris), concerned the question of implementation of this clause and other provisions in the Bill. There is no doubt that the representation provision will have clear resource implications for local authorities and, if the provisions are extended to them, for health authorities. At this stage I cannot attempt to give a precise estimate of what those costs might be because that is something that needs to be assessed in further consultation with the authorities concerned. It would be wrong for me to attempt to second-guess the outcome of that further work in advance.

The House knows already, because it was said on several occasions during the proceedings in the House and, no doubt in the other place, that the total annual cost of implementing the Bill has been estimated to be something in excess of £100 million in a full year. That is not just a figure that the Government have dragged out of the air in order to show some of the difficulties with which we are faced. It rests to a significant extent on the figure that the local authorities have placed on the provisions. It is also clear that the cost of implementing the representation provisions could represent a substantial proportion of that total.

It is only honest for me to say to the House that against that background I cannot, at this stage, give an undertaking as to when resources might be available to bring this part of the Bill into effect. I have already said that I sympathise with and share entirely the wish of hon. Members to press ahead as soon as possible with implementation of the Bill, and I hope to be able to be a little more specific and helpful about some later parts of the Bill that we shall be considering. I have to say, however, that it would be wrong to impose extra burdens on local authorities and health authorities under this part of the Bill and others, which have significant resource implications, until we can ensure that the resources are available to carry them out. It is against that background that we shall have to consider when we are able to bring these provisions into effect.

Mr. Alfred Morris: The Prime Minister appeared to say that this and other parts of the Bill requiring extra finance will not be implemented for the forseeable future. Will the Minister say when he expects this part of the Bill to be brought into effect by commencement order?

Mr. Newton: I do not think that I can add to what I have already said, which is that the timing of bringing into effect these provisions must depend upon when we are able to ensure that local authorities, and health authorities if the extension takes place, have the necessary resources to carry through the extension. We shall do our best to ensure that we reach that position as soon as possible. I cannot give any undertaking of what "as soon as possible" means in this context. I mean that we shall be working with a view to making progress as rapidly as we reasonably can.

It is in the light of these considerations that we shall have to consider the timing of further consultation on the possible extension of the representation provision to health authorities and to other local authority services, and on the appointment regulations. It may be that there will be work there that can be undertaken in the course of refining what the cost of implementing the proposals would be. That is something to which we shall give careful consideration.

I am sorry not to be able to be more forthcoming with right hon. and hon. Members. I hope that they will take account of the fact that we have been making progress in a variety of ways. If I were in a different frame of mind, I would take up one of the remarks of the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar. We have been making progress in various ways in improving both benefits and services for the disabled, and most recently in the extension of the invalid care allowance to married women. I resist any implication by anyone on either side of the House that the Government have not shown their concern to maintain the pace of development in this area.

There are several hon. Members who know as well as anyone that the range of demands, requests and pressures, and the scope for developing both services and social security benefits for the disabled is almost infinite. Careful choices and difficult decision are involved. We shall continue to make what progress we can, but I cannot put a date on the particular piece of progress that we are discussing.

I welcome unreservedly the fact that these provisions are to go onto the statute book. I hope that their mere existence on the statute book will have a helpful effect in causing local authorities to think about the way in which they seek to meet the perceived needs and wishes of disabled people in the way in which they provide services.

a local authority shall decide whether the needs of the disabled person call for the provision by the authority of any services in accordance with section 2(1) of the 1970 Act (provision of welfare services).".

No. 56, in clause 5, page 9, line 36, at end insert—

(3) Section 2(6A) shall apply for the purposes of subsection (2) above as it applies for the purposes of section

2(6), but as if any reference to the disabled person or his authorised representative were a reference to the person mentioned in subsection (2).".

Lords amendments Nos. 13, 18 and 24 involve privilege.

Mr. Clarke: We are now considering a group of amendments to the clauses which are concerned with local authority assessments in general, and in particular those under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970. My right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) is rightly remembered for his immense contribution in piloting that measure through the House.

Clause 2 was introduced by the Government on Report, and it is fair to say that its substance was widely welcomed when canvassed in the consultation document. On reflection, however, the drafting was seen to be unnecessarily restrictive and would probably have caused more problems for local authorities if there were arguments as to whether a disabled person was entitled to a review.

Broadly speaking, amendments Nos. 11 to 18 ensure that a disabled person or his representative may receive a written statement if they request it after any assessment and may ask for a review of any decision in any circumstances. I shall refer only explicitly to the substantive amendments. Amendment No. 12 gives a right to a written statement even if there had been no representations by a disabled person or his representative before the assessment.

Amendment No. 13 requires the statement to specify the needs of the disabled person as well as the services to be provided to meet them. This may seem a minor clarification but it will prove useful if there is a dispute as to how the needs should be met — for example the common choice between a stairlift or downstairs adaptations on which there is often disagreement between disabled people and the social services. In combination with amendments Nos. 14 and 18, it provides the right of review on anything in the statement.

Amendments Nos. 19 to 23 clarify the right of either a disabled person or his representative to assistance if either or both have a communication handicap. Amendment No. 56 to clause 5 extends this right to communication assistance to carers during a local authority assessment of the disabled person. New subsection (6A), introduced by amendment No. 22, attempts to meet some of the concern expressed principally by the British Deaf Association. In determining both the need for communication assistance and the nature of that assistance the local authority must have regard to the views expressed by the disabled person or his representative, who are, of course, uniquely qualified to identify what is required.

During the passage of the Bill through both Houses there has been some confusion over the right to ask for an assessment for services under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970, in particular in relation to the carers' clause, where many right hon. and hon. Members believed that it was essential for carers to have the independent right to ask for an assessment of the person for whom they were caring. The purpose of this was to prevent their own possible breakdown and enable the social services to fill the gaps so that the disabled person could continue living in his own home on the basis of genuine shared care.

To be frank, I never really understood Ministers' objections to the original carers' clause, and I said so at the time; but, being a reasonable person, despite the acid comments which I might make from time to time, I accepted the half loaf that the Government offered on Report and rested content with three and a half of the four key points I was asking the House to accept then. During discussions since then, however, the Department agreed to introduce the new clause after clause 2. Happily it is one of the most comprehensible clauses in the Bill and puts beyond doubt the duty of a local authority to assess the need of a disabled person for any of the services listed in section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 on request of the disabled person, his or her authorised representative or the carer as defined in clause 5.

Apart from the carers' issue a problem has arisen, certainly for lay people and even for some lawyers, from the complex drafting of section 2 of the 1970 Act. Although the best legal advice and, indeed, the departmental circular issued in August 1970, has always maintained that a local authority has a duty to make an assessment, this is not stated clearly in that section, and as recently as February 1986 a disabled person received a letter from a chief executive's department which flatly denied that the duty existed.

Baroness Masham quoted at length from this letter when moving this new clause in another place, and I shall not repeat it here. I shall only restate my thanks to Ministers for responding to the concern expressed. I can now claim to have at least three and three quarters of what I was seeking on Report—and even a bit more.

However, there are still some fears, among disabled people that clause 5 could be misinterpreted and encourage local authorities to look to residential care as a solution rather than to provide the domiciliary help specified in the 1970 Act. I hope that the Minister will give an assurance that his Department's circular will be explicit on this point, and state unreservedly that the purpose of the Act is to enable disabled people to remain living in their own homes as long as they wish to do so.

Finally, on implementation, the new clause should come into force immediately as it is simply a confirmation of the existing law. There should be no difficulties. Not to do so might increase the confusion as some people might think assessments were not necessary until it was in force. I also hope that clauses 2 and 5 could come into force next April, as there is nothing totally new involved. Many local authorities, all of which have been widely consulted, will have to make only minimal adaptations to their procedures, although some will obviously have to take their responsibilities under the existing law more seriously and thereby incur greater expense.

Mr. Mikardo: I am bound to say, with all the charity that I can muster, that amendment No. 11 is nonsensical. It replaces one definition with another that says exactly the same thing, but takes much longer to say it. We can always be sure that when departmental lawyers start to draft amendments they will ensure that the revised wording is a good deal longer than the wording that went before, even if it says the same thing.

In this case, four words are replaced by 23. Let me paraphrase what the two versions say. The first says, "on any occasion". The second one says, "on any particular occasion or any other occasion." Can anybody tell me, in terms of the well of English, pure and undefiled, what difference there is between those phrases? I can find no difference,. What would be the difference between a ticket from London Transport that said, "This ticket entitles you to travel to any station on the system", and one that said, "This ticket entitles you to travel to Piccadily Circus or any other station on the system."? What would be the difference between my referring to every hon. Member and referring to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar and any other hon. Member? This is just a piece of normal, legalistic verbal diarrhoea that comes from the recesses of departmental meetings.

Amendment No. 14 is the only one of their Lordships' amendments with which I disagree, but because I do not wish to waste any time I shall not press my strong disagreement to a Division. The amendment takes away the obligation, when a disabled person has authorised representations that have been turned down, for information that he has the right to make further representations to be given to him. I cannot see any justification for that. It is contrary to all our traditions.

I can take a parallel from the Minister's Department. If an insurance officer rejects a claim, the notification of the rejection of the claim is accompanied by a notification that the claimant is allowed to appeal against that rejection. In some cases, for example in applications for immigration or entry certificates under the immigration rules, the rejections of representations have the notification that an individual is allowed to make representations to another authority.

Do we not want handicapped people to exercise their rights? What is the good of giving them rights if we do not facilitate the exercise of those rights? We must remember that we are talking about people who are badly handicapped. In the nature of things, many handicapped people and their representatives will not know, when their application is turned down, that they have a right to come back. Why should we not tell them? This is an infringement of civil liberties. If we had been in other circumstances than midday on Friday, I should have wanted to divide the House against the amendment.

As in the previous group of amendments, if this group is implemented, it will involve some expenditure, perhaps more than that occasioned under the previous group. When dealing with that group, the Minister said — doubtless he will say the same thing on this group when pressed — that he could give no guarantees about implementation. It is a little hollow for him to congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on all the work that he has done and his achievement in getting the Bill so far if he will not provide the wherewithal for the Bill to be effective. My hon. Friend cannot provide the wherewithal. It must come from public funds. Although local authorities are involved, we know that with the inextricable weaving of local and national finances, the extent to which the Bill will be implemented, if at all, depends on the extent to which the Minister can chisel a bit more money out of one who is probably the most uncaring Chancellor of the Exchequer this century.

Unless the Minister is prepared to have a bash at the Chancellor, his congratulations to my hon. Friend are hollow. It is only my charitable nature that prevents me from using a more perjorative word than that. I urge the Minister to try to put money from the Chancellor where his mouth is.

Mr. Alfred Morris: I intervene to support what my hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) said about implementation of clauses 2 and 5 and to endorse his submission that the clauses could and should come into force at the beginning of the next financial year, in April 1987. We are at the beginning of the Public Expenditure Survey Committee annual round. There is thus plenty of time for additional money needed by local authorities to be built into the rate support grant. Will the Minister be pressing for that to happen? In the words of my hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo), will he be tryng his best to influence the Treasury fully to implement the Bill at the earliest possible date?

There are some who feel that the local authority associations have been "bidding" up the costs of clause 2 for wholly understandable reasons. They see a close parallel with the Government's volte face over the invalid care allowance. As soon as the Government were forced by the European Court to extend the benefit to married women, the cost of doing so fell both inexplicably and dramatically.

I am convinced that once the Bill becomes an Act and the local authorities and the Department of Health and Social Security start serious negotiations, within the scope of next year's social services expenditure, the hon. Gentleman will end up with an estimate of its cost which he will be able to persuade his colleagues is both acceptable and excellent value for money. Certainly it would be far better value for money than most of the substantial amounts that his Department currently pays out in board-and-lodging payments to rather dubious private homes.

The Government have cut social security spending by £11.1 billion, while giving £4.4 billion in tax cuts to those earning more than £30,000 a year. When they came to power, the Government promised to "single out" disabled people for special help. Yet all of us, on both sides of the House, know from our mail bags and from our meetings with disabled people that many of them complain today of being "singled out" for special hardship.

My hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West referred to new subsection (7), which meets some of the concern that has been expressed by the British Deaf Association. In determining both the need for communication assistance and the nature of that assistance, the local authority must have regard to the views expressed by the disabled person or his or her representative. I am extremely glad that there has been some, even if still an inadequate, response to the very important representations made to all hon. Members by the British Deaf Association.

I turn to clause 4, which is about services under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970. This clause, inserted in the other place, confirms the right of a disabled person to an assessment of his need for any of the services listed in section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The right hon. Gentleman is now anticipating matters that are set down for debate later on. He will note that amendments Nos. 34, 35 and so on deal with clause 4, but we have not yet reached them.

Mr. Morris: I am very grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. My purpose was to respond to the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West, who told the House of a letter that was written to a disabled person by a chief executive, in which he said that there was no duty to assess. My hon. Friend was right to emphasise his deep concern about that letter. There is a duty to assess, and clause 4 puts the matter beyond doubt. It also confirms the right of a carer to ask for an assessment of a disabled person for whom he is caring, which goes some way towards restoring the essence of the original clause 5, which the Government insisted upon deleting on Report in this House.

I hope that the Minister will respond to the point made by my hon. Friend and that he will return to the vital questions of implementation and resources.

Mr. Newton: The hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) has very clearly and helpfully set out the purpose of the various provisions that we are discussing and I shall not attempt to go over the same ground. As he made clear, a written statement can now be requested, whether or not the disabled person made representations before the assessment was made, and subsequent representations can now be made if the local authority has indicated that it is prepared to meet some but not all of the needs which the disabled person himself or herself has identified.

I shall take note of what the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo) said in one of his engaging and frequent interventions during our proceedings this morning about amendment No. 14. However, if he studies the affects of amendments Nos. 11 to 18 he will see that representation rights, far from being reduced, as he half implied in his remarks, have been extended by the work that has been undertaken in another place in the co-operative spirit that has pervaded most of our proceedings. I am sure that every right hon. and hon. Member will welcome that.

I welcome in particular the amendment that, as has been acknowledged, has been made largely in response to representations by the British Deaf Association not least because, as the Scottish or near-Scottish hon. Member who is present in the Chamber will be interested to hear. The hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) recently made a substantial expedition to Rothesay on the Isle of Bute for two hours on one morning to address the triennial congress of the British Deaf Association. I am well aware of the importance that it attaches to some of these provisions and to improving the rights of disabled people generally. It is good that we have been able to respond to its interests and representations. That provision requires local authorities, when considering whether interpretation services are required, to have regard to the views of the disabled person on the need for such services and, if considered appropriate, what they should be.

I apologise for having commented in the absence of the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar on his first point, but the other point that he raised with me related to the reason for the drafting of amendment No. 11 in that particular way. I have been advised to say that——

Mr. Mikardo: The hon. Gentleman does not believe it, does he?

Mr. Newton: I do not think that I am qualified to comment on the draftsman's choice of words. What is apparent, though, is that neither I nor my officials have the faintest notion of why the draftsman chose to draft the amendment in that way. I shall not, therefore, attempt to go further, other than to say that, so far as I can see, it does not damage anyone's interests. It may improve the interests of lawyers by making the legislation slightly more complex than otherwise it would have been. I shall draw the attention of the draftsman to the hon. Gentleman's observations. May I pay a small, informal tribute to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar for the remarkable skill with which he focuses his mind on some of these points, at what I take to be reasonably short notice, and then comes out with some remarkably good points.

On the implementation of clause 2, as the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar expected, I have to repeat what I said about clause 1. There will be substantial resource costs for local authorities. I resist the suggestion that the Government's approach is in any sense hollow. I hope that I carry those Opposition Members who are concerned with the Bill with me on the proposition that, throughout, the Government have made it clear that their co-operation with the Bill necessarily rested on the need for commencement orders which the Government would have to consider in the light of when resources could be made available. There has been no deception or disingenuousness about that approach throughout the Bill. The Government have proceeded on that basis.

The right hon. Member for Manchester Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) referred to the basis on which local authorities made their estimates. Whatever else may lie between us, we clearly need to have a fairly good estimate of the likely costs before deciding when to make commencement orders. I shall not speculate whether the right hon. Gentleman is right in his virtually explicit suggestion that local authorities have exaggerated the costs of the clause. However, it would be helpful to refine those estimates and reach ones that he would be prepared to accept as more realistic and we regard as reliable. We must have a reasonably reliable estimate before we can decide whether to bring the clause into effect.

I hope that I made it clear earlier that I shall, with best endeavour, attempt to ensure that we reach that stage as soon as possible. The right hon. Gentleman cannot seriously expect me to discuss the nature of any exchanges within central Government that might underlie that process.

I am pleased to say that I can be more forthcoming about the new clause. It puts beyond doubt that local authorities have a duty to consider the need of the disabled for services under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act, if so requested by the disabled person, his representative or his carer. Some concern has been expressed that the current law is not entirely unambiguous. We were pleased to co-operate with the Bill's sponsors in drafting the new clause to put the matter beyond doubt. We intend to bring the provision into effect at the earliest convenient opportunity. I understand that local authorities may, unless there is good reason, find it convenient for those parts of the Bill that can be implemented soon to be brought into effect together at the beginning of the next financial year. We shall aim at a date of 1 April, 1987, which is what the sponsors want.

Clause 5, which relates to carers, was discussed at length on Report. I undertook to consider whether its intention could be clarified by changes in the drafting. After careful consideration we decided that the suggested changes would substantially widen the effects of the clause. I understand that the Bill's sponsors accept that the wording should remain substantially unchanged. However, I note the helpful comment of the hon. Member for Monklands, West, who said that he thought that he was getting three and three quarters out of the five that he wanted.

Following the commitment given by my right hon. Friend on Report, an amendment has been tabled to ensure that interpretation services are provided if carers are unable to communicate because of disability and the local authority needs to communicate with them to determine whether they can continue to provide care. I hope that it will be possible to implement that clause not later than April 1987, in line with the sponsors' request.

The hon. Member for Monklands, West asked about clarifying the general purpose of clause 5. The aim is not to encourage residential care, but to help people who so wish to stay in their own homes, if that is the best solution to their problems. I emphasise that the overall objective of this clause, together with all provisions relating to services for the disabled, is to ensure that we find the best answer to the problems of the individual. Although we all accept that more often than at present people should stay in their own homes, that cannot always be the case. The Bill cannot eliminate the need for residential care, and I am sure that the hon. Gentleman was not implying that the disabled should be kept in their own homes regardless of considerations that might mean that they should be in residential care. The general thrust is to improve the opportunities and services for people to stay in their own homes if that is what they want, so there is no difference of opinion between us on that.

The right hon. Member for Wythenshawe strayed into the somewhat more contentious area of alleged cuts in social security and the position of the disabled. I simply do not accept what he said, but I shall not spend much time on that argument. Far from there having been cuts, the social security budget has risen substantially in real terms, as has the overall value of benefits paid to the disabled for a variety of reasons, including the increased numbers of disabled people receiving benefits, the real value of which have increased. The Government have made a number of significant improvements, not least in the real value of mobility allowance, by removing the invalidity trap that affected many people on supplementary benefits, by introducing the severe disablement allowance and by extending the invalid care allowance. Therefore, although I do not wish to turn the debate into an argument about Government policy, I felt that I had to explain why I simply could not accept what the right hon. Gentleman said.

I welcome and endorse the Lords amendments and hope that the House will approve them.

Clause 3

PERSONS LEAVING SPECIAL EDUCATION

Lords amendment: No. 25, in page 6, line 27, leave out subsections (3) and (4) and insert—

(3) Where an opinion has in pursuance of subsection (1) or (2) been given in the case of a child that he is a disabled person and it subsequently appears to the responsible authority—

(a) that the child will cease to receive full-time education at school on a particular date and will not subsequently be receiving full-time education at a further education establishment, or

(b) that the child will cease to receive full-time education at such an establishment on a particular date, and (in either case) that he will be under the age of 19 on the relevant date, the authority shall give to the appropriate officer written notification for the purposes of subsection (4) of the date referred to in paragraph (a) or (b); and any such notification shall be given not later than the relevant date and not earlier than four months before that date.

In this subsection "the relevant date" means the date falling 8 months before the date referred to in paragraph (a) or (b) above.

(3A) If at any time it appears to a local education authority

(a) that a person has on a particular date ceased to receive full-time education as mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (3) or will cease to do so on a particular date falling less than 8 months after that time, and

(b) that no notification of that date has been given to the appropriate officer under that subsection with respect to that person, but

(c) that, had that or any other authority (as the responsible authority for the time being) been aware of his intentions 8 months or more before that date, they would have been required to give notification of that date under that subsection with respect to him, that authority shall, as soon as is reasonably practicable, give to the appropriate officer written notification for the purposes of subsection (4) of that date.

(4) When the appropriate officer receives a notification given with respect to any person under subsection (3) or (3A), he shall (subject to subsections (4A) and (4B)) make arrangements for the local authority of which he is an officer to carry out an assessment of the needs of that person with respect to the provision by that authority of any statutory services for that person in accordance with any of the welfare enactments, and any such assessment shall be carried out—

(a) in the case of a notification under subsection (3), not later than the end of the period of 5 months beginning with the date of receipt of the notification, or

(b) in the case of a notification under subsection (3A), before the date specified in the notification, if reasonably practicable, and in any event not later than the end of the period referred to in paragraph (a) above.

(4A) If—

(a) a notification has been given to the appropriate officer with respect to any person under subsection (3) or (3A), but

(b) it subsequently appears to a local education authority that that person will be receiving full-time education (whether at school or at a further education establishment) at a time later than the date specified in the notification, the authority shall give written notification of the relevant facts to that officer as soon as is reasonably practicable; and on receiving any such notification that officer shall cease to be required under subsection (4) to make arrangements for the assessment of the needs of the person in question (but without prejudice to the operation of that subsection in relation to any further notification given with respect to that person under subsection (3) or (3A)).

[Mr. Newton]

(4B) Nothing in subsection (4) shall require the appropriate officer to make arrangements for the assessment of the needs of a person—

(a) if, having attained the age of 16, he has requested that such arrangements should not be made under that subsection; or

(b) if, being under that age, his parent or guardian has made such a request.

(4C) Regulations under paragraph 4 of Schedule 1 to the Education Act 1981 (assessments and statements of special educational needs) may, in relation to the transfer of statements made under section 7 of that Act, make such provision as appears to the Secretary of State to be necessary or expedient in connection with the preceding provisions of this section."

Mr. Tom Clarke: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this we shall discuss the following Lords amendments: No. 26, in page 6, line 42, leave out from beginning to end of line 9 on page 7 and insert—

"the appropriate officer", in relation to the child or person referred to in the provision of this section in question, means such officer as may be appointed for the purposes of this section by the local authority for the area in which that child or person is for the time being ordinarily resident;"

No. 27, in page 7, line 12, leave out "college of further education" and insert "further education establishment".

Mr. Clarke: Although the amendments to this clause are long and complex, they are necessary to give substance to the principle accepted by the House on Report—that there should be a social services assessment before disabled children leave full-time education either at school or a further education establishment.

The notification by LEAs to the social services of the school leaving date must take place not earlier than 12 months after, and not later than eight months before, that date. The social services assessment must be arranged within five months of that notification. Therefore, it should be undertaken at least three months before the young person leaves school, which should give the authorities time to make whatever practical arrangements are necessary.

The great bulk of amendment No. 25 concerns what should happen if it is not possible to give eight months' notice because of a late decision or because a child moves school to another area after the procedures in subsections (1) and (2) have taken place. The same is true of the new clause introduced by amendment No. 33, which requires the local education authority to keep under review the expected school leaving dates of disabled children covered by clause 3 and which, in conjunction with amendment No. 29, specifies that the LEA responsible for a disabled person when he leaves full-time education at school shall remain responsible during his time in further education.

It is fair to say that further education is still a very grey area, especially for disabled people. Further education was omitted from the 1981 Act, partly on the understanding that a review of the legal basis of further education was in progress. That review has apparently evaporated, and the hole identified by the Warnock report is still there. The new clause, however, gives me hope that the DES is beginning to look favourably on maintaining statements of disabled children during further education. Indeed, it is the obvious logical next step.

Only two items have been lost in the transformation of this clause, and I should like to mention them. In the original Bill, the notification could take place only with the consent of the parent or disabled person. Subsection (4B) now allows only the parent or young person to decline the subsequent assessment—the previous notification will be automatic. I hope that LEAs will be encouraged to give parents or the disabled student full information about the Bill's requirements at that earlier stage.

The second loss—I understand for legal reasons—is that students who are over 19 on the date eight months before they are due to leave are excluded from the Bill. I believe that the guidance to LEAs and social services departments should ask them to be included, albeit on a non-statutory basis. I hope that the Minister will be able to comment on this.

I should like to thank the Minister and his officials for their hard work on the complex drafting of this clause. I hope that he will answer any detailed questions on the wording. On implementation, which is also crucial here, it seems to me that, as the whole clause depends on the formal opinion as to whether the child is disabled given by the social services under subsection (1) or (2) soon after his 14th birthday, it is absolutely essential for the clause to be brought into force immediately so that the whole process can begin.

I remind the House that the purpose of subsection (1) was simply to exclude non-disabled children from the later procedures—in most cases it will be obvious to everyone that a child is disabled. I hope, therefore, that severely disabled children now over 14 who may never fall within subsection (1) will not necessarily be excluded from the benefits of notification and assessment. I should have thought that LEAs could be encouraged to operate notification of obviously disabled children and young people informally this autumn, and social services departments could be asked to make assessments before they leave school or college next summer. I shall listen to the Minister with great interest and care.

Mr. Alfred Morris: Although clause 5 has more than doubled in length, the effect of the changes is minor, which will perhaps remind the House of one of the points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo). I agree with the Minister's tribute to my hon. Friend. We have had a virtuoso performance from him today.

One slight disappointment that I have is that, for legal reasons, under subsection (3), the clause will apply only to disabled people who are under 19 on the day eight months prior to their presumed leaving date. The Department of Education and Science has informally promised to advise local education authorities to apply the same procedures for people just over 19, and the DHSS has promised to do the same for social services departments whose duties under subsection (4) apply only to those formally notified under subsection (3). It would be helpful if that commitment were to be stated in the House today. I hope that the Minister will do so when he replies.

Mr. Newton: As the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) explained, the amendments to this part of the Bill, although a further formidable compliment to the powers of the draftsman, basically tidy up the Bill. The most significant change has been to reduce the advance notification of the expected school leaving date for a disabled child or young person from nine months to eight months.

Many tributes have been paid this morning and perhaps I might add another – to the Department of Education and Science officials who have also worked hard, especially in respect of this part of the Bill. They have undoubtedly contributed to it. The hon. Gentleman referred to the position of disabled young people who remain in full-time education after the age of 19. Formally, clause 3 covers only disabled people in full-time education under the age of 19 on the date that notification is due. However, if they become 19 during the notice period it will not affect the duty of the appropriate officer to make the necessary assessments under the welfare enactments. The reason for that restriction is because full-time schooling under the Education Act 1944 and the making of statements for those at school under the Education Act 1981 is geared to the maximum age of 19 years. It is necessarily within those constraints that the amendments have been drafted.

However, the Government have no wish to deprive disabled young people who stay on in full-time education after the age of 19 of rights which they would have enjoyed had they decided to leave full-time education at 19. We shall make that clear in guidance to local education authorities and social services departments. I hope that that is a helpful assurance to the House.

I turn to the now hallowed issue of implementation. If possible, we should like to bring the provisions into effect in time to benefit disabled young people leaving full-time education in the summer of 1987, that is by the autumn of this year. We shall be consulting urgently with local authority associations about achieving that. It has been pointed out that children leaving school next summer could not in any case fall within the scope of clause 3(1)(a), which requires an opinion as to whether a child is disabled to be recorded at the first annual review of the statement by the local education authority after his 14th birthday. However, we shall consider with the local authority associations whether any administrative way can be found of enabling children who have already at the time the clause comes into effect had this review to benefit from the notification and assessment provisions provided for in the later parts of the clause. I hope that the House will find that assurance helpful.

The hon. Member for Monklands, West asked about the duty of local education authorities to give parents and young people full information about assessments. I am happy to give him an assurance that we shall aim to cover the point that local education authorities should be encouraged to give full information about assessments to both parents and young people in the guidance which we hope to issue. I hope that that will all be of help to the House and that it will accede to the motion to accept the amendment.

PERSONS DISCHARGED FROM HOSPITAL

Mr. Clarke: Clause 4 has perhaps seen more changes of substance, as opposed to drafting, than any other clause in the Bill, so I shall spend rather more time explaining individual amendments than I have on other clauses. I should first, however, like to remind the House of the changes to the clause during its passage through this House. In the original Bill the requirement was for hospital managers to inform the social services 28 days before anyone was discharged who had "been receiving medical treatment for mental disorder as an in-patient for a period of, or periods totalling not less than, six months in the preceding twelve months."

The social services were then required to make assessment of their needs within 28 days.

On Report the Government produced a clause which simply required notification of discharge by hosptial to social services — a procedure described by the Association of Metropolitan Authorities as a waste of paper. I had already reluctantly agreed to drop the totalling of short periods and tabled a new clause which required hospital managers to arrange an assessment before a person was discharged. It had been agreed in discussions with the associations that the initiative should be taken by the hospital. My new clause was accepted by the Government and the House.

As the Minister for Health said, there were certain illogical aspects in the drafting, although the purpose was clear. In particular, the clause as it stood required the hospitals to arrange an assessment of a person's social services needs, but there was no duty on the social services to co-operate.

It would, perhaps, have been easy for the Minister to have taken a minimalist approach; but I am delighted to say he did not do so. Encouraged by the associations — the Association of County Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the National Association of Health Authorities — who clearly wanted an effective clause, agreement was reached on the amendments which we are considering.

Amendments Nos. 34, 35, 38 and 39 require the hospital managers to send written notification of the date of discharge to the local authority of the area in which the patient is to live and also to the district health authority and the local education authority if the patient is under 19. I should say in explanation that in most cases the "hospital managers" will be a district health authority and there are exclusions throughout the clause to prevent them informing themselves or consulting themselves if the same DHA will continue to be responsible for the patient.

Following notification, amendment No. 43 ensures that each authority will be required to take action as follows. Under subsection (2A) the district health authority must assess the patient's need for services under the National Health Service Act 1977 in consultation with the hospital managers. Under subsection (2B) the social services department must assess the need for services under the "welfare enactments" and, of course, in this case clause 2 will also apply.

Subsection (2C) also places the additional duty on each of these authorities to co-operate with one another in making the arrangements for assessments. In many cases authorities may wish to undertake joint assessments; but it was not felt right to tie their hands in primary legislation and tie the practical arrangements to a precise formula which may not be credible or operable in all circumstances.

Subsection (2D) requires both these assessments to be undertaken before the discharge, or as soon as possible after discharge, following the order of a mental health review tribunal or, in Scotland, the Mental Welfare Commission or the sheriff. Where a discharge is properly planned there should be no fear of it being held up by this clause. As the Mental Health Act Commission asserted in its first biennial report in 1985:

"Discharge should be a process, not an event."

Where the temptation might be to make an overnight decision to discharge someone, the clause will ensure adequate planning for that person. In any event, subsection (3) in amendment No. 44 allows patients to waive their right to an assessment.

The duty on the local education authority is not so clear. I understand that if the patient is under 16 the procedures under the Education Act 1981 will apply. The LEA will either initiate an assessment of the child's special educational needs or amend an existing statement. What will happen if the patient is over 16 but under 19 is less clear, but perhaps the Minister can clarify this in his speech.

Subsection (3A) in amendment No. 44 is a technical amendment to stop assessments being triggered by transfers between hospitals and also to confirm that time spent in different hospitals will be added together for the purpose of the six months mentioned in subsection (1).

The remainder of the amendments are either technical or are necessary for the application of the clause to Scotland.

The clause introduces significant new duties to make assessments and in view of the dearth of provisions for people who are mentally ill in many parts of the country there will — rightly — be a knock-on effect on services and some authorities will need to incur substantial expenditure. Nevertheless, I am sceptical about some of the estimates that I have seen which seem to involve building new mini-institutions for people with mental illness. I say again in connection with this clause that there will be dismay around the country if excuses are made for delaying its implementation, since the principle has now been accepted.

Assessment is fundamental to the successful discharge of long-stay patients into the community. The clause is needed immediately; indeed, it is long overdue.

Mr. Alfred Morris: We owe a special debt of gratitude to another place for its work on this part of the Bill. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) will join me in that tribute.

We are dealing with an extremely important provision. If there is a failure properly to assess a disabled person leaving hospital, he or she is all too likely to end up back in hospital rather than in the community. I know that the Minister will appreciate the importance of this part of the Bill and will do all that he can to ensure its implementation at the earliest possible date.

There has been repeated emphasis on the two vexed issues of implementation and resources. We shall return time and again to those issues to make absolutely certain that this extremely important Bill is implemented fully at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Newton: As the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) has explained, following our extensive debate on the clause on Report, another place has helped us to get the provisions into what is generally accepted to be a satisfactory form. I am particularly grateful for the hon. Gentleman's warm acknowledgement of the fact that we have all sought to get the provisions into an acceptable form and have not adopted what he calls a minimalist approach. I should certainly not wish to see such an approach.

Health authorities and social services departments are to be required to make arrangements for an assessment of the needs of a disabled person for their respective services. When they receive notification that a long-stay patient is to be discharged, the authorities and departments will be required to co-operate with each other in making the arrangements.

The hon. Member for Monklands, West asked about the duties of local education authorities if they are notified under clause 4(1)(b) of the discharge from hospital of a child or a young person aged under 19. The general purpose of the subsection is to ensure that local education authorities are in a position to discharge their responsibilities either under the Education Act 1981 or clause 3 of the Bill.

The hon. Member rightly said that in the case of a child who is at school the local education authority will be required to consider whether amendments are needed to the terms of any existing statement of special educational needs or, if no such statement exists, to consider whether the child's education needs should be assessed with a view to making a statement.

The hon. Gentleman asked me to say a little more about those over school leaving age. In the case of a child over 16 who is already subject to a statement and transfers to a full-time course of further education, the local education authority is no longer obliged under the Education Act to maintain the statement, but it will be under a duty, under clause 3, to inform the social services department in due course of the child's leaving date.

In the comparatively rare cases of children who are subject neither to the Education Act 1981 nor to clause 3 — children who are not, or have not been, subject to a statement and who either transfer to further education or cease full-time education — it will be for the social services department, under clause 4, to assess their needs.

I know that this is a slightly complex issue, but I hope that my explanation will help hon. Members and those outside the House who are following our proceedings carefully.

Predictably and understandably — I make no complaint about it — the hon. Member for Monklands, West and the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) returned again to the implementation of an important clause which I am pleased to see in the Bill.

On Report, the hon. Member for Monklands, West said that he was prepared for the implementation of this clause to be delayed slightly longer than other clauses in the Bill — although I realise that he would not expect that to be a long time — in order to allow adequate preparation. He said that he hoped that the target date would be set no later than 1988-89. I regret that, once again, I must be a little less forthcoming than I have been on one or two other clauses that we have discussed recently. As always, we are once again back in an area where resources are an important factor.

As yet, we have not come to a common view with the local authority and health authority associations on how, if at all, changes introduced to the Bill on Report, as subsequently refined in another place, will affect the overall costings. In other words, there is still a good deal of uncertainty about costings in this area and it inescapably follows from that that it is impossible for me to make any useful comments at this precise point in time about when the clause will be implemented.

However, we shall continue discussions to try to make sure that we obtain the best and most reliable estimates of what is involved as soon as possible. Then, as I have already said, we shall be looking for ways forward to achieve the speediest possible implementation, subject always to the availability of the money—in other words, finding the resources to make sure that local authorities and health authorities have them.

Mr. Alfred Morris: The Minister talked of the Bill costing an estimated £100 million. He talks about costs; we talk about net costs. Clearly, there will be savings on this part of the Bill if the right action is taken at the right time. If a person leaving hospital is not properly assessed, he or she is likely to return to hospital at far greater cost to the taxpayer than if adequate help is provided in the community. Can we be assured that full consideration will be given to the savings that will accrue if disabled people are given the right help in the right place at the right time?

Mr. Newton: The right hon. Gentleman makes an entirely legitimate point about the potential savings that might arise from some forms of expenditure under the clause. But, in doing so, he will, as I hope he will acknowledge, have to bear in mind some of the difficulties in achieving a good estimate of the cost of such provisions. Making estimates of the kind which he implies are required is a difficult and complex matter. I cannot add to what I have said. The Government are approaching the matter in the spirit of wishing to make progress as soon as possible, but I am unable to give a precise implementation date at this stage. We shall do what we can to get into a position to make a better assessment of the costs as soon as possible, which, in turn, will enable us to make a better assessment of when we may be able to make a commencement order.

Mr. Wigley: May I press the Minister a little on this because it is obviously important? I do not want any delay in the introduction of the clause to be a reason for not pressing ahead with the integration of people from long-stay hospitals into the community. There may be some who believe that it would be preferable to wait until better safeguards are available but that would be detrimental. The Under-Secretary of State wrote to me last month telling me that the average cost in England for a stay in hospital for mentally handicapped people is £227 a week and for mentally ill people, £255 a week. That shows the fairly considerable costs that there are and I should have thought that, following what the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) said a few moments ago about achieving a balance between the figures, we should try to make rapid progress in this matter.

Mr. Newton: I understand what the hon. Gentleman is saying and I can assure him that the Government are not looking for ways to diminish progress towards care in the community in the sense that he is talking about. Indeed, I think that it is fair to claim that that has advanced rapidly under the Government, especially in relation to those who were formerly in long-stay hospitals for the mentally handicapped, and, not least, in respect of children in such hospitals, where the drop in numbers has been dramatic during the past few years. We are all anxious to see that momentum sustained.

One of the other complicating factors is that much of this assessment work already goes on. It is not the practice suddenly to decant children, or indeed adults, from long-stay hospitals for the mentally handicapped without taking a look at what their needs will be in the community, and making provision for them.

Thus it is quite a complex business to assess what additional resources will be involved in implementing the clause. However, we shall be doing so as soon, and as effectively as possible. But I think that the hon. Member for Monklands, West will recognise that the task is complex. We shall not drag our feet, but I am not in a position to be more specific today.

"(2) The foregoing provisions of this section extend to Scotland only."

Mr. Clarke: We now come to the Scottish part of the Bill, and I am happy to say that most of the amendments are technical. Perhaps I should say that I have reached the "exclusively" Scottish part, as all the Bill applies to Scotland except clause 3, whose Scottish equivalent is the new clause represented by amendment No. 68. Its construction is significantly different from the English clause, because of the very different and, dare I say better, construction of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980, which seems to bridge the gap between school and further education that I mentioned in relation to clause 3.

The establishment of a future needs assessment has already been represented as a method of improving the lot of youngsters before they leave school, in that it offers an opportunity for all involved with the child's education to consider progress to date and to plan for the future. Yet in many parts of the country, including in my constituency, improvement has not been effective because the agency that must take responsibility for helping the young person in the next stage of his life, the social work department, has not been involved.

The new clause will avoid that break in the link and will provide an opportunity for improving the considerable progress that has been made over the past few years. If any right hon. and hon. Members have detailed questions to ask about the new clause, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland will no doubt be delighted to reply.

Hon. Members will recall that on Report a clause relating to joint planning in Scotland was deleted after the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mr. MacKay), promised to arrange for the introduction of a clause in the other place to provide reserve powers to put joint planning in Scotland on a statutory basis. He wished, as we all did, to include the elderly. But the powers that be have decreed that it is impossible to make the necessary amendment to the long title.

Consequently, Lord Skelmersdale repeated a committment given to me privately that the Government would introduce the amendment to the National Health Service (Amendment) Bill. I find that arrangement entirely satisfactory. My aim is to see the legislation that we all want on the statute book and in force, and not to pack all and sundry into this Bill in order to boost the status of the so-called Tom Clarke Bill. I am sure that the Minister will appreciate that view.

Although I should like to place on record my appreciation for the Government's action on this matter, I must at the same time express some reservations. I am sure that the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland will convey them to his hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security. My reservations reflect the concerns expressed to me by the care in the community working party, which brings together a wide range of voluntary and professional organisations in Scotland. It is concerned that the Scottish Office has not been able to produce the relevant clauses for discussion. Its attitude has been in sharp contrast to that of its English colleagues, who have devoted time to consulting my advisers on the most effective means of improving the legislation.

I hope that the time scale for the implementation of the Bill in Scotland will be similar to that, or perhaps shorter than it is in other parts of the United Kingdom. At an earlier stage, I wondered whether the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland—the hon. Member for Argyle and Bute—and the Minister for Health were Mr. Nice and Mr. Nasty. I hope that they will prove themselves to be

[Mr. Clarke]

Mr. Quick and Mr. Speedy and that the Minister for Social Security will show the same urgency in implementing the Bill. They may be sure that my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and I and many other hon. Members on both sides of the House will pounce on any signs of lethargy or lack of application.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland (Mr. Allan Stewart): The hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) has explained the reasons for these amendments with his customary excellence and clarity.

I emphasise that the Government share the concern of the Bill's sponsors that effective joint planning arrangements should operate in Scotland and that voluntary organisations are brought into the process, because they have their proposals to contribute.

The hon. Member referred to specific provisions and the reasons why no amendment to clause No. 11 had been moved. I confirm that, when a suitably comprehensive clause is included in the National Health Service (Amendment) Bill, a motion to delete clause 11 will be tabled.

The hon. Gentleman asked me about commencement. I confirm that it is likely that the Government will wish the various provisions of the Bill to commence simultaneously throughout the country. However, we must recognise that commencement will depend in practice on a number of factors, including the availability of resources. That point was made clear during proceedings in the House and in another place. I can fully assure the House, however, that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has every intention of implementing the Bill as quickly as that can be done in the circumstances prevailing at the time and in the light of consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. However, the resources available may be subject to different pressures and priorities north and south of the border. A facility for separate commencement is therefore clearly necessary.

I add my congratulations to those of other right hon. and hon. Members to the hon. Member for Monklands, West.

Mr. Clarke: Inevitably, all these amendments are consequential. The definitions in particular have been moved around the Bill and a number of new definitions have been added. As clause 14 concerns both commencement orders and extent, I should like to put on the record my pleasure at the statement in the other place by Baroness Trumpington on behalf of the Government to the effect that consultation on how the Bill might be translated to Northern Ireland will be put in hand if the Bill is enacted. This was much more positive and constructive than earlier ministerial statements. I am delighted that the Government now accept that the benefits of the Bill should be afforded throughout the United Kingdom to people with disabilities.

As we come to the end of our deliberations may I take the opportunity to thank the ministerial team which has been responsible for the Government's input into the Bill? I would also like to thank my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and my right hon. and hon. Friends for the work that they have done in taking the Bill this far. There has been an enormous amount of commitment, especially on the part of organisations for the disabled and many others. I believe that the strength of support for those organisations led the Government to many of the decisions they have taken in the course of the Bill's passage through both Houses.

We have had a most interesting debate. My hon. Friend the Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo), in the characteristically generous manner we have come to expect from him, predicted that one day I might find myself in heaven. I hope that that will not be too soon because I am not sure that my constituency Labour party would welcome a by-election at this early stage. If that ever happens I am sure that the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar will be there in his rightful place, at the very least as Chairman of the Select Committee on Standing Orders. I do not know whether there is a St. Ladbroke up there but if there is not I am sure that he will deal with that matter as well. My hon. Friend the Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) gave magnificent help during the progress of the Bill and I know that that is appreciated by everybody on both sides of the House.

We have reached the stage at which I would like to move the amendments before the House. In the spirit of the ministerial statements that we have heard from the Dispatch Box on other causes, may I say that I have no doubt that the discussions in both Houses and outside the Palace of Westminster that have led to this comprehensive view of the problems of disability show that the British people have set a clear priority.

I accept, as I did on Second Reading, that it will be necessary to consider implementation on the basis of phasing. Nevertheless, I believe that in this clause, as in others, the British people and the House will not accept that resources cannot be made available. We believe that even the figure that the Minister has given on several occasions today does not represent something which is extravagant in the extreme.

We believe that disabled persons and their carers, mentally handicapped persons and families up and down the country have experienced serious problems. The Bill attempts to right some of those problems, although not all of them. However, given the commitment on the part of the Government and the House, which has been shown almost unanimously at every stage, recognised and reflected at the Treasury, the Government are compelled to recognise the strong feelings and make sure that resources are made available.

Mr. Newton: I shall respond to the remarks of the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) by saying that in my judgment the Government have shown, persistently over six or seven years, their commitment to the needs and interests of disabled people in a variety of ways, including the improvements and extensions of social security benefits in the way I described a little while ago. We shall continue to do everything we can to ensure that that progress is more than maintained. It is in that spirit and against the background of what we have already been able to achieve that we shall approach the consideration of the implementation of those parts of the Bill with significant effects on resources.

If you will allow me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, since you inadvertently cut me off without a word on the previous group of amendments and I had some modest news to impart, I should like to impart that good news now. I am talking about clauses 6 to 8. On the matter of timing and implementation, I hope, subject to discussions with local authority associations and other bodies concerned, that it will be possible to bring clauses 6 and 7 into effect no later than April 1987.

Clause 8 deals with reports to Parliament. We shall consider the possibility of bringing the clause into effect this autumn, and making the first annual report on the basis of 1985 data before the end of the year. I hope that the House will find that helpful. We should be able to produce a more informative report when what is known as Körner data — that is improved information about the Health Service — become available, but that will not be until 1988.

Perhaps those undertakings and hopes give some further emphasis to what I said about the Government's commitment to continue the progress of improvements for disabled people in a variety of ways.

I wish to pay my last tribute in these debates to all those who have been connected with our proceedings. I add my words to the kind remarks that have been made about the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley), whose performance has been such that I think that he would be well qualified to be a Government Whip, bearing in mind the efficiency that he has shown in organising the proceedings of the House. But perhaps he would regard the prospect of being elevated to the post of Government Whip as a fate worse than death. However, his efforts in organising our proceedings have been of significant assistance to us all. I am grateful to him for what he has done to support the hon. Member for Monklands, West and us all in achieving the happy position in which we find ourselves. We hope that Royal Assent will be only a short time away.

Mr. Alfred Morris: Many who are present congratulated my hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) at the outset of today's proceedings. I have reserved my congratulations to this final stage so as to be absolutely certain that the Bill is bound for the statute book. This is an extremely important measure and my hon. Friend has been skilful and tireless. He has been wholly superb throughout the proceedings on the Bill.

I hold it to be the bounden duty of the Minister — as a member of a Government who have given over £4·4 billion in tax relief to those earning over £30,000 a year — to press upon his colleagues the point that implementing this Bill must now be a priority of priorities.

Again, I most warmly congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Monklands, West. He will be thanked by disabled people everywhere for nudging things forward on their behalf. I hope that we shall be rejoicing very soon about the full implementation of his legislation.

Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Bill [Lords]

Not amended (in the Standing Committee), considered.

Clause 1

INCEST AND RELATED OFFENCES

Mr. Bill Walker (Tayside, North): I beg to move amendment No. 1, in page 2, line 40, leave out 'under the age of 16 years'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): With this it will be convenient to take the following amendments: No. 2, in page 2, line 41, after 'offence', insert 'if that step-child is either under the age of 21 or has at any time before attaining the age of 18 lived in the same household and been treated as a child of his or her family.'.

No. 3, in page 3, line 2, leave out '16' and insert '21'.

Mr. Walker: In Committee, my hon. Friend the Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) and I voted against the Bill as it stands. That is the reason for the amendments. Due to some confusion, which I have not yet managed to unravel, or a misunderstanding, my name was not printed as a supporter of the amendment along with that of my hon. Friend the Member for Stirling.

This is not a simple matter. To a non-lawyer, it seems to be complex and legal. The Bill, which has not been amended, may improve one area of Scots law. I do not think that anyone would argue with that. However, if the amendments are not accepted, it will bring about what some non-lawyers may believe to be a legal and moral conflict, which in the end will be likely to create greater social and moral problems. This conflict would be created by problems arising from this Bill and the Marriage (Prohibited Degrees of Relationship) Act 1986.

If one takes the view that marriage is more than just a legal matter—that it is ordained for the procreation of children, as the marriage service says—how can it be right for our law to allow an act that could result in the procreation of children, but not allow that act to take place within the institution of marriage? That is an impossible position.

I am sympathetic to what the Bill is trying to do, but I find it impossible to support a law that would allow an individual to sleep with his stepdaughter over the age of 16 provided that the stepdaughter gives her consent. She would probably become pregnant in the circumstances that one envisages, but, provided that she gives her consent, it is all right for her to become pregnant and have a child. As the law stands, and if the Bill is passed unamended, she will be the mother of a child, the father of which cannot, in law, become her husband. Surely that is nonsense. It is wrong to ask Parliament to put such a measure into legislation unamended. That is why these amendments are so important.

I recognise, as I am sure that everyone else recognises, that many reforms are required to put right the anomalies in Scottish law. However, is it right for us to write into law that it is in order for a stepfather to sleep with his stepdaughter and produce children, but not legally right for him to marry the 16-year-old, or older, girl? If so, we are saying that fornication and adultery are preferable to marriage.

One-parent families are a growing public concern. No one doubts that this matter is causing concern for those involved in social work and activity, those concerned with the churches and anyone who cares deeply about our society. If the Bill is anamended, it will make a positive contribution towards the creation of more one-parent families. The House cannot approve of that.

More important — and it is to this issue that we must turn our attention — are the children who are likely to result from such a relationship. Does anyone really believe that children conceived in this way would not at least have a real prospect of becoming what is known as problem children — another concern for our modern society? The important aspect is what it does to the children, but another aspect is the attendant cost for the public purse and taxpayer if the situation were to get worse.

Does anyone believe that bastards conceived between a stepfather and a stepdaughter aged 16, 17 or 18 can hope to be anything other than, at best, a curiosity to other children and other members of the community where they live? We all know that children can be very cruel, and often that makes life extremely difficult for sensitive youngsters. We have a duty and responsibility to them to think about the children who may be conceived as a result of the provisions of the Bill. At best, they will be a curiosity to other children and other members of the community in which they live. At school they will be abused and given, I have no doubt, hideous and horrendous names. Does anyone seriously believe that this is a recipe for a happy and stable home life? Does anyone seriously believe that the legal prevention of marriage between father and mother can make any kind of contribution to a stable home life for either the mother or the child.

It is difficult for those of us who have a good home life and who enjoyed a good home life as children to envisage anything like this. If a stepfather finds, after his stepdaughter's mother dies, that his stepdaughter is attractive, although she does not find him attractive, does anybody believe that considerable pressure will not be exerted on the child? I do not have the slightest doubt that incest is committed. I do not know how frequently it is committed and I do not know how large the problem is, but it is reasonable to envisage circumstances in which, because of the conditions in the home, the stepdaughter has to comply with the invitation or the order — depending upon how one views it—to get into bed with the stepfather.

I understand that it is extremely difficult to prove whether or not consent was given, demanded or accepted and that the circumstances become terribly fraught and difficult. However, our duty is to examine the areas of possibility, to find out which of them are likely to be areas of probability and then to reach a decision. Recently a Bill was introduced to prohibit marriage under the age of 21. If this Bill is passed, we shall be saying that provided the 16-year-old stepdaughter has agreed, this is acceptable in law. That would create a huge anomaly. If a stepfather forces a child against her will to get into bed and have intercourse with him, another member of the family has to provide evidence that that has happened. Somebody else is needed to clype—in other words, to tell.

We have to reach a decision against that background. All this happens within the family home, where there is the real danger of abuse. We are considering legislation that is designed to deal with such abuse. As I said earlier, I am not a lawyer; I am not qualified to deal with complex and difficult legal matters. However, I know that it would be extremely difficult for me to accept that it is all right to have intercourse and to produce children but it is not all right for those children to be given a legal father.

I believe that these amendments are essential. If it were to be left unamended, the Bill would be an affront to the Christian beliefs of the people of Scotland. Does anyone seriously believe that they can defend the Bill unamended? Could anyone attend church in Scotland on a Sunday and defend a position where marriage between a stepfather and stepdaughter is prevented

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): Is the hon. Gentleman aware that the Bill in its unamended form is substantially the product of a Bill put forward by the Scottish Law Commission, which invited comments from various authorities, including the churches? Only one of the many denominations raised any objection to the Bill. The others welcomed it.

Mr. Walker: I do not argue with that, but the hon. Gentleman must agree that that was before the Act prohibiting such marriage reached the statute book. It is the relationship between and the difficulties and anomalies that arise from those two Acts that present the problems.

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): The hon. Gentleman has the privilege to be the constituency Member of Parliament for my parents. I have considerable sympathy with his point. Can he explain the specific wording of amendment No. 2 which, because of the word "or" in line 2, appears to do rather more than the purpose he has outlined? It could mean that a stepchild of any age — even above 21 — who had lived in the same household while under the age of 18 could be caught by the provisions. Will he address himself to that minor but important point?

Mr. Walker: I take the hon. Gentleman's point. The object of the word "or" is to prevent someone saying, "But she is no longer living with us." It is well known in Scotland that one of the most common lines of defence when going before the courts is to say, "I didna ken", to which the judge might reply, "Well, you ken noo." If the hon. Gentleman's parents have the good fortune to live in the beautiful part of the world that I represent, they will well understand that.

I want to know how anybody could go to church on a Sunday and defend a position where marriage between a stepfather and his stepdaughter is prevented by law, although it is perfectly in order — if the Bill is unamended — for them to live together, sleep together and produce children. That question must be answered. I know that I would find it impossible — as, no doubt, would any hon. Member—to persuade the elders of the kirk that somehow that was acceptable.

I do not pretend that we are dealing with a simple matter. We are not. But that is no excuse for putting into law another anomaly, especially one which, in my judgment as a non-lawyer, in practical terms could have an horrendous impact on the children produced from such a liaison. We must think about the road along which we are travelling and where we are going. Those who support the Bill and reject the amendments will be saying that fornication and adultery are preferable to marriage. In the old days, the minister would stand up in the pulpit and point out the sinners. That practice has long since passed.

Mr. Ian Mikardo (Bow and Poplar): There are too many of them now.

Mr. Walker: I accept that. Who can throw stones? Probably nobody can today. I am concerned about the children who can be produced from such a liaison. Although the minister can no longer stand up in the kirk and point to the sinners, we should not think that the congregation do not look around and comment. We can all imagine them asking, "Have you heard?" The children will be born out of wedlock, but we are saying that that is preferable to their being born in wedlock. That must be unacceptable for anybody who supports the Christian teachings and values of the Scottish Church.

The Scots will not take kindly to being lectured on fine points of law. Many, especially those who go to church, will point to God's law. That law will be in conflict with the Bill if the amendment is not made.

Ms. Jo Richardson (Barking): I have two apologies to make. The first is that this is the first time that I have had the temerity to speak in a debate on Scottish law. I have to confess that I do not understand Scottish law, although I have heard many hon. and learned Members say on other issues that Scottish law is in many respects simpler than English law. That may not be true here, however. There is, I suppose, good and less good on both sides of the border.

My second apology is that I am not terribly clear of my stance on the amendments. I think that I support the general thrust of the Bill, which seems to be to bring Scottish law into line with English law concerning a stepfather having a relationship with his stepdaughter over the age of 16. I understand that the Bill would make that not an incestuous relationship.

I did not quite follow what the hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) was saying about marriage. I am aware that the two are tied up in that there can be issue from a relationship such as we are discussing. He went on at some length about the problems of such children. We are all concerned with them, but the debate is more narrow and concerns only whether a relationship between a stepfather and a stepdaughter over 16 is incestuous. I understand that the amendment would increase the age from 16 to 21. I have mixed feelings about that. I have been forced to be interested because of the increasing and, in many ways, welcome discussion about incest, which until fairly recently has been swept under the carpet. We should all welcome the fact that now both men and women are beginning to discuss these problems, which are particularly difficult for the girl or young woman involved in what amounts to violence against her by a member of her family. I am talking about the normal incestuous relationships about which we hear. It is time that the House, not necessarily this afternoon but on some other occasion, debated the difficulties that face girls and young women who are forced into this type of relationship.

My ambivalence about the amendments arises from my belief that basically young women at the age of 16 should be able to decide on their own relationships. Generally, I would be unwilling to increase the age limit to 21 except in respect of incestuous relationships between a stepfather and stepdaughter. That must be considered in a different light.

I am sure that hon. Members will have had cases to deal with. I have had several. I do not know whether it is that women feel more able to talk about incest to a woman Member than to a male Member, however sympathetic and receptive he is. Many women of all ages have told me of the pressures on them from their fathers, stepfathers or, in some cases, their elder brothers to develop a relationship. It can start at an early age when the young girl does not know what is happening, is frightened, and knows that something is wrong but does not know what. She is threatened by her father, stepfather or the boyfriend of her mother who may say to her, "You must not say anything about this because your mother would be very angry and it would hurt her." Some of those women have told me that, despite that, they have a curious attachment to that person because of the secret between them. They do not like it. Indeed, they are often ashamed and worried about it. My ambivalence about the amendments arises I am worried whether 16 is the age at which a young woman with such a history of pressure, in this case from her stepfather, can make up her mind whether she has a proper relationship which she wishes to perpetuate into marriage with that man.

At some stage we should clarify the matter in a much better way. A year ago I read a piece in The Sunday Times about the complex legal barriers to marriage. It is time that we faced that and, perhaps, the Bill will lead to our facing it. Certainly it is wrong that a stepfather and stepdaughter, at whatever age, with a genuine relationship, should not be able to get married, if that relationship is properly established. Marriage-enabling legislation is usually considered in the House of Lords. I remember reading about a 62-year-old widower who was allowed to marry his 58-year-old stepdaughter through such legislation. Those people would not be included in the categories covered by this Bill. It is wrong for such cases to be decided at personal expense, because they can be very costly.

The Bill originates because sex between a stepfather and stepdaughter is prohibited by the Incest Act 1567. I am sorry that I am not more of an expert in the subject, but I was interested to hear that the roots of that Act are to be found in the book of Leviticus which describes a husband and wife as being "of one flesh".

It is interesting that we still have on the statute book legislation based on a doctrine which is obviously out of line with English law. In this case I think that English law is best. It seems that the doctrine dates back 2,000 years.

I support the thrust of the Bill, but I have to say something which is not often said in the House of Commons—I honestly do not know what to do about the amendment. Perhaps my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) can help me.

Mr. Chris Smith: I am afraid that I cannot help my hon. Friend in her dilemma. The Scottish Law Revision Committee recommended the amendments which the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) is proposing. However, the Criminal Law Revision Committee for England and Wales, after initial hesitation and considerable thought, recommended that we should go further than the Scottish Law Revision Committee and adopt the argument presented by the hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker). There is a clear difference between the two law committees. The issues are difficult and sensitive. Arguments exist on both sides. The difficulty has been considered in great detail.

Ms. Richardson: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. He is right to say that two different conclusions were reached. That gives me strength to say that I still do not know the answer. If they cannot agree, who am I to decide?

If I have to take a view, on balance I think that I am in favour, marginally, of increasing the age to 21, on the ground that incest is such a difficult subject. But I am open to argument. Incest can begin with such violence — that is what worries me — and at such an early age. If such a relationship has gone on for a long time I wonder whether at 16 a young woman — however much she might feel that she is consenting, and no matter what affinity she has with her stepfather — has had a chance to discover her own feelings. However, that applies to marriage rather than to making the relationship incestuous.

We are not suggesting, as the hon. Member for Tayside, North seems to suggest, that everyone over the age of 16 who is affected in this way should marry. We are debating whether the law should say that with young women over the age of 16 the act is incestuous. I think that I am talking myself into remaining where I was on the age of 16.

I apologise for my rather confused remarks, but I am pleased that we have had a brief opportunity to discuss the Bill. I hope that it will lead to a more leisurely and better attended debate — perhaps a thoughtful and philosophical discussion — about incest, on which there has been much research by many bodies.

It is time that the House faced up to the fact that there is considerable violence against young women and children by members of their own families, whether step-relatives or otherwise. I suspect that almost every family knows someone who has suffered. We ought not to sweep the issue under the carpet. We must see whether we can help children and, I hope, their parents.

Mr. Bill Walker: I hope that the hon. Lady is not suggesting that anything that I said was condoning incest or suggesting that the subject should be swept under the carpet. I find it so horrendous and horrible that I want all aspects of it properly and fully debated.

I keep coming back not to the father, but to the mother and the child, because they are the important people and we must give them adequate consideration and protection. That is the purpose of the amendments.

Ms. Richardson: In a sense, the hon. Gentleman is saying that extending the age to 21 would give a young woman more protection. However, the Bill says only that with young people under the age of 16 an act should be regarded as incestuous and that if they are over the age of 16 there will not be an incestuous act. I cannot see how extending the age to 21 would help the young women.

Would not it be better for the children about whom the hon. Gentleman was talking not to know that they were born of an incestuous relationship? Perhaps I am not making myself clear. If so, it is too late for me to apologise now. This is a confusing issue in a confusing Bill. Even our wonderful Library, while perhaps not finding the Bill confusing, found it difficult to follow. I hope that in the not too distant future we shall have a wider discussion of the problem.

Mr. Wallace: My name appears on the amendments for a procedural reason. The Public Bill Office and those advising me on the Bill did not expect that we would have an opportunity to debate it and, so that it could be deemed to be unopposed and, therefore, agreed to, I added my name to the amendments.

These are not wrecking amendments. The Bill could live with them, but I should strongly prefer them not to be accepted.

Let me try to put the amendments into context and perhaps clarify matters for the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson). The present law on incest in Scotland is based on the Act of the Scottish Parliament in 1567, which, in turn, is based on the 18th chapter of the book of Leviticus in determining the persons between whom sexual relations would be deemed to be incestuous and criminal.

Mr. Mikardo: I know nothing about Scottish law, but I know the book of Leviticus and the passage to which the hon. Gentleman refers contains no reference to a stepfather.

Mr. Wallace: With due respect to the hon. Gentleman, whose knowledge of Leviticus I do not dispute, over the years the Scottish courts have deemed that the step relationship is covered by one of the verses of Leviticus. I regret not having come armed with the Bible and, more particularly, for the purpose of the Act, the 1562 Geneva translation. My point is that the chapter includes relationships, both affinity and blood, and the substantial thrust of the Bill is to decriminalise relationships by affinity.

The related offences which are referred to in the Bill's title give protection to certain categories of persons who are not related by blood—stepchildren under the age of 16 and children under the age of 16 for whom an adult is in some position of trust. Some parts of the criminal law already give protection, but the Bill extends the sanctions that can be imposed if, for example, there is a breach of that trust. Indeed, if a case is brought on indictment in the High Court, it allows a sentence up to life imprisonment. One should be under no illusion about the seriousness which Parliament, and, indeed, society, attach to such offences.

The age of 16 was arrived at by the Scottish Law Commission after much deliberation. I, too, gave considerable thought to whether it should be 18 or 21. Indeed, it was only after I had discussed the matter at considerable length with the Scottish Law Commission that I accepted that 16 was the appropriate age.

I was guided by the fact that we are dealing with consensual intercourse between two people. If it were not consensual, it would be rape, for which there are the full penalties and rigours of the criminal law. For a child with a step-parent it may be difficult to prove consent, but that applies below the age of 16 as well as above. In fact, one might say that above the age of 16 it is a lot easier to prove because the person concerned is more likely to be forthcoming or to go to the police if he or she—it is more likely to be she—is subjected to undue pressure.

Mr. Bill Walker: I think that the hon. Gentleman will accept that the age of 16-plus is still extremely difficult in the circumstances that can exist surrounding this horrendous situation. I have a 16-year-old daughter at home and I can imagine situations in which she would find it extremely difficult to speak out in any forms against her father who in no way behaves in the manner that we are talking about. A person of 16 is still a child. We must recognise that the circumstances of the domestic home impinge on the ability of the child who is the victim to say anything because that child may end up out on the street.

Mr. Wallace: I never sought to minimise the difficulties. Under the age of 16 it is even more difficult for the child to speak out.

A woman in her thirties may marry but soon separate from a man in his twenties and the man could fall in love with that woman's 17-year-old daughter. That relationship would be caught by the Bill and it would be a criminal offence if this amendment were to be accepted. They are not related by blood. Parties may have parted and after many years the stepfather and his stepdaughter may meet. If the stepdaughter had lived in the house and been treated as a member of the family, even if when they subsequently met he was 39 and she was 35, that would still be criminal and subject to life imprisonment.

Mr. Bill Walker: We are more likely to be dealing with a child who lives at home passing the age of 16 and who is exposed to this problem than with the delightful, romantic but theoretical proposition that the hon. Gentleman has outlined. I believe that we should deal with what is likely to happen.

Mr. Wallace: I was merely pointing out what the consequences of the hon. Gentleman's amendment might be. We are giving protection to the child of a step relationship. However, if the parties have not married, a girl in a similar position, who might be subject to similar pressures, could well find that she does not have that protection. Therefore, there are arguments to be made on the ground of consistency.

As I have pointed out, only one denominational church, one of the free Presbyterian churches, has expressed any objection. It has been said that that was before the Marriage (Prohibited Degrees of Relationship) Bill was passed. But that suggests that the hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) has not given much thought to his proposals. That Act makes the situation less anomolous than it would have been at the time when the church did not raise any objections. Then there was no provision for a marriage between a step-parent and a step-child. Now there is, subject to certain conditions. However, the hon. Gentleman has sent me a note saying that if I reject the amendments, he will talk out the Bill on Third Reading. I do not want that to happen, because if this Bill is lost after the Marriage (Prohibited Degrees of Relationship) Bill has been enacted, it would be perfectly legal for parties to marry, but it would be criminal for them to have sexual relations with each other. Undoubtedly, that is what the hon. Gentleman would achieve. Interestingly enough, however he would not protect adopted children.

At present, it is believed that the law of incest does not apply to adopted children. This Bill covers that. Perhaps the hon. Member for Tayside, North would like to appear in church on Sunday to tell his congregation why he wanted to stop a Bill that would protect adopted children. At present, the law does not protect illigitimate children either. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman would like to tell his congregation why he did not want to protect them.

Mr. Bill Walker: I shall always be happy to stand up in church, or anywhere else, and say that I have not supported legislation that I deem to be so flawed and faulty that I cannot accept it. That is really what we are talking about.

Mr. Wallace: I think that I have made my point. I ask the hon. Gentleman to reconsider whether he wishes to press the amendment, or whether it might be better to withdraw it. Some highly anomalous cases might come up, and people may find themselves facing criminal sanctions although the vast majority of people would not think that any criminality attached to their behaviour.

Two married people may indulge in an adulterous relationship. They are not free to marry, but the law does not make their relationship criminal. I do not support or encourage the sort of relationships to which the hon. Gentleman referred; nor does the Bill. The Bill means that they would not be deemed criminal relationships. The hon. Gentleman used the example of a child of a relationship not having protection. I accept that, but that could happen now. Today the parties could also find themselves in prison. What would happen to the child then? We are not giving our moral approbation. After all, adultery is not morally approved by society, but for many years we have not thought fit to make it a criminal offence.

If the amendment is passed, at least we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that, under the law in Scotland, the Lord Advocate's consent is needed for every prosecution. I am sure that he will have the good sense, if anomalies arise, not to consent to prosecution.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland (Mr. Allan Stewart): The House will have listened with interest to the debate between my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) and the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace). I should like to make it clear—I do not think that those hon. Members dispute this—that we all have a clear interest in ensuring that the Bill is passed with, or without, the amendment tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North. Under the Marriage (Prohibited Degrees of Relationship) Act 1986 there are a number of relationship in which marriage can now take place but where marriage partners would be commiting incest if they consummated the marriage.

The Government remain neutral on the Bill's details. As my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North told the House, the effect of the amendment would be to prohibit intercourse with a stepchild under 21 or for all time if the stepchild before attaining the age of 18 had lived in the same household as the accused and had been treated as a child of the family. This matches exactly the conditions laid down for marriage in the 1986 Act.

The hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland put forward strong reasons why the amendments should not be accepted. He said that they were at odds with the existing law on the age of consent and created a serious criminal offence in circumstances where it seems inappropriate to invoke the criminal law—for example, where a man has intercourse by consent with an adult woman of, say, 20 with whom he has never lived in family but who happens to be the daughter of his wife or former wife. The hon. Gentleman rightly pointed out that prosecution would remain a matter for the Lord Advocate.

I hope that I have fairly summarised the arguments. The Government are neutral on the details of the Bill. I hope that it will pass through all of its stages this afternoon.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments made: No. 32, in page 12, line 41, after 'offence', insert

'if that step-child is either under the age of 21 or has at any time before attaining the age of 18 lived in the same household and been treated as a child of his or her family.'.

No. 3, in page 3, line 2, leave out '16' and insert '21'. — [Mr. Wallace.]

Order for Third Reading read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the Bill be now read the Third time. — [Mr. Wallace.]

2.12 pm

Mr. Allan Stewart: I should like to take this opportunity to speak more generally about the Bill, which has been put forward by the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace). He discussed its background during the previous debate on the amendments tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker). As the hon. Gentleman rightly emphasised, the Bill follows a report of the Scottish Law Commission. He is to be congratulated on putting forward this legislation. As the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) said, it is a complex Bill.

The Bill deals with a matter of importance which can arouse fairly strong feelings. The House will have listened with considerable sympathy to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North who referred to the reservations expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) and himself in Committee. Hon. Members were concerned about the difference between the marriage and the incest legislation and about the pressure which could be brought to bear on a stepchild over 16.

I think that it is fair to report that my hon. Friend the Member for Stirling expressed a worry in Committee that the Bill would allow intercourse between step-relations who, in terms of the marriage legislation, would not be able to marry. He pointed out that if intercourse led to conception it would prevent the father of the child in that union marrying the mother.

Should the Bill fail to secure a Third Reading we shall be faced with a situation where, if and when the Marriage (Prohibited Degrees of Relationship) Act 1986 is commenced, persons in a step-relationship marrying under that Act will, if they consummate the marriage, be committing incest.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland on bringing forward the Bill and I commend it to the House.

2.15 pm

Mr. Wallace: I thank the Minister for his kind words. It is only fair to say that the real hard work in regard to the Bill was put in by the Scottish Law Commission in terms of the consultative document it initially sent out, which was the product of a considerable amount of work. Indeed, as the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) said in the previous debate, this is a serious subject that evokes emotions and has sociological aspects. In the Scottish Law Commission's work on this some of those aspects were looked at. The Scottish Law Commission certainly drew on the work that has been done by many sources in dealing with the serious problem of incest.

We are grateful to the Scottish Law Commission and I am grateful to the officials in the Scottish Home and Health Department. Although the Government were neutral in the matter the Scottish Home and Health Department was obviously concerned that if legislation was going through it should be in a good and proper form and it assisted me in that aim.

In some respects it is rather sad that, if the Bill proceeds to get the Royal Assent, the previous Act will cease to exist. I do not think that we will ever again pass legislation that says:

"quhatsumever persoun or personis they be that abusis thair body with sic personis in degre as Goddis word hes expreslie forbidden . . . as is contenit in the xviii Cheptour of Leviticus salbe puniest . . ."

Draftsmen these days seem to have a more simple and colourful way of putting things forward. It is certainly simpler than the previous Act. If the Bill becomes an Act I believe that it will improve the position of criminal law in Scotland and I commend the Third Reading to the House.

Mr. Bill Walker: I congratulate the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on seeing the good sense of accepting the amendments. Like him, I cannot pretend that everything is as we would have wished but it is an improvement on the present position. I believe that, with the passage of time, the amendments will be seen to have been of considerable value.

This will not be the end of the debate on this delicate, important and often distressing and disturbing matter. I am confident that we shall return to it again at a later stage because some aspects still need to be tidied up. I was never opposed to what the hon. Gentleman or the Scottish Law Commission were attempting to achieve but I believe that they were exposing individuals unnecessarily to a situation that ought not to happen. That was why I tabled the amendment.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed, with amendments.

Obscene Publications (Protection of Children, Etc.) (Amendment) Bill

Order read for resuming of adjourned debate on Question [25 April].

Amendment No. 12 proposed: In page 3, line 17, leave out '18' and insert '16', instead thereof. — [Mr. Dubs.]

Question again proposed, That the amendment be made.

2.20 pm

Mr. Ian Mikardo (Bow and Poplar): I think that hon. Members will be aware that this is the third time I have attempted to say a few words in support of this amendment which was moved many moons ago by my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs). On the first occasion on which I endeavoured to explain why I thought that my hon. Friend was right to move the amendment I was brutally cut short after 28 seconds. Therefore, I was not able to deploy any substantial arguments in favour of the amendment. However, a later opportunity arose. On that occasion I was cut off after only 17 seconds, which included an intervention from the hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley).

I must ask the permission of the House to start from scratch. The argument is a simple one, and in dealing with it I shall address myself indirectly to amendment No. 14, which has also been selected. It is an argument about the minds of young men at the ages of 16 and 17 years. The concept of the Bill as it now is is that lads of 16 and 17 do not know anything about what used to be called euphemistically the facts of life, or sometimes called even more euphemistically the birds and the bees. The Bill contends that, against that background, we must not let 16 or 17-year-olds see anything which it would be all right for my hon. Friends, myself and Conservative Members to see. That is because it is assumed that we know about the birds and the bees and 16 and 17-year-olds do not.

That is a nonsensical proposition. When my four grandsons were teenagers about a decade ago, I used often to talk with them about the facts of life. That was because I learned a great deal from them. They were far more advanced in their mathematics than the mathematics which I learnt many years ago and so they were much more advanced than their old fogey of a grandfather in knowing about things that go on.

The idea that we old fogies can attend this place on a Friday and solemly profess to know—I am old and the Minister is preternaturally old—what is in the mind of a youngster of 16 or 17, and even worse, to profess to know what it is that will tend to corrupt and deprave a youngster of that age, is a piece of monstrous intellectual arrogance on our part.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): I am sure that we are all listening to my hon. Friend with considerable interest and that we shall all agree with him. However, is he as surprised as I am that the Bill's sponsor has not seen fit to be with us today to see his Bill on its way? Is he surprised that the hon. Member for Daveyhulme (Mr. Churchill) has not seen fit to join us? Does that not display some arrogance and even lack of interest on his part?

Mr. Mikardo: It would not be for me to pass moral judgments on another hon. Member. The sponsor was not present when we last discussed the Bill and nor was he present on the occasion before that. I suspect strongly that his enthusiasm for his Bill has waned rapidly. Those who have followed the progress of the Bill will recall that he has knocked it down as if it were a Meccano set and rebuilt the bits into a different structure on three occasions during the Bill's consideration.

The hon. Member for Daveyhulme (Mr. Churchill) started with fine intentions. He started with a realisation that the present law on obscenity is nonsensical. I utterly agree with him about that. I do not know any reasonable person who could disagree.

Having drawn his place in the ballot, the hon. Member for Davyhulme thought that, as the existing law was nonsense, he would try to bring in a measure that would improve it. I believe that he set out seriously to do that, and I think that he did his best, which is why I do not want to be condemnatory of him. However, he discovered, as many others have discovered before him, that when one gets into this branch of the law, one walks straight into a minefield. The difficulties of definition are so ineluctable that one is better off leaving the thing alone, for all its faults.

I voted for a Second Reading, although I thought that it was an awful Bill in its first draft. Hon. Members will recall that it had what came to be called the laundry list. It was a nonsensical Bill, which would have prevented the showing of King Lear as obscene. It would have prevented a travelogue of the city of Brussels if it included a picture of the statue of the Manneken Pis in Le Grand Place. It would have prevented the showing of many great classical works of the Italian, Flemish and other schools. Why did I vote for this nonsensical Bill? Because I hoped that in Committee we could find through our collective wisdom, a way of turning the Bill into a decent Bill.

The hon. Member for Davyhulme kept trying. When somebody told him that something would not do, he tried something else and when they said that that would not do either, he tried something else, and he got browned off in the process. In answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden), that is why the hon. Member for Davyhulme is not here. He has come to the conclusion that he has suffered enough, and my guess is that he will not even be putting his name in the ballot for private Members' Bills next Session, least he should be tempted to venture again into this, or any other, minefield.

Look where the hon. Member has got in the end. After going round and round the houses, he has come back, in subsection (3) to the tendency to "deprave and corrupt". He has adopted the very criterion, the very form of words to which he objected so much, and his objections to which, in the first place, made him introduce the Bill.

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): Does my hon. Friend agree that in clause 2, to which his amendment relates there is in effect a new definition being brought into the law, that of a tendency to "deprave and corrupt" persons under the age of 18? The amendment being supported so ably by my hon. Friend would replace that age limit with one of 16. Would that not be of benefit to the Bill, as it is easier to prove such a tendency to "deprave and corrupt" persons under the age of 16, than it is to prove such a tendency for persons of the age of 16 or over?

Mr. Mikardo: I do not go along with my hon. Friend. I do not believe that I can estimate what would tend to deprave and corrupt him, and he could not estimate what would tend to deprave and corrupt me. It is even more clear that neither of us can remember our youth so well as to make any estimate or any judgment that is worth a farthing of what would tend to corrupt or deprave a lad of 16, 17 or 18. We are too far removed from that. My heart bled for the hon. Member for Davyhulme as I watched his agonised process or retreat from one redoubt to the next redoubt. Despite all that agony, now we have reached, in an effort to improve——

It being half past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Debate to be resumed what day? No day named.

Private Members' Bills

EMPLOYMENT (AGE LIMITS) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Not moved.

TOBACCO PRODUCTS (TELEVISION BROADCASTS) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Not moved.

IMMIGRATION ACT 1971 (AMENDMENT) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Second Reading what day?

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): I did not hear an objection.

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): This is an abuse of the procedures of the House.

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton (Fife, Central): Shut up.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. There are about 35 Bills on the Order Paper that have still to be considered. We seem to be gathered for what is to be the July massacre of all those private Members' Bills by virtue, I suspect, of a grey and anonymous Whip uttering in a very muffled way the word "Object".

You will recall that on other occasions when Bills that would have provided considerable benefits to worthy sections of the community have been killed in this way we have protested that those who wish to kill them should at least have the guts to identify themselves, so that their names are on the record as opposing those measures.

Many months ago a Bill that I introduced was accepted without opposition, but it was later killed off by somebody who uttered in a very quiet voice the word "Object". I raised this matter on that occasion, and I ask you again, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to require the person who objects to a Bill — in this case merely to give somebody who is refused entry to this country the right of appeal — to identify himself. If the rate of refusals continues as at present, 20,000 people will be refused entry to the United Kingdom this year. The only right of appeal that they have is when they leave——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must not go into the merits of the Bill. I understand his point of order and I shall deal with it.

Mr. Skinner: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It is high time that those who shout "Object" behind cupped hands should be identified in Hansard. When somebody shouts "Object" in the House of Commons, the whole House should hear it, not just Mr. Speaker, or Mr. Deputy Speaker. An objection must be heard by every hon. Member. The fact is that the hon. Member who is sitting close to you, the millionaire hon. Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury), was the person who shouted "Object" to this Bill, and he has shouted "Object" on previous occasions. He objected to the removal of standing charges for pensioners, and he ought to be ashamed of himself. It is time that pensioners boycotted Sainsbury's stores.

[Mr. Skinner]

It is time that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, did not fall prey to the nonsense of those who whisper "Object" instead of letting the whole House hear them so that the names go into Hansard. They should have the guts to make plain what they are doing — that they are ripping off pensioners and objecting to a Bill relating to immigration that has been introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden).

Mr. Dave Nellist (Coventry, South-East): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It ill-behoves the hon. Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt) to keep muttering from a sedentary position about these Bills, some of which deal with employment, when Cleveland has the highest rate of unemployment in the country.

Like my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), on a number of occasions I have been the victim of a ruling from the Chair that some of my more eloquent contributions from a sedentary position should not be recorded in Hansard. Indeed, my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) was involved in a little altercation a few weeks ago about what is or is not recorded in Hansard, should the person making the contribution not be on his feet.

About 30 Bills have come before the House towards the end of the Session—I am a supporter of the Bill that we are now discussing—and it is our last chance to pursue them. I ask you to rule that if it is good enough for the occupant of the Chair to say that a joke by my hon. Friend for Bolsover or myself cannot be recorded in Hansard because we have not stood up and identified ourselves, similarly any hon. Member objecting to Bills should not have his objection registered in Hansard unless he—in this case the hon. Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury)—stands and identifies himself as killing the Bills on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the points of order raised by the three hon. Members. As they said, this matter has been raised on previous occasions. I have taken the opportunity to study past procedures and precedents, and it might be helpful to the House if I describe the procedure. As I said, similar points have been raised on many occasions over a number of years, and Procedure Committees have considered the practice.

The practice of the House does not require an hon. Member to rise to signify an objection. If there is no objection to a Bill when the title is read, its opponents can easily preserve their anonymity and still secure the deferral of the Bill by giving their voices as "No" when I put the Question. Hon. Members have never been required to rise to give their voices when any Question is put to the vote.

I understand that the current work of the Procedure Committee includes consideration of the arrangements for private Members' Bills. Hon. Members may wish to put their points to the Committee. Until the House approves any change, I am bound to follow current practice.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It might be helpful of you were aware that there is a conspiracy by three hon. Members. who are skulking behind the Clerk's Table, who appear to have come to the Chamber with the pre-ordained purpose of destroying every one of the private Members' Bills. If they did the decent thing and stood up and said who they were and what they represented, the problem would be solved and we would know exactly what interests were being served in destroying these very important private Members' Bills.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I cannot add to what I have already said. I have reminded hon. Members that if they are dissatisfied, as clearly some of them are, with the existing procedures and current practice, they can put their points to the Procedures Committee.

Mr. Nellist: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Without challenging the precedent that you have explained, and respecting your suggestion of correspondence with the appropriate Committee, may I ask you to confirm that it is open to Government Whips, should they so wish, to stand and identify themselves as Government Whips when they make an objection? Were they interested in openly declaring that it was the Government's decision, and not the decision of individual hon. Members, to block the private Members' Bills, they — for example, the hon. Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury) — could stand and identify themselves as Government Whips.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have made it clear that there is no obligation on any hon. Member to rise when he wishes to signify an objection.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I do not wish to tax your patience on this matter, because you have sat through many similar protests that Back-Bench Members have raised on Fridays when Bills are slaughtered by the Government.

I was not sure whether you responded to the point that my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) made about taking an objection, and whether it is only the Chair that has to hear the objection. One can only assume that the three Whips, who have moved very close to you, have done so so that they can make their objection known quietly and without drawing attention to their wider shame. If the Whips who object on behalf of the Government do so loudly enough, we might be able to identify them, even though they are sitting down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has to hear the objection. I heard objections to the Bills that have already been dealt with.

Mr. Robert N. Wareing (Liverpool, West Derby): Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I do not want to tax you further either, and you have been in the Chair often when this matter has been raised, but this is an important issue for the House. I understood you to say—please correct me if I am wrong—that the practice is based on precedent. Precedents can be changed. What original authority gave rise to this custom or usage in the House? Hon. Members have raised this matter at 2.30 pm on a Friday so often that it is quite clear that if there is any room for the Chair to make a decision which changes our practice, without the matter going to the Procedure Committee, you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Mr. Speaker and others who can advise might well look into this issue.

Mr. Ivor Stanbrook (Orpington): Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. In considering this matter, can it please be borne in mind that the practice to which Opposition Members so strongly object was followed consistently by the Labour party when it was last in power?

Several Hon. Members: We were not here then.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We had better not get into a debate about how this procedure has been used in the past. Perhaps I can deal with the additional point that has been raised. What I said is based on current practice, but it also stems directly from Standing Order No. 1, and it might be helpful if I deal with that.

The opportunity of objecting to items of business is not confined to private Member's Bills. Under Standing Order No. 1, any item of business taken after the moment of interruption — 10 pm on Monday to Thursday and 2.30 pm on Friday — which is not specifically exempted by Standing Orders or by a business motion can be blocked by any indication of objection. I might add that Government motions are not infrequently blocked by this procedure late at night.

Mr. Nellist: Further to the point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I apologise for rising again, but, as your rulings are coming out they are triggering queries in my mind. As I understand it, if I were successful—I have not been so far — in making an application under Standing Order No. 10 to have an emergency debate on the detention of trade unionists in South Africa, you would ask the House whether I had leave for such a debate, and you would require 40 hon. Members to rise in their places to show that the specified number of hon. Members backed the application. Does it not seem equitable that, as hon. Members are required to demonstrate support by standing on their feet for an application under Standing Order No. 10, Government Whips should stand up to identify themselves when they kill off Bills? Should not the Procedure Committee consider that?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman is making a point that he can put to the Procedure Committee, but he will not tempt me into making comments on the procedures and Standing Orders of the House. It is my job to ensure that they are observed and correctly carried out, and that is what I am endeavouring to do.

Mr. Gregor MacKenzie (Glasgow, Rutherglen): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It strikes me that this practice has obtained for a long time. When I was a member of the Government, it also happened. Many of us, whether members of the Government or Back Benchers, have undoubtedly not liked the practice. I suspect, although I shall not ask whether it is the case, that it causes considerable embarrassment to the occupant of the Chair that he must rule in this way. Concern about the practice is undoubtedly growing, and I ask that colleagues write to the Procedure Committee and that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, direct the Clerk of the House to report our exchanges this afternoon to the Procedure Committee, so that it may discuss the matter at some length and make recommendations to the whole House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not for the Chair to direct the Procedure Committee on its business. However, I feel sure that the hon. Gentlemen who have raised these points will put the matter to the Procedure Committee. As I said earlier, I understand that it is on its terms of reference at present, so the opportunity is there. I hope the House feels that we have had a good run on this and that we should proceed with our business.

Mr. Corbyn: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Many hon. Members have nominated next Monday as an appropriate day for Second Reading debates on Bills. Will you now call upon the Leader of the House to make time available on Monday so that these important matters can be debated? At least two of the Bills have a significant bearing on 9 million pensioners because of the proposed abolition of standing charges. It is important that we discuss these matters so that arrangements can be made to abolish standing charges before the onset of winter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a good try by the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), but he knows that it is well established that a day is often named even when the hon. Member concerned knows that the chances of having a debate on that day is extremely remote.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE (ESTIMATES)

Ordered,

That, on the next half day allotted under Standing Order No. 19 (Consolidation of estimates), notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (3), (4) and (5) of the Standing Order, Mr. Speaker shall at the conclusion of the debate or at Seven o'clock, whichever is the earlier, put any Question necessary to dispose of the proceedings on the Estimate appointed for consideration on that day.—[Mr. Neubert.]

Business of the House

2.54 pm

The Lord Privy Seal and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. John Biffen): With permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short business statement about the business next week. The business will be amended as follows:

WEDNESDAY 9 JULY—Estimates Day (3rd Allotted Day). There will be a debate on Estimates relating to supplementary benefit payments for private and voluntary residential care for the elderly, followed by a debate on Estimates relating to labour market services so far as they relate to the promotion of tourism. Details will be given in the Official Report.

Motions on the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order and the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order.

Completion of remaining stages of the Finance Bill will be postponed until a later date to be discussed through the usual channels.

[Estimates for debate on Wednesday 9 July 1986

1. Class XV, Vote 2 (Department of Health and Social Security: Supplementary Benefits) so far as it relates to expenditure on supplementary benefit payments for private and voluntary residential care for the elderly; and

2. Class VII, Vote 1 (Department of Employment: labour market services) so far as it relates to the promotion of tourism.]

Mr. Peter Shore (Bethnal Green and Stepney): The House will have noted what the right hon. Gentleman said about the change of business on Wednesday 9 July and will recall that it was only yesterday—less than 24 hours ago—that we heard him confidently announcing that the business for Wednesday 9 July would be the completion of the remaining stages of the Finance Bill. That is not an unimportant matter, because it gives legislative effect to the Budget. One would have thought that it was a central part of the Government's programme.

The right hon. Gentleman has not told us why, in the past 23 hours, there has been a change in the most important item—from the Government's point of view—in the coming week. Is it to do with the fact that no fewer than 68 amendments were put down yesterday? Will a further batch of amendments appear on Monday? If so, is this not a classic of muddle and incompetence in the Treasury and the Government in the dispatch of vital business?

The choice of subjects for the debates on Wednesday are certainly matters which we are willing to discuss, because we believe that benefit payments for private and voluntary residential care for the elderly and the promotion of tourism are matters of great importance. However, I should like to hear the response of the Leader of the House to what I said about the reasons for the extraordinary change of business at such short notice and affecting such an important subject.

Mr. Biffen: The right hon. Gentleman will recollect that yesterday the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) raised with me the difficulties that he thought might arise on this matter and I told him that I would look into it. When I announced the business for next week it was hoped that the Government would be able to table today all their amendments to the Finance Bill. That has not been possible and, in the circumstances and following discussions through the usual channels, we thought that it would be inappropriate to complete consideration of the Bill next week. Now that we have secured a little additional time, I very much hope that we can proceed in a manner which will be acceptable to both sides of the House.

Mr. Alexander Eadie (Midlothian): The right hon. Gentleman has made his business statement because there has been a change of circumstances. Will he consider making another business statement following the fact that the Glasgow Herald reports today that the Allander Institute says that 4,000 miners' jobs in Scotland are to go west and that another 8,000 jobs may go in consequence? Does not the right hon. Gentleman consider that those circumstances require him to make another business statement? It is a matter of urgency and we should have a debate on the matter on Wednesday, because the Scottish people want to know what is happening as a result of the Government's policies.

Mr. Biffen: I shamelessly belong to the old-fashioned school that believes that, ideally, one business statement a week is quite enough. Therefore, I do not hold out—I trust — any early prospect of additional business statements over the next few days. Of course, the point raised by the hon. Gentleman is of undoubted importance to Scotland and to the nation generally, but there will be opportunities between now and the summer recess when these matters can be considered in private Members' time.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): We welcome the deferral of further debate on the Finance Bill for just the reason that the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) has given. The enormous number of amendments would have made it impossible for any justice to have been done to the debate on Wednesday.

If there are to be protests, as we have seen twice in the last fortnight, both resulting in statements to the House saying that matters are to be postponed to a further date, should that not be an encouragement to the Opposition to protest more rigorously and often and thereby to lose further Government business until an indefinite later date —ideally the next side of the general election?

Mr. Biffen: I know that last night's announcement was distressing to the hon. Gentleman It was etched on every Liberal face as they saw the fox writhing in agony, having been well and truly shot. The hon. Gentleman ought not to press me to have many more changes in business, otherwise we shall be here until mid-August or beyond as I acquiesce in every request that is made.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Is the Leader of the House aware that in this parliamentary Session there have been more revised business statements than at any time that I can recall since I came here in 1970? As we have had another today, perhaps he will consider what occurred in the few minutes before Mr. Speaker took the chair. Why not on Wednesday have the Second Reading debate on the Standing Charges (Abolition) Bill which will greatly assist pensioners? We could debate the Immigration Act 1971 (Amendment) Bill, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) referred. We could debate the Concessionary Television Licences for State Retirement Pensioners Bill. Here is a wonderful opportunity for the right hon. Gentleman to do something decent for the pensioners. There might even be votes in it. He should make sure when we have those debates that he tells the hon. Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury) to keep out of the way so that we shall have a fair chance of getting someything done.

Mr. Biffen: I always welcome the interventions of the hon. Member for Bolsover because he is now moving into maturity when he tells us how many years he has been in this place and reflects upon how, in all that time, he has never found this, that or the other. But at the same time as he ages, he retains a certain innocence of affairs. The governing of private business that we were discussing earlier this afternoon is conditioned by Standing Orders, and I simply cannot set them aside for next week.

Mr. Dave Nellist (Coventry South-East): Does the Leader of the House agree that, in the same way as he brought a motion before the House a few days ago to increase by one day the allocation of time for private Members' motions following the disgraceful attempt by the Government to carve up and freeze out my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), it is within his authority, particularly as we have lost the Shops Bill and the legislation to privatise the water authorities, which has opened up a gap in parliamentary time, to produce more time for the discussion of private Members' Bills, particularly those about which we have argued today which deal with pensioners? As he has announced a change in Wednesday's business dealing with financial services, the big bang and salaries of £100,000 a year in the City of London and substituted supplementary benefit payments for residential care for the elderly, would it not be appropriate on Wednesday to compare those salaries with the fact that in Coventry, the west midlands and nationally some residential homes charge £40 or £50 a week more than the DHSS will allow pensioners to claim in order to pay for those private residential homes? I should like to draw that comparison on Wednesday.

Mr. Biffen: I shall try to help the hon. Gentleman as best I can. He has just asserted that I have a great deal more time at my disposal because of the announcement to delay the privatisation of the water authorities. That cannot conceivably affect next week's business, or, indeed, the balance of time left for this Session. Therefore, in view of the constraints under which I operate, and which the House will seek if it wishes to rise at some tolerably early time, he will have to make the speeches that he seeks within the disciplines set out for the Estimates day debate, and I am sure that he can do it.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): As you know, Mr. Speaker, before you came in a number of objections were raised about the treatment of private Members' Bills. The Leader of the House has not really answered the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). There are a number of private Members' Bills largely, but not exclusively, concerning the problems of pensioners in our society, which reflect a real concern that pensioners' living standards should be raised.

Will the Leader of the House rearrange the business for next Wednesday—as he appears to have a day on his hands—in order to ensure that those Bills are properly debated? There is a crying need to increase the living standards of pensioners from the present poverty levels. What proposals is he prepared to put to the Procedure

Committee or to the House so that private Members' Bills, which often reflect growing public anxiety and which require a lot of effort if they are to be enacted, can be properly debated and voted upon, and so that the nonsense of anonymous objectors who try to practise ventriloquy so that they are not identified can be brought to an end? The public would then know who and what interests were trying to destroy important reforms that have been introduced by individual hon. Members.

Mr. Biffen: The provision of time for private Member's legislation is governed by the Standing Orders of the House, and I have no opportunity or realistic ability to set them aside in the week ahead. Any hon. Member who heard this afternoon's transactions, or who has heard similar transactions on previous occasions, knows perfectly well that that issue is a matter of considerable concern to the House. However, it is not something new. Previous Procedure Committees have judged that there are real difficulties in essaying any alternative. However, the Procedure Committee is considering the matter, and I hope that the hon. Gentleman will give his evidence to it directly.

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): Should my right hon. Friend drop his guard and allow some chink in his defences over the private Members' business for next week, will he, instead of listening to Opposition Members, give higher priority to the motion of my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) on freedom of speech on our campuses and in our universities?

Mr. Biffen: I must be even handed. I can hold out no more hope to my hon. Friend than I held out to Opposition Members.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): I have considerable sympathy with the Leader of the House because he is being compelled to make numerous statements changing the business. If I was him, I might suspect that there was a plot by some of my colleagues in the Treasury, Foreign Office or Department of the Environment to lessen my chances over the leadership of the party. However, let us put that on one side.

Many people look forward in eager anticipation to 23 July. However, I understand that that is also the day when the Social Security bill is likely to leave the other place. If so, the House seems to have little time in which to consider the three defeats that the Government have suffered so far in the other place. I do not know whether the Leader of the House intends to introduce a guillotine motion in order to steam-roller the House into reversing the decisions of the other place. I regret that he was not in the House this morning when I presented a petition on behalf of 1,700 of my constituents, who protested that their incomes would be cut if the Bill was enacted.

We should certainly have a statement next Thursday about the timing of our consideration of the Social Security Bill. The right hon. Gentleman has suffered considerable criticism as a result of his handling of the European Communities (Amendment) Bill. We are to consider that again at a late hour on Thursday. Could we not consider that Bill at a more convenient time, given the grotesque limitations that the right hon. Gentleman has placed on debating the important matters contained in it?

Mr. Biffen: I cannot in any sense help with a comment on the timing of the Social Security Bill in the other place. However, it is clearly a matter of great concern to the House, and it was raised during business questions yesterday. I have nothing more to add to what I then said. In a sense, the same applies to the debate on the European Communities (Amendment) Bill. The Leader of the Opposition made a similar request. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman would not expect me to give him a different answer from the one that I gave to the Leader of the Opposition.

St Andrews University

Motion made, and Question proposed, that this House do now adjourn. —[Mr. Neubert.]

3.9 pm

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton (Fife, Central): When the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science — the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden) — replied to a similar debate to this one initiated on by 18 June by my hon. Friend the Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross), he said that there was a subject to certain qualifications about better management, especially financial management, the quality of teaching, and so on. The hon. Gentleman went on to use selective statistics to show how grateful Scotland should be for the wonderful advances made in Scottish education in the past seven or eight years. He cited the number of full-time students in higher education, but the debate was not about that. It was about universities. In fact, the number of university undergraduate entrants in Scotland remained virtually static between 1978 and 1985 at between 11,500 and 12,000.

"possibility of extra cash for the universities for the 1987-88 and subsequent financial years" —[Official Report, 18 June 1986; Vol. 99, c. 1164.]

I do not want to play the numbers game, because we have become used to the Government playing that game in health, housing and unemployment and few people believe a word they say. I prefer to use the more reliable test of what those at the sharp end of this operation think and say. On 14 June 1986 the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals of the Universities of the United Kingdom sent a letter to, I presume, all hon. Members. It concluded:

"The universities now face a major crisis. Because funding is too low, protecting excellence involves damaging much that is good."

The Committee offered a remedy — for 1986-87, £15 million should be provided from the contingency fund and for, 1987-88 to 1989-90, there should be "Enough extra cash to provide genuine level funding and the modernisation of equipment. At least £100 million is needed just to stabilise the system at the depressed 1986-87 level."

Whether that cash becomes available depends on the result of the struggle now going on in the Cabinet on future levels of public expenditure. The smiling face of the new Secretary of State for Education and Science and his skill as a public relations man will be no substitute for that hard cash.

I come to the St. Andrews problem. As I listened on 25 June to the new Secretary of State, I began to wonder, as did many other hon. Members, what the large lobby of university teachers on 12 June was all about. University staff are not, the most militant of people. They are civilised, reasonable men and women. But on 12 June they came marching down to this place from all over the United Kingdom to protest about the crisis in our universities. They came to complain not only about their salary, which is a scandal in itself, but about the overall funding of universities, the cuts they have had to endure over the past few years and the consequential effects of such short-sighted policies.

At that lobby I met representatives from St. Andrews university. Although it is not in my constituency, it affects the whole of Fife, indeed, the whole of Scotland. It draws its students from all over Scotland, the United Kingdom and the world. Those representatives put a case to me which I promised to bring before the House.

Before I do that, I should like to say a word or two about the plight facing all Scottish universities lest it be presumed that St. Andrews has a particular grievance. It is a general grievance. All eight universities in Scotland are facing major cuts in the next financial year. Five universities, Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh, St. Andrews and Stirling face cash cuts even on last year's figures. Although three of the universities have received cash increases, those increases are significantly less than the rate of inflation. Therefore, they are, in effect, real cuts.

The 1986-87 grants in Scotland are, on average, over 5 per cent. less than the minimum needed to maintain the position as it was in the previous year. If one looks at the whole period 1979-80 to 1985-86 the total of University Grants Committee grants to the Scottish universities has fallen in real terms from £191·9 million to £176·08 million, a cut of nearly £16 million. To put that another way, in order to restore the level of grant paid to the Scottish universities in 1979 the 1986-87 recurrent grant settlement would have have needed to be about £220 million, instead of which it is only £182 million. Despite the Minister's denial in an answer to me a few weeks ago and in the debate on 18 June, there is evidence of some regional discrimination in these matters. I shall try to spell out what that is.

I supplied the Minister with some information about St. Andrews which I hope has helped him to prepare a reply to the debate. As a result of the UGC's letters of 20 May and 27 May specifying funding allocation for 1986-87, St. Andrews will suffer a 0·4 per cent. cash cut, which is approximately a 5·4 per cent. cut in real university finance terms. That requires about £400,000 to be added to an already projected deficit for 1986-87.

The grant allocations were presumed to be based on an assessment of the quality of research being done in universities. Each university was examined department by department for the quality of its research. At St. Andrews 14 departments and sub-departments were graded as above average and five as below. However, it suffered a cut in its financial provisions. The reason for that treatment is apparently that the above average performance of St. Andrews was in the arts faculty, which attracts little external income for research. While the UGC and the Government tell the universities to concentrate on their strenghts they penalise universities such as St. Andrews because their recognised strengths are in the arts and there is an inability to attract external finance with such a discipline.

As the universities pointed out, research selectivity is not the main problem. The real problem is what is called the common unit of resource. The UGC has apparently made some calculations on the cost per student for each subject in each university. No university, and certainly not St. Andrews, seems to know how the calculations were made and whether they took account of the different teaching patterns in Scottish universities. It is significant that six of the eight universities in Scotland were told that for 1986-87 the implementation of the common unit of resource had operated to their financial disadvantage. It is important that the universities should know the full details of the criteria on which they are being judged. The UGC has apparently made no judgment of the quality of the teaching in our universities in arriving at its common unit of resource. I hope that the Minister will agree that the quality of teaching is of no less importance than the quality of the research that is undertaken at our universities.

The overall impact of recent developments at St. Andrews since 1979-80 can be summed up shortly. Since that year there has been a 27 per cent. cut in real income. That has far-reaching effects both long-term and short-term, not least on the threat to jobs, careers and morale. There is also the diminution of opportunities for university education for the increasing number of youngsters with academic qualifications that are sufficient to qualify and entitle them to enjoy them.

In an area of higher than average unemployment, it is especially tragic that these savage cuts are endangering the community and tourist services that the university can offer. I shall give one of two examples. The Crawford arts centre promotes exhibitions, professional drama and concerts, children's activities and community education. It is funded jointly by the university, the Scottish Arts Council and local authorities. Its present annual turnover is £100,000. The university contributes £45,000, the Arts Council £25,000 and the local authorities £4,500. The exhibitions at the arts centre attract over 20,000 visitors annually, covering painting, architecture, photography and other crafts. The university's funding of salaries has been cut. One full-time post has already gone, and it is now planned to cease payment of the director's salary after 31 March next year. Unless external funding of the centre can be found, the centre will be closed.

The Government might take the view, "What does it matter that such a centre should be closed? It has no bearing on the country's economic prosperity and it can be disbanded."

The same argument might be advanced in response to my second example. The department of music was started in 1946 and it now has four full-time teaching staff, all of whom conduct choirs and orchestras and perform on instruments as well as teaching and engaging in research. The concerts of the university's musical society and the chapel choir are open to the public. The department promotes organ recitals on one of the finest organs in Scotland, I gather, and gives a series of concerts in the summer vacation. Apart from providing a full range of music courses, the staff gives extra-mural courses for the adult education department. Again, the Government might brush that aside as having no consequence in the economic battle in which we are now engaged.

The same argument might be applied to my third example, which is the archaeological museum. The museum has a rich collection of Roman and middle east antiquities as well as early Scottish items. It obtains its funds from the university and the local authorities. It is in danger of closing for the same reasons that I adduced earlier.

Another example is the university's botanical garden, which has been built up over the past 20 years into one of the country's great botanical gardens. It is of international renown. There, the effect of the cuts in the past six years has meant that a staff of over 17 is down to half that figure, and is likely to fall still further unless the gardens get more cash.

Overall, the picture is very depressing, to put it no higher. The recent UGC proposals must result in the decline in the number of home students and an increase in overseas students who pay fees, although the university is forced to extract those fees. At a time when the country and employers are calling out for graduates and well-qualified personnel, St. Andrews and other universities are turning away would-be students.

The Scottish universities and the whole educational system have a vital contribution to make to counteract the decline of Scotland's manufacturing industry by the provision of a highly qualified work force and by the stimulation of technological innovation in new industries. The cuts in the finances for teaching and research can only accelerate Scotland's economic decline. We can only hope that the Government will heed the warnings coming from all quarters. They cannot pretend that the evidence is not there. It comes not, from political parties and those with axes to grind, but from people from all walks of life who are urging the Government to invest in our future, which means investing in education and, in this case, our universities.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science (Mr. George Walden): The hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton) set out his worries about university funding in general and his particular constituency concerns in his own inimitable way. As always, I am grateful. I receive a heavy postbag on higher education matters. Scottish university concerns take at least their fair share of that. We have now had three debates on higher education – including two on Scottish universities – in the last fortnight.

Let me start by restating the current position on access and on university funding. The Government have a very good record on access to higher education. The number of full-time home students is now 77,000 higher than it was in 1979. The proportion of 18 and 19-year-olds entering higher education has increased by more than an eighth and the number of mature entrants is also up by about 15 per cent. These increases contrast starkly with the falls in numbers and participation rates between 1975 and 1979 when the hon. Gentleman's party was in office. This encouraging national picture is fully reflected in Scotland, as those who were present will know from the figures that I quoted when replying two weeks ago to the debate initiated by the hon. Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross).

My sensibilities were deeply shocked by the sharp elitist distinction that the hon. Gentleman drew between universities and other aspects of education, such as polytechnics. I advise him to try that line on some of our better polytechnics. The Government's declared aim is to secure still further increases in higher education participation rates. We remain determined to press forward in that direction.

On university funding, matters rest at present with the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Sir K. Joseph) on 20 May, to which the hon. Gentleman referred. As announced, the Government are ready to increase financial provision for the universities, provided that they demonstrated real progress in implementing and building on the changes that are needed.

That is the background against which we have to examine the concerns that the hon. Member raised. I readily acknowledge that, like all universities, St. Andrews faces a difficult task in containing its expenditure within the funds available whilst sustaining quality and reshaping its provision in the light of developing national needs. I believe that, like others, it will be up to the task.

I say that with some little confidence because I had the pleasure of visiting Scotland's oldest university last March. It was a fairly whistle-stop tour, I am afraid – partly because of the diversity of the courses on offer—but I was impressed by what I saw. I also had some usefully frank and informative discussions with staff and students.

I want to look for a few moments now at the areas in which we have identified a need for improvement and at possible implications for St. Andrews. First, management. To a significant extent this must start at the top. I know that the principal of St. Andrews, Dr. Steven Watson, unfortunately died recently. I would like to pay tribute to him. He led the university successfully through a great deal of change over a period of 20 years. He was also an accomplished historian, and among other fields, Mr. Speaker, his researches focused on your distinguished office and on the contribution of some of your illustrious predecessors. It is no easy job being a vice-chancellor in today's world. Dr. Watson's work was well regarded and we wish his successor well.

Finally, on management, one issue which I cannot refrain from mentioning is tenure for academic staff. There can be no doubt that tenure in the form in which it is currently enjoyed by many academics is a major barrier to management flexibility and efficiency in the university system. The Government intend to press ahead, as soon as the parliamentary timetable allows, with legislation to limit the nature of tenure which can be granted in future. Therefore, I was very interested to hear of the strong attack by Mr. Stanley Adams, the new rector of St. Andrews, on the vested interest of tenure.

That brings me to the standards of teaching in universities, to which the hon. Gentleman referred. Scottish universities—because of their place within the education system in Scotland and because of their four-year degrees—have long had a reputation for being relatively more concerned about teaching than their counterparts south of the border. I am advised that that distinction is less true than it was, both because of increased recognition throughout the system of the importance of sustaining teaching quality—a levelling up, as it were, to the hon. Gentleman's standards—and because Scottish universities have been giving increasing attention to the need for high quality research.

I understand that the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals will shortly be publishing the final report of its working group, chaired by Professor Reynolds, which has been preparing advice and guidance on the means by which universities should monitor and maintain standards. All universities—English, Scottish and Welsh—will need to give priority to following up this work.

As hon. Members know, the UGC's recent grant allocations were not based, even in part, on an assessment of teaching quality in universities. The hon. Gentleman is right in that respect. I fully recognise that such assessments are very difficult, but I am hopeful that the UGC might be able to make some moves in that direction over the next few years. Judging from what the hon. Gentleman said, that should be a cause of some satisfaction both to him and to St. Andrews.

Let me turn now to selectivity in the funding of research. I regard this as of the utmost importance. This was reflected in the recent grant allocations and is generally accepted as necessary in order to provide more support for high quality research. It is also generally agreed that, on the whole, the UGC has done a good job. Not a single academic to whom I have talked about the question of selectivity has challenged the principle, although most of them challenge the result in this or that area. Many people will have the odd quibble. I have just said that nearly every academic to whom I have talked has the odd quibble, and it would be very surprising if that were not so. But without doubt there is no other body that could have tackled the job anywhere near as effectively as it has been tackled by the UGC, in very close consultation with some very distinguished people.

What the hon. Gentleman said about the number of sub-departments at St. Andrews with high research ratings was slightly misleading. I hope that he will not object to my putting it in that way. In fact, the University of St. Andrews emerged from the exercise with a broadly average rating. Six of its 13 main subject areas were assessed as average, three as above average and four as below average. In terms of individual subjects, research in psychology, art, history, classics and Russian was judged to be outstanding by international standards.

The key question now is the extent to which universities, including St. Andrews, pursue selectivity through their own internal arrangements—giving extra support to high quality work and taking a hard look at that which is below average. The UGC will be keeping all this under review over the next few years—refining its own procedures by experience and watching closely what individual universities do. It will be interesting to see how much changes.

In some, though by no means all, cases, lower quality work is a consequence of departments being small. I emphasise that I am not making a particular reference to St. Andrews. Where there are only one or two members of academic staff in a particular discipline it is that much harder to sustain high quality teaching and research cost-effectively. One solution which is appropriate in some cases is departmental rationalisation. St. Andrews, is, I know, already treading this road in co-operation with Dundee university. I hope that this can be actively pursued and that yet more universities will recognise the potential benefits from such changes.

Those are the directions in which Government policy is pointing. In none of them is a finger particularly pointed at St. Andrews or the Scottish universities generally. It is not our aim to disadvantage universities in Scotland; nor, despite the hon. Member's implications, has the UGC adopted grant allocation arrangements that are prejudicial to Scotland. The committee does not discriminate in any way between universities on grounds of their location. Standard considerations were applied to all universities. The UGC has circulated all universities with details of those, and will be spelling out the implications further in meetings with universities during the next few months.

None of that, however, means that the different pattern of provision in Scotland has gone unrecognised. The UGC's grants fully reflect the fact that most honours courses in Scotland last for four years. The hon. Member complained about funding, but, as a result of that, universities north of the border receive roughly 30 per cent. more funding per honours graduate than do their English and Welsh counterparts.

So far I have spoken only about matters of direct concern to universities, and St. Andrews in particular. That is the extent of the specific responsibilities that my right hon. Friend and I hold.

The hon. Member also spoke, quite rightly, about the impact of the university on its local community. He drew particular attention to the university's importance as an employer locally and to its considerable influence on total spending power in the area. I acknowledge that, but it is true of quite a number of our universities which are sited in or near relatively small towns. Another aspect of a university's impact on its local community is also important. A key part of the Government's policy for higher education is to encourage greater links between academics and industry in their widest sense. These can provide significant support for universities and help industry gain more quickly from the fruits of research by facilitating technological transfer and making highly qualified consultancy services available. St. Andrews' involvement in the Glenrothes enterprise trust and its technology centre are good examples of that.

As the hon. Gentleman referred at some length to the general position of universities, I want to stress that what is now happening in higher education in general and in unversities in particular will strengthen those vital institutions for the future. Of that I have no doubt. In a speech the other evening, which the hon. Gentleman was lucky enough not to have read, I said that in private I have been assured by many university people that they well understood that many of the changes now taking place would strengthen the system for the future.

I understand that many of the reforms being introduced are painful for dons and difficult for those who manage universities, but they are absolutely vital in the longer term. Any Government who allow the not wholly efficient management of the university system to continue would be less responsible than they should be.

The Government aim to increase participation in higher education above the record levels already achieved. We are reviewing university funding levels in the light of improvements in that sector. St. Andrews and its locality should benefit from that as much as the remainder of the country.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-two minutes to Four o'clock.

Mr. John Morris asked the Secretary of State for Wales when all the necessary translations of general certificate examination syllabuses into Welsh will be complete; how many of the translation staff of the Welsh Office have been seconded for this purpose; when this was done; and what proportion of the work has now been done.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The assistance being provided by the Welsh Office relates to the translation of those subject syllabuses corresponding to the 10 training manuals already translated into Welsh. They number some 24 syllabuses. Work is in hand on all the syllabuses so far received from the WJEC. The aim is to complete the translations by the end of July so that they can be available to schools by the beginning of the next school year. One member of the Welsh Office translation unit is co-ordinating the work.

Visiting Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many teaching days per year have been provided by visiting teachers in each year from 1979-80 to 1985-86, inclusive, in Welsh secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I presume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to foreign teachers on exchange visits to this country. Information on this subject is not centrally collected.

Schools (Repairs)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated total cost of outstanding urgent repairs to Welsh schools, at the latest date for which such information is available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information is not held centrally. Local education authorities are responsible for the maintenance of schools.

Schools (Remedial Staff)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many remedial staff have been employed by Welsh local education authorities in each of the last seven school years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information in the form requested in not centrally collected. That which is available relates only to peripatetic remedial teachers, figures for which are given in the table:

1978-70	206	123

School Curricula

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many schools in Wales provided teaching in the following subjects from 1979-80 to 1985-86: Latin, German, needlework, geology, drama, music and religious education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information supplied by the Welsh Joint Education Committee indicates the following numbers of schools where the subjects were examined as GCE O-level subjects.

Education Services (HMI Report)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales why Her Majesty's inspector's report on education services in Wales in 1984-85 was delayed.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 9 June 1986, in column 11.

ENVIRONMENT

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will be taking any further steps to encourage the introduction of unleaded petrol to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government are committed to the earliest practicable introduction of unleaded petrol in this country. Under the terms of directive 85/210/EEC, itself the result of a United Kingdom initiative, unleaded petrol should be generally available throughout the Community by 1 October 1989; and member states should take appropriate steps to ensure its balanced distribution and to encourage its use.

The need for additional provisions arises, first, from incompatibility of unleaded petrol with many of the engines in the present car fleet, as the use of unleaded petrol in cars designed for running on leaded petrol could cause severe mechanical damage to the engine; and, secondly, from the likelihood that unleaded petrol will be more expensive than leaded petrol to produce and distribute. Last November, the Department therefore consulted a wide range of interested bodies on ways to ensure that our target is met. Having considered the responses to our consultation exercise very carefully, I am now able to announce various measures to encourage the sale and use of unleaded petrol in the United Kingdom.

An important first step has already been taken.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his Budget statement that he would create a tax differential to offset the higher production costs of unleaded petrol, and that officials would discuss with the oil companies how this can best be achieved in time for next year's Budget.

It is important to ensure the availability of suitable cars as soon as possible. The Environment Council has been considering a draft EC directive on vehicle emissions, which sets out the dates from which member states may require new cars to be capable of running on unleaded petrol. At present it is subject to reserves by Denmark and Greece, which must be lifted before it can be adopted by the Council of Ministers. As soon as it has been adopted, we will implement the earliest dates set out in the directive; 1 October 1988 for new model cars over 2 litres; 1 October 1989 for all new model cars; and 1 October 1990 for all new registrations, unless a manufacturer can certify that major re-engineering would be involved.

We intend that there should be at least a minimal network of petrol stations offering unleaded petrol in 1987, building up to wide availability of the fuel by October 1989. I hope this can be achieved voluntarily by the industry, but the Government do not rule out taking measures to require the provision of unleaded petrol for garages above a particular size.

It will be particularly important for motorists to have full information on the new fuel, its availability, and its suitability for the car he or she drives. We will consult fully with interested bodies on a publicity campaign to be put in hand as unleaded petrol comes on to the market.

Finally, there is the particular question of the future of leaded 2-star petrol. Much of today's vehicle fleet that uses 2-star, can run equally well on unleaded petrol. Two-star leaded petrol will in any case eventually be displaced from many smaller forecourts as unleaded petrol is introduced. The Government will wish to consider the most appropriate timing for this.

We will make further announcements on details of these proposals as discussions develop. The broad framework, however, should outline for industry and the motorist the way forward we intend to take.

Council House Sales

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any recent representations about dealing with potential defects in title in right-to-buy sales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Representations have been received from my hon. Friend and from my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville). I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 23 April at column 283.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities in the north-west have made representations seeking increases in housing investment programme allocations for the current financial year.

Sir George Young: Six authorities have made formal representations seeking increases.

Green Belt

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of green belt land have been built on in the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I regret that this information is not available centrally. Green belt land should not normally be built on because the long-standing policy is that inside a green belt approval should not be given, except in very special circumstances for purposes other than agriculture, sport, cemeteries, institutions standing in extensive grounds, or other uses appropriate to a rural area.

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the preservation of the green belt between Welwyn Garden City and Hatfield in the light of the Haven Green leisure park and housing plan submitted to him by Welwyn Hatfield district council.

Mr. Tracey: Welwyn Hatfield district council has forwarded to the Department over 60 individual representations, together with two petitions, concerning a proposal for a leisure park at Haven Green and an application for residential development on an adjoining site. Many of these representations refer to the green belt between Welwyn Garden City and Hatfield. Two letters have been sent direct to the Department requesting that these two applications be called in for my right hon. Friend's decision. The proposed leisure park at Haven Green was not referred formally to the Department, and I understand that Welwyn Hatfield district council has now deemed itself planning permission for this development. The proposed residential development has been referred to my right hon. Friend as a substantial departure from the development plan. He is considering whether it should be called in for decision.

London Docklands

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the definition of the role and function of the community services liaison department of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Sir George Young: LDDC's community liaison department co-ordinates links between the corporation and local community groups, both directly and through the area teams.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to permit local authorities to commission and carry out surveys and research on their own behalf in order to assess and attempt to verify the findings of any investigation by NIREX into the suitability of sites in their area for the construction of nuclear waste repositories.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local authorities already have powers under the Town and Country Planning General Regulations 1976 to deem themselves planning permission for development which could include geological surveys, where this is necessary. I am not aware that legislation is required to enable local authorities to carry out research not involving development under planning legislation.

Housing (Cornwall)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council owned houses have been sold by each district council in Cornwall since 1980.

Sir George Young: The district councils in Cornwall have reported selling the following numbers of houses and flats between 1 April 1980 and 31 March 1986:

	Number
Caradon	631
Carrick	*725
Kerrier	631
North Cornwall	807
Penwith	570
Restormel	793
Isles of Scilly	*7

* Returns incomplete.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of residential units in each of the district council areas in Cornwall which are second houses or holiday homes, and as to what percentage they represent of the housing stock.

Sir George Young: The latest available information is the numbers of household spaces counted in the 1981 census as being second residences or holiday accommodation which were unoccupied on census night. The figures are derived from table 18 of the census 1981 county report for Cornwall.

Unoccupied second residences and holiday accommodation, April 1981

	Number	Percentage of all household spaces
Caradon	1,811	6·3
Carrick	1,669	5·1

North Cornwall	3,169	10·9
Penwith	1,953	7·8
Restormel	1,657	5·2
Isles of Scilly	156	15·7

Other second homes and holiday accommodation were counted among those household spaces occupied on census night by people who were not usual residents.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many residential units have been bought from the private sector to enable them to be let to council tenants by each district council in Cornwall for each year since 1980.

Sir George Young: The district councils in Cornwall have reported acquiring the following numbers of dwellings in the financial years from 1980-81:

*Dwellings Acquired for Retention in Council Stock

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses are owned by each district council in Cornwall.

Sir George Young: The latest information relates to 1 April 1985 and was provided in the council's housing investment programme returns. The figures are listed in column A11 of "HIP1 (1985) all items print" which is available in the Library.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many residential units have been built by each district council in Cornwall for each year since 1980.

Sir George Young: The numbers of house building completions reported by each district council in Cornwall for the years 1980 to 1983 appear in issue 73 of "Local Housing Statistics" and for 1984 and 1985 in issue 77. Copies are available in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the estimated net revenue expenditure on bed and breakfast accommodation for homeless households recorded by local authorities on his Department's RO4 forms for the financial years (a) 1982-83, (b) 1983-84, (c) 1984-85 and (d) 1985-86; and if he will give this information for England as a whole and for each local authority area.

Sir George Young: I will place the information available, shortly, in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish any estimates prepared by his Department of the potential effect on the number of homeless households currently placed by local authorities in bed and breakfast accommodation of a relaxation in his Department's controls on local authority acquisition of empty private sector properties.

Sir George Young: No such estimates have been prepared.

We look to local authorities to make the best possible use of their existing stock.

Highway Authorities

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what data he has available on failures by highway authorities to comply with section 27(2)(d) of the Countryside Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have no recent information as to progress made by highway authorities in the signposting of public rights of way. Failure by an authority to comply with this statutory requirement is a matter for the courts.

Radioactivity (Cancer)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent the United Kingdom's emergency reference levels for radioactivity are drawn from a basis of acceptable risk of cancer resulting from wholebody doses of radioactivity; and to what extent emergency reference levels for one radioisotope take account of other radioisotopes to which individuals may be simultaneously exposed.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom's emergency reference levels for radioactivity, which are advisory for Government, were issued by the National Radiological Protection Board in 1981. They are figures for dose received by whole body and individual organs or tissues from all radionuclides. They are based on balancing the level of risk from harmful effects of radiation with the social cost and risk of counter measures.

West Yorkshire Metropolitan County Council

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the total capital assets of the West Yorkshire metropolitan county council on 31 March at the time of the abolition of that county council.

Mr. Tracey: Local authorities are not required to maintain a balance sheet recording their total capital assets and no such record exists for West Yorkshire county council.

Opencast Coalmining

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he takes of the adequacy of liaison arrangements with the local community when deciding whether to approve applications for authorisation of opencast coalmining sites.

Mr. Tracey: Local liaison committees can provide a useful forum to deal with any matters arising in connection with mineral operations and provide an opportunity for views and information to be exchanged between the operator and those most closely affected; their establishment is to be encouraged. However, the setting up of a liaison committee and the terms under which it operates are essentially matters for local negotiation and agreement.

Urban Development Grants

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many urban development grants were made in each of the last three years; at what total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: For each of the last three financial years, and for this financial year to date, offers of urban development grant made are as follows:

(£ million, rounded)

	Number of schemes	UDG and other public expenditure	Private investment	Total
1983-84	70	37	185	222
1984-85	56	23	91	114
1985-86	54	25	79	103
1986-87*	14	6	32	38
Totals	194	92	386	478

*To date.

These figures relate to offers of grant which have been accepted or which are on the table. Offers which were not taken up are excluded. The expenditure figures relate to total estimated costs; not all of the expenditure has yet been incurred.

Estates (Improvement)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many estates have been improved under the priority estates projects in each of the last three years; at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: During the last three years the priority estates project has worked with local authorities to improve and localise management on 28 estates.

In 1983-84, three projects were under way; 17 began in 1984-85; and eight in 1985-86. Work with all but the original three projects is continuing. The direct costs of the priority estates project in these three years, including national advisory and promotional work drawing experience from the 28 estate schemes, was £530,000.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the contracts, with the subject of the assignment, awarded to management consultancy or accounting firms by his Department in 1985, with the name of the consultants concerned.

Mr. Ridley: I will provide the information as soon as our current survey of consultancy contracts let in the financial year 1985-86 is completed.

Palace Chambers Development

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the inclusion of a general store type of shop in the proposed Palace Chambers development.

Sir George Young: As I advised my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), on 16 June, at column 405, plans for the new Palace Chambers are at an early stage. It is intended to reprovide shops on the ground floor and I will give careful consideration to the suggestion that there should be a general store.

Parish Councils

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how long the outstanding recommendations of the Local Government Boundary Commissioners on where parish councils should be established have been with him awaiting a decision.

Mrs. Rumbold: Between one month and two years.

Leicester (Inner Area Partnership)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a decision on Leicester's inner area partnership submission for 1986 to 1989.

Mrs. Rumbold: My decision on the Leicester inner area programme was conveyed to the city and county councils on 19 June.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by county, all the applications for gipsy sites in England which he has called in for his determination; if he will state in each case the date when he called in the applications; and whether in each case the proposed sites have or have not been the subject of a public inquiry.

Mr. Tracey: There have been two such applications called in during the present Parliament. They are:

(1) in Oxfordshire: application called in on 12 October 1983, and a public local inquiry held on 9 October 1984; and

(2) in Hampshire: application called in on 18 April 1986, and a public local inquiry arranged for 1 July 1986.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he expects to make a decision on the proposal for a gipsy site at Hinksey Hill in Oxfordshire; and on what date he called in the proposal.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend hopes to issue his decision very soon. The Oxfordshire county council applied for planning permission for the gipsy site to the then Secretary of State on 15 August 1984, following a direction issued by him on 12 October 1983.

Homes Insulation

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library of the House a copy of the research carried out by the Building Research Establishment into the standards of draught proofing for existing windows and doors; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The work is continuing, and no final report has yet been prepared.

Crown Suppliers

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to provide the departmental trade union side with details of the report of the review team considering the future of the Crown Suppliers and of their recommendations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Copies of the review team's report, excluding only certain commercially sensitive material, were sent to the departmental trade union side last December. I will make a statement when we have fully considered all the factors which need to be taken into account when deciding on the future of the Crown Suppliers, including the views of the central unit on purchasing.

Water Rates (Yorkshire)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with representatives at the Yorkshire water authority about the removal of payment charges from pensioners wishing to pay water rates by instalments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have not discussed this with the authority. Detailed charging arrangements are a matter for individual water authorities acting within their powers and duties.

EMPLOYMENT

Home Workers

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Paymaster General what was the number of home workers by region and trade at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The most recent national estimates of home workers are from the 1981 survey of home-based workers in England and Wales. Table 1 shows the number of home workers by region, distinguishing manufacturing home work from other white-collar and service sector work done at home. Table 2 shows the number of home workers in industry.

Employment Measures

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the progress of special employment measures for young people.

Mr. Trippier: Progress in setting up two-year YTS, the Government's main training measure for young people, has been excellent. The new programme began in April and we have already been offered all the places that will be required. We have also introduced the new workers scheme to follow on from YTS to help many more young people gain a foothold on the employment ladder.

Job Vacancies

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General what are the total numbers of unfilled job vacancies currently recorded at (a) all jobcentres and (b) the Leicester jobcentre; of those vacancies, how many have remained unfilled for (i) six months and (ii) 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: On 2 May 1986 there were 178,801 unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in Great Britain, and 1,061 unfilled vacancies at the Leicester jobcentre. Analysis of the length of time vacancies remain unfilled is not available in the form requested.

Highfields Task Force

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General if the Highfields task force is receiving the full co-operation of Leicester city council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Rooker asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will arrange to give more specific advice to applicants for the enterprise allowance scheme at the information session about the need to apply for help whilst still in receipt of social security benefits;

(2) how many applicants applied for help under the enterprise allowance scheme after operation of their business commenced in the last period for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Hoyle asked the Paymaster General what information he has about the trend in employment in the pharmaceutical industry over the last five years and about how this compares with the trend in employment in manufacturing industry over the same period.

Mr. Lang: The table shows the trends in employment in the pharmaceutical industry, as defined by activity heading 2570 of the Standard Industrial Classification 1980, and in manufacturing industries.

Circular 109/252 (School Leavers)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General (1) when the circular 109/252 was issued; when it was withdrawn; and how many changes in the rules relating to claims from school leavers occurred betwen those two dates;

(2) if he will investigate the circumstances in which a telex was sent to local unemployment benefit offices referring to circular 109/252 which was three years old and which contained incorrect information about entitlement to benefits; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that those young people who have been discouraged from claiming supplementary benefit by staff in local unemployment benefit offices on the basis of the erroneous information contained in circular 109/252 are now encouraged to make a claim.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Youth Training Schemes

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General why his Department has stopped publishing figures relating to numbers employed on YTS schemes;

(2) how many young people were employed on or about to leave YTS schemes in the United Kingdom in May.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Work Permit (Polish National)

Mr. Spencer asked the Paymaster General what response he has sent to the chief executive of Leicester city council regarding his request for a six-week work permit for a Polish national permanently resident in Strasbourg, who wishes to join a training attachment for Strasbourg secretaries organised by the Leicester/Strasbourg twinning association, which his Department is dealing with under reference GW 8608681.

Mr. Lang: An official in my Department's overseas labour section telephoned the chief executive on 10 June to explain that the application could not be approved because it did not satisfy the requirements of the work permit scheme. A letter confirming in detail the reasons for this decision will be sent shortly.

Occupational Medicine and Hygiene Laboratories (Sheffield)

Mr. Dobson asked the Paymaster General what is the estimated cost of relocating in Sheffield the occupational medicine and hygiene laboratories of the Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General why his Department has stopped publishing the details of the numbers of people on temporary employment measures and the YTS with the unemployment and vacancy figures; and if he will arrange for these figures to be made available on a monthly basis together with their effect on the register.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The numbers of people assisted by employment measures and YTS are now published regularly in the Employment Gazette.

It is difficult to calculate precisely the effect on the unemployment count of employment measures; their estimated average effectiveness was set out in table 3.7.13 of the public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 9702. YTS is a permanent training scheme.

Although estimates of the overall effect on unemployment of the employment measures are available, it is not appropriate to present these routinely as a reliable monthly indicator because of the uncertain assumptions involved in their calculation. It is also not necessary to present them since they represent only one detail of the overall labour market.

Bakeries (Departmental Visits)

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General when was the last time that (a) he and (b) officials of his Department paid an official visit to a bakery.

Mr. Lang: Neither I nor my right hon. and learned Friend has undertaken an official visit to a bakery.

The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost given the large number of officials of the Department who visit premises, including bakeries, in connection with their statutory function.

Technical and Vocational Initiative (Batley and Spen)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General what technical and vocational initiative proposals he has approved in the Batley and Spen constituency.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Baking Industry

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General how many representations for repeal of the Baking Industry (Hours of Work) Act in the past three years he has received from baking employers.

Mr. Lang: During recent consultations with employers' associations on the baking industry, the Federation of Bakers, National Association of Master Bakers, Confectioners and Caterers, Cake and Biscuit Alliance and the Co-operative Employers' Association all favoured repeal.

CIVIL SERVICE

Occupational Health Care

Mr. Jessel asked the Minister for the Civil Service what arrangements it is proposed should be made to improve the occupational health care of civil servants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: An efficiency scrutiny was carried out in 1985 on the occupational health and hygiene provision throughout the Civil Service. The report recommended the merging of existing services to create an integrated and more efficient and effective organisation. This recommendation has been accepted, and an occupational health service will be formed with effect from 23 June 1986 by the amalgamation of the Civil Service Medical Advisory Service of the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) and the Civilian Medical Services Directorate of the Ministry of Defence. It will be located within the Cabinet Office (MPO). My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has approved this transfer of responsibilities from the Ministry of Defence to the Management and Personnel Office.

The creation of the occupational health service will facilitate a fundamental change from a therapeutic medical and nursing service to one centred on the work place and essentially preventive in character. It will be well placed to take advantage of developments in recent years of scientific technique for the identification and measurement of environmental hazards, and of the substantial contribution which scientists and nurses trained in occupational health are able to make.

There will be substantial economies of scale through the integration of the present fragmented services, with long-term benefits for management from reductions in the duplication of facilities provided elsewhere and by promoting greater efficiency.

Copies of the scrutiny report and of the proposed charter for the occupational health service have been placed in the Library of the House.

SECOND ESTATES COMMISSIONER

Broken Rites

Mr. Frank Field asked the Second Estates Commissioner what financial help the Church Commissioners have been able to offer Broken Rites, the self-support group of deserted ex-wives of clergy.

Sir William van Straubenzee: None to this organisation, but the Commissioners have discussed how the House of Bishops can be helped in its exercise of pastoral care in such cases.

See House, London

Mr. Frank Field asked the Second Estates Commissioner when plans for building a new See house for the London Diocese were received; and what sum from the Commissioners is asked towards the project.

Sir William van Straubenzee: I shall write to the hon. Member.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Liverpool Fans (Extradition Notices)

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General when the extradition notices will be served upon the Liverpool football club supporters who are alleged to have been involved in the disorders at the Heysel stadium in May 1985.

The Solicitor-General: I understand from my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary that no such application for extradition has been received from the Belgian Government, although it has indicated an intention to apply. As and when such application is received he will consider making an order under section 7 of the Extradition Act 1870.

Snaresbrook Crown Court

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Attorney-General what was the percentage acquittal rate, in cases where defendants plead not guilty, in the last four six-month periods for which figures are available, at Snaresbrook Crown court.

The Solicitor-General: The percentage of defendants acquitted after pleading not guilty to all counts at Snaresbrook Crown court in the last four six-monthly periods is as follows:

	per cent.
April 1984 to September 1984	51·9
October 1984 to March 1985	58·7
April 1985 to September 1985	50·3
October 1985 to March 1986	48·6

Court Documents (European Court Decision)

Mr. John Morris asked the Attorney-General what action he proposes to take to give effect in United Kingdom law to the judgment of the European Court in the case involving the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman).

The Attorney-General: There is no judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in respect of the application brought by the honourable Member for Peckham. A friendly settlement, within the meaning of article 28(b) of the European Convention on Human Rights, has been reached between the parties, and the European Commission of Human Rights has recently adopted a report recording this solution. The Government are now considering how best to carry into effect the undertaking to seek to change the law given in those proceedings.

SCOTLAND

Oil Industry

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed by the oil industry in Scotland in (a) offshore work and (b) onshore and downstream work at the latest date for which information is available and in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: It is not possible to provide a breakdown of employment in the oil industry into offshore and onshore employment. The classification available from census of employment results is as follows:

(a) The extraction of mineral oil and natural gas in Scotland:

	Number
September 1981	17,500
June 1978	10,200
June 1977	5,900

(b) Mineral oil processing in Scotland:

	Number
September 1981	3,400
June 1978	2,400
June 1977	2,500

Information is not available for the intervening years, nor as yet from the 1984 census of employment.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average weekly wage in (a) Scotland and (b) the North sea oil industry at the latest date for which information is available; and what is the average weekly wage in Scotland not including the earnings of those employed in the oil industry.

Mr. Rifkind: In April 1985, the average gross weekly earnings of full-time male employees on adult rates in Scotland, whose pay was not affected by absence, was (a) £189·7 in all industries; (b) £329·8 in the extraction of mineral oil and natural gas (Activity heading 1300); and (c) £186·5 in industries excluding those in Activity heading 1300. These figures are derived from the new earnings survey, and are consequently subject to sampling error.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are employed in the oil rig and module production yards in Scotland; and if he will give the corresponding figure in each of the last five years.

Mr. Rifkind: The last available estimate of employment in oil rig and module production yards in Scotland over the last five years is as follows:

Year	Employment
June 1981	8,036
June 1982	9,392
June 1983	8,425
June 1984	6,684
June 1985	4,941

Oil Production

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average quarterly output of the North sea oil fields in barrels per day in each of the last eight quarters for which records are available.

Mr. Rifkind: The average quarterly output of the North seal oilfields in barrels per day is estimated to have been as follows:

Thousand of barrels per day average rate per quarter

	Daily average

Q3	2,391·7

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the largest 100 sites of special scientific interest located within Scotland, in each case giving the area covered in square miles and the area in which it is located.

Mr. Ancram: The Nature Conservancy Council has provided the following information. Areas are given in hectares.

Forestry

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the various broadleaved assistance schemes in reversing the decline of deciduous woodlands.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1986, c. 670]: The Forestry Commission introduced a broadleaved woodland grant scheme on 1 October 1985 which offers significantly higher rates of grants for the use of broadleaved species on their own. This scheme has had an encouraging start, with over 1,800 applicationss being received in the first six months covering nearly 11,400 hectares of existing broadleaved woodland and land proposed for planting with broadleaves.

In the year ended 31 March 1986, the Forestry Commission grant-aided some 850 hectares of new broadleaved planting under its various schemes, including 46 hectares under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme: this represented a total increase in new broadleaved planting of some 42 per cent. over the previous year. This figure is expected to be significantly higher in succeeding years as planting under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme gets into its stride.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report Her Majesty's Government's conservation and landscape strategy in relation to forestry and woodlands.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1986, c. 670]: Landscape and conservation policies and strategies for forestry and woodlands have been drawn up by the Forestry Commission and published in the following papers: Policy and Procedure Paper No. 3 — The Forestry Commission and Landscape Design; Policy and Procedure Paper No. 4 The Forestry Commission and Conservation.

The Government's policy for broadleaved woodlands was set out in the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) on 24 July 1985, in columns 557 to 561 and further information has been given in the following Forestry Commission publications: Policy and Procedure Paper No. 5 The Policy for Broadleaved Woodlands; Guidelines for the Management of Broadleaved Woodlands. Copies of all these publications are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss alternative methods in controlling forestry planting.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1986, c. 670]: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on this subject.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make an integrated approach to agriculture and forestry in the uplands and lowlands of the United Kingdom.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1986, c. 670]: An integrated approach to agriculture and forestry developments is sought through the consultations which take place between the Forestry Commission and the Agriculture Departments over applications for grant aid for afforestation proposals. This continues to be our policy.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will take steps to require private forestry companies to include recreational provision in any large scale planting scheme which benefits from forestry planting grants.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1986, c. 670]: Applicants for grant under the Forestry Commission's forestry grant scheme and broadleaved woodland grant scheme are already required to accept as an objective that they should provide such opportunities for recreation, including provision for public access, as may be appropriate. Applicants are also required to accept as a specific condition of these schemes that they will enter into discussions, if requested by the local authority, with a view where appropriate to negotiating an agreement for public access; this condition does not, however, bind the applicant to entering into any such agreement.

DEFENCE

MOD Police (Accommodation)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence when numbers 42 and 85 Amplethorp road SE2 were vacated by the Ministry of Defence police; and when he expects them to be re-occupied.

Mr. Lee: Since Number 85 Amplethorp road is occupied it is assumed that the hon. Member intended to refer to Numbers 42 and 93 Amplethorp road, both of which are empty.

These two houses have been vacant for approximately 18 months and arrangements are being made for their return to the London borough of Greenwich, from which they have been on loan to the Ministry of Defence.

Household Division (Recruitment)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will direct that the traditional recruiting areas of the Household Division be extended to include all areas where there is a large ethnic minority population.

Mr. Freeman: Between them, the regiments forming the Household Division cover the whole of Great Britain and Ireland.

NATO (Recruitment Policies)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to seek to establish a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation goal of standardisation of recruitment policies and procedures in relation to equal opportunities and positive discrimination in favour of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Freeman: These are matters for decision by individual member states. Her Majesty's Forces are equal opportunity employers under the terms of the Race Relations Act 1976 and recruitment and promotion are on merit alone. Discrimination in selection to achieve racial balance is not allowed under that Act.

RFA Argus (Weapons System)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the adequacy of the close-in weapon system that is to be provided for the helicopter support ship Argus now being converted at Harland and Wolff.

Mr. Lee: RFA Argus will be fitted to receive twin 30mm and 20mm mountings. However, the mountings themselves will not be fitted except for exercises and in times of emergency. Such "fit to receive" facilities are quite adequate for this ship.

Petty Officer John Black

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any of his Department's employees including members of Her Majesty's forces or any person acting on their behalf entered the apartment in an official capacity in Sabinillas, Spain, of that late Petty Officer John Black, Royal Navy, between 24 and 27 December 1983.

Mr. Freeman: No. My Department was not aware of Petty Officer Black's death until after that period.

Royal Ordnance (Privatisation)

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the comparative implications for the export potential for tanks and other armoured vehicles of (a) selling the Royal Ordnance factories as a single unified company and of (b) selling the Leeds and Nottingham Royal Ordnance factories separately to Vickers plc.

Mr. Lee: The means of achieving the privatisation of Royal Ordnance plc is being considered further following the recent decision not to proceed with a flotation of the whole company this summer.

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to sell the Leeds and Nottingham Royal Ordnance factories separately to Vickers plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence told the House on 17 June, it remains our intention to privatise Royal Ordnance and we are giving further consideration to the means of achieving this objective.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the direct and indirect costs to his Department of the work involved in arranging for the privatisation of the Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Lee: The Comptroller and Auditor General gave details of the Department's costs for the work involved in the incorporation of Royal Ordnance plc in his report on that exercise (H.C. 343). The preliminary estimate for the costs incurred since then for professional advisers on privatisation is about £1 million. In addition, there are, of course, MOD staff costs, but it is not possible readily to quantify these.

Military Units, Woolwich

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the military units housed at the Royal arsenal, Woolwich.

Mr. Freeman: The following units of the Ministry of Defence are located at the Royal arsenal, Woolwich:

Army Cataloguing Authority
Directorate General Defence Quality Assurance
Naval Publications Store
Air Publications and Forms Store
RAF Movement Unit (London)
RAF Signals Unit
Ministry of Defence Police

Trident

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs will be dependent on the Trident project programme in 1988.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

SP70 Howitzer

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the technical problems delaying the SP70 howitzer's entry into service; and when he expects them to be overcome;

(2) if he will list the precise dates of the concept stage, of the feasibility study stage, of the project definition stage, and of the full development stage of the SP70 155 mm howitzer; and if he will list the specific reasons for the delay at each stage.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

VC10 Aircraft

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to convert further VC10 aircraft to tankers; and what is the reason for the delay.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Tucano Basic Trainer

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence how long is the delay on the Tucano basic trainer programme; and what is the reason for it.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Equipment Budget

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what cuts he will be making in the equipment budget in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Tigerfish HWT Torpedo

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the precise dates of the concept stage, of the feasibility study stage, of the project definition stage and of the full development stage of the Tigerfish HWT torpedo; and if he will list the specific reasons for the delays at each stage.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Torpedo Programme

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he has introduced into the torpedo programme to increase competition.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Research Contracts

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has awarded any classified research contracts to universities or other educational establishments.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Northern Ireland (Security Forces)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the numbers of soldiers killed in Northern Ireland by regiment in each year since 1968.

Mr. Freeman: I will answer shortly.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the numbers of soldiers wounded in Northern Ireland by regiment in each year since 1968.

Mr. Freeman: Between August 1969, when troops were deployed on duties in support of the civil power, and 19 June 1986, 4,099 soldiers were wounded. Information by regiment is not readily available and could be provided only with disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proportion of soldiers in Northern Ireland are of West Indian, African, Asian or other minority groups in the United Kingdom;

(2) what proportion of soldiers killed in Northern Ireland were of West Indian, African, Asian or other ethnic minority groups annually since 1969;

(3) what proportion of soldiers wounded in Northern Ireland are of West Indian, Indian, African, Asian and other ethnic minority groups.

Mr. Freeman: No records are maintained of the ethnic origins of members of the armed forces.

Procurement Executive

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many people work for the Procurement Executive; how many are civilians; and how many have service personnel;

(2) if he is satisfied with the operation of the Procurement Executive management board;

(3) who are the members of the Procurement Executive management board;

(4) how many secondments there have been both inwards and outwards in 1985-86 from the Procurement Executive.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Equipment Programmes

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the equipment programmes in which he is experiencing management or contractual difficulties; and if he will specify what precise steps he is taking to overcome them.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Military Education Committees

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many military education committees are in existence; and where are their functions.

Mr. Freeman: "Military education committee" is the term used to describe the committee which supervises UOTC training at a university. There are 19 of these committees composed of senior members of academic staff and the commanding officers of service units connected with the university. The duties of the committees are:

To promote defence studies.

To supervise UOTC or other Service units at the University.

To make recommentations for the appointments of Honorary Colonels and Commanding Officers.

To request the appointment of regular training Majors.

To liaise with the Services on matters affecting the UOTC.

To liaise with COMEC (the co-ordinating committee for military education committees).

RAF (Equipment)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the operational and financial implications for the RAF of the sale of Tornados to Oman and Saudi Arabia, and the diverting of these aircraft from the RAF re-equipment programme;

(2) if he will make a statement on what future equipment orders he is currently considering for the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Lightning Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the timing, extent and cost of the life extension programme of the Lightning fighter aircraft.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Communication Systems

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of the upgrading of Royal Naval and Royal Air Force communication systems, including high frequency, low frequency and extra low frequency.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Royal Navy (Equipment)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on what future equipment orders he is currently considering for the Royal Navy.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Army (Equipment)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on what future equipment orders for the Army he is at present considering.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Miss Fookes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the royal yacht Britannia will be refitted in Her Majesty's dockyard, Devonport.

Mr. Lee: After considering all factors, I have decided that HMY Britannia's refit will be undertaken at Devonport dockyard, where it is now clear that the necessary capacity will be available in the required timescale. An agreement has been reached between management and industrial and non-industrial trade unions at Devonport which provides for flexible working practices and the avoidance of delay through industrial action. I hope that Britannia will provide a welcome addition to the work load of the dockyard, and underline the confidence which we have in both management and the work force.

Radar Facilities (Fylingdales)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government have given permission to the United States of America to build a phased array radar at Fylingdales for early warning against ballistic missile attack; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: As I stated in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw) on 22 May 1986, at columns 263-64, the Government have decided to proceed with a modernisation programme in co-operation with the United States Government. The modernised radar referred to will be a phased array radar.

Defence Programme

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of gross domestic product will be spent on the defence programme in 1988-89 compared with 1978-79 and 1985-86.

Mr. Stanley: I shall reply shortly.

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what savings would accrue to the defence programme by cutting the surface fleet to 42 ships.

Mr. Stanley: The savings would depend on a range of assumptions, such as the composition of the surface fleet remaining and the period of time over which this reduction was made. Such a reduction in the size of the surface navy is not under consideration and the carrying out of hypothetical costing exercise would involve disproportionate costs.

Jaguar Aircraft

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Jaguar aircraft are now in storage in the United Kingdom; and what is to be their role.

Mr. Stanley: Forty-five Jaguar aircraft are held in storage in the United Kingdom, some of them in support of the long-term fleet whose roles are offensive support and reconnaissance. Those not required for RAF purposes will be offered for sale. The number of aircraft required to support the long-term front line strength is classified.

HMS Opossum

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the coming refit of HMS Opossum will be put out to tender.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Contracts (Tendering)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if it remains Her Majesty's Government's policy to submit submarine refits to competitive tender;

(2) if the refit of HMS Opossum will be put out to competitive tender.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates he makes of the potential additional savings that would arise from removing from the royal dockyards core work and submitting this work to competitive tender.

Mr. Lee: The introduction of commercial management to the royal dockyards will, of itself, introduce competitive pressures into the pricing of all dockyard work. Our current programme reflects the requirement, amongst other factors, to maintain a strategic capacity in the royal dockyards for reasons of national security. No estimate is, therefore, available of the potential cost or savings of putting the whole of the core programme to competitive tendering.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the refit of the royal yacht Britannia will be submitted for competitive tender.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Miss Fookes).

NHS (US Casualties)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what exactly are the arrangements under the United States/United Kingdom lines of communication agreement for the treatment of United States casualties in National Health Service hospitals in the event of an emergency.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are making contingency plans for the best use of all National Health Services resources in the event of war and these plans will cover the treatment in United Kingdom hospitals of both British and American military casualties should war in Europe ever break out. These plans will be incorporated in planning for the National Health Service as a whole in time of crisis or war, and are part of a continuous process. The United States is also establishing its own contingency hospitals which would be activated in a crisis; these will be equipped, manned and financed by the United States Government and would reduce the burden on the National Health Service.

In transition to war, health authorities, if so directed, will cease to admit all but emergency cases and will arrange for patients whose retention is not medically essential to be sent home, the purpose being to free hospitals to deal with civil and military casualties. The latter may include United States service personnel.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Birmingham Bombings

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the inquiry presently being conducted into the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings is considering how they came by the injuries inflicted upon them during their first week in custody.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend's present examination of the case includes consideration of documents presented in support of allegations made by the six men at their trial that they were assaulted while in police custody. In 1976 a number of prison officers were acquitted of charges of assaulting the six men, but the Department accepted that they sustained injury while in prison.

Fire Services (London)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services, during the 1986 annual inspection of the London fire brigade, examined the operational implications for fire cover in Greater London of the loss of three 100-ft turntable ladders and hydraulic platform appliances and of one foam tender appliance from the London fire brigade on 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services was involved in the recent review by the London fire brigade of all its special appliances and it was satisfied with the arrangements made for 1986-87.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of fire cover in London using his Department's computerised fire cover model; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None. The assessment of risk and the consequent levels of fire cover in London is a matter for the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority. The possible use of computer models to assist in such assessment is a matter for the authority to decide.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information his Department collects about average attendance times taken by fire appliances in London in response to emergency calls.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information on the times of the first call to the fire brigade and of the arrival of the brigade at the incident in recorded on the reports which are submitted to the Home Office by local authority fire brigades on all fires on which a detailed report is made – it is, those which involve casualties, rescues or escapes, occur in a building in use, unless confined to a chimney, or in a vehicle or other outdoor location having some intrinsic value. These reports serve administrative as well as statistical purposes and the information on the time of brigade arrival is not regularly analysed statistically. Analysis of these data on attendance times for the London area would involve disproportionate costs. However, attendance times were analysed as part of a special exercise on fire cover standards in 1982, and aggregate information for the 14 participating brigades, including London, was published and is to be found on pages 68, 76, 82 and 89 of the report of the Joint Committee on Standards of Fire Cover, published by the Home Office in May 1985.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be in a position to reach a decision about the arrangements for fire services in London for 1987-88.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Early in 1987, after completion of consultations between the Home Office and the other parties involved.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards (a) the closure of certain London fire stations at night and at weekends and (b) the use of part-time firemen in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The possible provision of day-manned fire stations and the employment of retained staff is in the first instance a matter for the fire authority concerned subject to the statutory requirement to obtain my right hon. Friend's approval to any resulting variation in the agreed establishment scheme. I understand that the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority has no current proposals on these lines.

Fires

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have died in fires in hotels, bed and breakfast accommodation and houses in multiple occupation in each of the last five years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The readily available figures are given in the table. A more specific breakdown by type of building could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information for 1985 is not yet available.

Deaths in fires in certain types of building 1980 to 1984
England and Wales

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Hotels, boarding houses, guest houses, motels, holiday bed and breakfast accommodation *	2	10	4	7	9
Hostels and similar institutions	12	2	5	3	6
Detached, semi-detached or terraced houses in multiple occupation *	117	110	53	64	67

* The figures for detached, semi-detached and terraced houses in multiple occupation were affected by a change in recording practice on the fire report forms from February 1982, and the figures for 1982 and subsequent years are not comparable with those for earlier years. Fuller instructions were issued to brigades and this appears to have contributed to a decrease in the figures for houses in multiple occupation and an increase in those for other dwellings in multiple occupation, relative to earlier years.

Immigration

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the approximate total of people who have applied for entry clearance at the British high commission in New Delhi and who are awaiting interview.

Mr. Waddington: Eight hundred and eighty applicants for entry clearance, whether for settlement or a limited stay, were awaiting their first interview in New Delhi at the end of March 1986.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of the breaches by the immigration service of his Department's guidelines on immigration cases with regard to Sahid Saleem on 13 June and of Nazir Ahmed on 18 June, he will take immediate steps to ensure that in future his Department does not take any action in breach of its obligations under the guidelines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: In the case of Mr. Shahid Saleem, I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 18 June at columns 542-3.

In the case of Mr. Nazir Ahmed, the sequence of events before and on 18 June is the subject of an inquiry. Once this has been completed, I will write to the right hon. Member.

Police Officers

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to seek to ensure that more police officers are operating on the beat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Chief officers of police have been helped to put more officers on the beat by the improvement in the strength of the police service and by the release of police officers from administrative posts which the Government have encouraged. I expect that the manpower increases which my right hon. Friend announced on 20 May will lead to a steady increase in the number of officers on foot patrol.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are in service at the latest date for which figures are available in west Yorkshire; and what was the comparable number in May 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 31 May 1986 the strength of the West Yorkshire police was 5,119. This is a gain of 380 on the strength of 4,739 in May 1979.

Traffic Management (London)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to discuss traffic management in London.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so, but regular discussions take place between the police and the highway authorities, including the Department of Transport, which have the responsibility for traffic management in London and which are obliged to consult the commissioner before making traffic regulation orders.

Police (Plastic Baton Rounds)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces have now been issued with plastic baton rounds.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Plastic baton rounds are held by 14 forces in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Harvey

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, on what items of legislation Mr. Peter Harvey has worked since 1983.

Mr. Hurd: In general, I do not think it is helpful to discuss the work of the Department in terms of the contribution to it of individual officers. If there is any item of business in which the hon. Member has a particular interest perhaps he would care to write to me.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will specify for each police force the number of officers investigated by the Police Complaints Authority in relation to misuse of the police national computer in the case of the BP and National number plate competition; and if he will further specify the number of officers in each force who (a) were and (b) were not subject to disciplinary proceedings.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information available in the Department is as follows.

The investigation team led by the Assistant Chief Constable of Sussex, Mr. Scott, examined a total of 529 inquiries made of the Police National Computer in connection with vehicle registration numbers displayed in the BP and National Competition; 157 of these were found to have been made for proper reasons and in a further 163 cases either no record was found to show who made the inquiry or no record was made of the reason for the inquiry. In a further 113 cases, no culpable misuse was made of the information obtained from the computer. Formal discipline proceedings were instituted against officers in 12 forces as set out in the table. Three police officers whose inquiries of the computer were under investigation resigned.

	Number
Avon and Somerset	5
Cumbria	6
Devon and Cornwall	1
Dorset	1
Gloucestershire	1
Lancashire	1
Leicestershire	1
Merseyside	2
North Wales	3
South Wales	2
West Mercia	2
Wiltshire	1

No inquiries were made of the computer in this connection by officers from the City of London, Durham, Humberside and Lincolnshire.

Heathrow (Translators)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the adequacy of the current staffing levels of translators based at Heathrow terminal 3 in relation to the demands imposed upon them by the numbers of visitors arriving from India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh requiring interviews before entry permission is granted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I presume the hon. Member is referring to interpreters. The eight full-time interpreters employed by the immigration service, all of whom are based at Heathrow terminal 3 and of whom seven speak one or more of the various languages required for interviewing passengers from India, Pakistan and Bangladesh, are augmented at terminal 3 by a panel of 75 hourly-paid interpreters in the same languages. Additionally 17 immigration officers based at terminal 3 speak a variety of the same languages.

The full-time interpreters are rostered to be in attendance for the scheduled arrival of flights which are likely to require their services. There will inevitably be delays at times in providing adequate interpretative facilities when schedules are disrupted, when more passengers than anticipated are found to require the use of an interpreter and whilst hourly-paid interpreters are deployed. Their use is a more flexible and cost effective way of meeting the need for interpretative facilities than increasing the number of permanent staff who would not always be fully employed. A review of interpretative facilities throughout the immigration service is currently under way.

Vietnamese Refugees (Agency Funding)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present scale of funding of the refugee agencies' Vietnamese programme; to what extent this funding will be increased by the implementation of the accepted recommendations of the third report of the Home Affairs Committee for the 1984-85 Session; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: In its third report, published in April 1985, the Home Affairs Committee recommended that the scale of the refugee agencies' Vietnamese programme should be increased and that its funding should be continued for as long as necessary to achieve its objectives. At that time, the level of funding support from the Home Office for the programme was £260,000 for the financial year 1985-86; and the programme was due to end on 31 March 1987. Following the Government's consideration of the report, it was decided to increase the level of the Home Office contribution by £130,000 in a full year and to extend the programme to 31 March 1988. A pro-rata sum of £52,000 was paid in 1985-86; and the grant in the current year will be £405,000.

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the occasions since 1979 on which the strategy report submitted to him by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has been amended after its submission; and if he will state the nature of any such amendments.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The commissioner made his first such report in 1983. Minor textual amendments were agreed to the 1985 and 1986 reports after they had been shown in draft to the Home Office. There is regular contact between our officials and the Metropolitan police, and the commissioner has always been aware in preparing his reports of the issues to which my right hon. Friend and his predecessors as the police authority have attached importance.

Drugs

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent meeting in Oslo of European Justice Ministers to discuss European co-operation on countering the importation of drugs.

Mr. Mellor: The meeting which I attended in Oslo on 17-19 June gave Council of Europe Justice Ministers a valuable opportunity to discuss common problems relating to the criminal aspects of drug abuse. In my address I urged all member states to ensure that the laundering of the proceeds of drug trafficking should itself by a criminal offence under their own laws, as it will be in this country once the Drug Trafficking Offences Bill becomes law. The conference fully recognised the necessity for an international approach to the attack on the illegal drugs trade. Its final resolution reflected the wish of all members states to develop more effective co-operation in such areas as the detection, freezing, and confiscation of the proceeds of drug trafficking; and recognised the importance of the meeting of the ministerial conference of the Pompidou Group in London next January in taking this work forward. The Government regard this as a highly satisfactory outcome.

Speeding Prosecutions (London)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful prosecutions there have been for speeding in (a) the Greater London council area and (b) the inner London area in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: Information in the form requested is not readily available. The available information relates to findings of guilt for speed limit offences in each police force area and is published annually in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" – table 18 of the issue for 1984. In 1984, there were about 32,700 findings of guilt for these offences in the Metropolitan police district and about 140 in the City of London.

Parole

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many of the applications for parole in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively, the fact that the prisoner had no suitable accommodation to go into on release was a factor in the application being refused

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available. Parole is not granted in the absence of a suitable release plan. In some cases where release on parole is made conditional on suitable accommodation being found for a prisoner, it proves impossible to make satisfactory arrangements in time for release on parole. But this is very rare.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what increase the Government propose to make in the resources of the Parole Board in light of concern expressed by the Parole Board in its annual report for 1985.

Mr. Mellor: Every effort is being made to find the extra resources required to cope with the increase in the parole caseload. Resources in the Home Office parole unit have already been increased and further increases are due to take place in the near future.

Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners on their release were found accommodation in approved hostel schemes or approved landlady schemes in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available in the form requested. The numbers of prisoners released on parole and life licences who were accommodated in approved probation hostels were as follows:

Year	Number
1980	65
1981	114
1982	136
1983	137

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received asserting a link between homelessness and released prisoner reoffending or breaking the conditions of their parole licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: None recently. In its annual report for 1985, the Parole Board has drawn attention to Home Office research bulletin 20 "Housing for the homeless offender: key findings from a literature review" by Dr. M. N. P. Ramsay (1986). Accommodation for released offenders is available through the Home Office after-care accommodation scheme which currently funds some 320 projects providing about 4,500 places for offenders. In addition, places in approved probation hostels may be made available to persons who on release from custody are subject to supervision by the probation service, and who are in need of special support for a short period.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners on their release from prison were unable to find any accommodation in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available. The Home Office has no responsibility to provide accommodation for discharged prisoners. However, a discharge grant is paid to eligible prisoners to ensure that they have sufficient money on release for their immediate needs. This replaces and broadly equates with the supplementary benefit which could otherwise be claimed for the first week after release. A higher rate of grant is payable to those prisoners who have no home to return to and need to have rented accommodation arranged prior to release.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his policy towards the substitution in some cases which would otherwise have been prosecuted before the juvenile bench of a reference to a juvenile bureau.

Mr. Mellor: Decisions on whether or not to prosecute are a matter for the chief officer of police. Guidelines on cautioning, issued in February 1985, asked forces to ensure that juveniles were not prosecuted unless it was absolutely necessary and advised that decisions should be taken in consultation with other agencies. A copy of Home Office circular 14/1985 is available in the Library.

Drug Control (UN Fund)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to encourage member states of the European Community to contribute financially to the work of the United Nations fund for drug abuse control.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he plans to take to encourage member states of the European Community to contribute financially to the work of the United Nations fund for drug abuse control.

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to encourage member states of the European Community to contribute financially to the work of the United Nations fund for drug abuse control.

Mr. Mellor: The Government maintain close contact with our European Community partners on all aspects of drug abuse and trafficking through the Council of Europe Pompidou Group. We use this and all other appropriate political and official channels to stress the importance of support of the fund and we seek by publicising our own contributions to encourage others to follow suit. Eight EC countries, including the United Kingdom, have pledged donations to the fund for 1986.

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to increase the United Kingdom contribution to the United Nations fund for drug abuse control.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. We are increasing our regular annual contribution to the fund this year from £100,000 to £163,000. In addition, we are making special purpose contributions to the fund of £3·4 million for its work in Pakistan and £1 million in Latin America.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's current contribution to the United Nations fund for drug abuse control; if he has any plans to increase it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Government make an annual contribution to the United Nations fund for drug abuse control for use as the fund thinks fit. This was increased from £50,000 to £100,000 in 1983 and this financial year is being increased to £163,000. The level of that contribution will be kept under review. In addition, the Government are making special purpose contributions totalling £3·4 million to the fund's crop substitution/rural development scheme in the Dir district of the north-west frontier province of Pakistan and £1 million to the fund's drugs law enforcement support activities in Latin America. The United Kingdom is among the major donors to the fund, with whom we work very closely. The executive director of the fund visited London last month for talks with Ministers, and I met him for further talks as recently as last week.

Emergency Planning Officers (Training)

Mr. Richard Livsey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the training of emergency planning officers in England and Wales in connection with civil nuclear matters.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Emergency arrangements are under review following Chernobyl. The potential role and need for training of emergency planning officers will be amongst the matters considered.

India (Settlement Applications)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to introduce any changes in the procedure for processing applications to settle in Britain from the India sub-continent.

Mr. Waddington: The arrangements are kept under review in order to ensure that applications are processed with a minimum of delay. The Government have no proposals for changes at present.

Parliamentary Seats

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to reduce the number of parliamentary seats (a) in Scotland or (b) in the rest of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no present plans for legislation. We are expecting the Home Affairs Committee to report later this year on the results of its inquiry into the rules governing the redistribution of seats laid down in the House of Commons (Redistribution of Seats) Acts. The Government will naturally give full consideration to any recommendations it may make on these or other aspects of the law.

Deputy Chief Constable Stalker

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there is any connection between the enforced suspension of Deputy Chief Constable John Stalker and the investigation into some aspects of the Royal Ulster Constabulary which he was carrying out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have no information to suggest such a connection.

Broadcasting (Peacock Committee)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish his response to the Peacock committee on broadcasting.

Mr. Hurd: I will give my initial response when I publish the report, which will be before the recess.

Metropolitan Police Precept

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much of the Metropolitan police precept on London ratepayers is for expenditure on equipment for public order duties and on training for such duties.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The income raised from the precept is treated as a whole, along with central Government contributions and income from other sources. From none of these individual sources, including the precept, is the income allocated to particular purposes.

Prisoners (Slopping Out)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners will have to continue with the practice of slopping out after 1991.

Mr. Mellor: On the basis of the building schemes at present in progress or planned there will be just under 20,000 places in 1991 lacking access to sanitation. After that there will be further reductions. The number of prisoners slopping out in 1991 would be higher by the extent that there was then still overcrowding in the prisons which lacked access to sanitation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Members (Tax Codes)

Mr. Spencer asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will take steps to ensure that the appropriate tax code appears on the monthly salary slips sent to hon. Members' staff who are paid directly from the hon. Member's allowance.

Mr. Biffen: Yes. Arrangements are in hand to incorporate this information on the monthly payment advices issued to hon. Members' staff, in the near future.

Political Parties (Public Money)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Lord Privy Seal what are the latest available figures for the amount of public money paid to political parties.

Mr. Biffen: The total amount paid to Opposition parties for 1985 under the scheme whereby provision is made for financial assistance to Opposition parties in carrying out their Parliamentary business, were as follows:

Labour Party	440,355
Liberal Party	88,641
Social Democratic Party	62,562
Scottish National Party	7,977
Plaid Cymru	4,878
Ulster Unionist Party	19,889
Democratic Unionist Party	6,789

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Avon (Aerospace Factories)

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what projects have been either partly or wholly financed by his Department since 1979 which have resulted in work being placed in Avon's aerospace factories; and what were the sums involved.

Mr. Pattie: The civil aerospace project which currently is being partly financed through launch aid from my Department and which is contributing to the provision of work at British Aerospace's factories in Avon is the Airbus A320. In March 1984 my right hon. Friend, the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced that up to £250 million of launch aid was to be provided for this project. Work on the A320 programme is not concentrated exclusively at British Aerospace's Filton factories but is distributed among several of the company's sites in the United Kingdom. The Bristol factories of Rolls-Royce are predominantly engaged in military programmes and no significant civil work relating to projects partly financed by my Department is being undertaken there.

During the period since 1979 grants have been made by my Department towards a number of research projects carried out by aerospace companies in Avon.

Lloyds (Neil Inquiry)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he now expects to receive the report of the Neil inquiry into Lloyds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my remarks during the Report stage of the Financial Services Bill on Thursday 12 June at columns 577-78.

Co-operative Fair

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to pay an official visit to the Co-operative Fair on 17 or 18 June at the Kensington exhibition centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend did not visit the Co-operative Fair. General responsibility for co-operatives now rests with the Department of Employment.

Japan (British Exports)

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with the Japanese Government about that country's economic outlook in respect of British exports being accepted without unfair restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The European Community continues to press the Japanese Government for the implementation of the various market-opening measures that they have announced. A particular objective at the United Kingdom's forthcoming presidency of the Community will be to give this added impetus. In addition my Department's new unfair trade unit will be closely monitoring specific cases of unfair trading and pursuing such cases vigorously where appropriate.

Burglar Alarms (Insurance)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the number of insurance companies which are offering discounts to clients for the installation of burglar alarms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Association of British Insurers has advised that there are at least 10 insurance companies who offer discounts of 5 per cent. or more from household insurance premiums for security precautions including alarm systems. Some companies among these are market leaders. In the light of the Government's initiative on crime prevention, I welcome this positive attitude on the part of the insurers.

Stainless Steel

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the present quota arrangements for stainless steel production in Britain; and when he expects to be able to announce the new quotas for stainless steel plants in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Stainless steel bar and wire rod is subject to European Community production quotas, as are most bulk carbon steel products. The present quota arrangements, agreed by the Council of Ministers last year, have been on operation since 1 January 1986. After consultation with producers and member states, the Commission sets quotas each quarter in line with forecast demand. Quotas for individual producers are commercially confidential.

Regional Aid (Kirklees)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total amount of regional aid given to Kirklees metropolitan district council area as a result of assisted area status in each year from 1974-75 to date.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

South Africa (Sanctions)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to his statement of 17 June, Official Report, column 909, he will detail those industries, together with the number of workers involved, which might be affected by economic sanctions against South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Given the composition of our exports to South Africa, it is likely that a significant proportion of the jobs would be in the chemical and engineering industries. However, estimates of the number of jobs involved in trade with South Africa in particular sectors are not available.

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish deails in the Official Report of the likely effects, in terms of jobs and output in the United Kingdom, of different levels of economic measures against South Africa, and of similar effects arising from a potential loss of markets elsewhere in Africa if no such economic measures are taken.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested by the hon. Gentleman is not available.

Deputations

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Ministers in his Department who have met deputations from Birmingham city council in the current year, stating the dates and the purpose of each meeting.

Mr. Channon: One meeting has taken place this year, when my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Industry met a deputation of Birmingham city councillors on 5 June this year, to discuss BL.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Economic Commission (Staff)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the average cost per person on the staff of the European Economic Commission has risen from 28,500 European currency units in 1976 to 64,240 European currency units in 1986.

Mrs. Chalker: This increase of 124·9 per cent. in Commission staff costs results mainly from inflation, including wage increases. Wages in EC member states rose by an average of 158·3 per cent. over the same period.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Saudi Arabia urging the withdrawal of regulations, recently issued by the Saudi Arabian embassy in London, which require applicants, wishing to go on pilgramage to Mecca and Medina for Hajj or Umrah, to be British passport holders or overseas nationals with permanent residency in the United Kingdom with confirmed bookings in and out of Saudi Arabia ticketed on Saudia Arabia Airlines or British Caledonian only; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. Administrative arrangements for the issue of visas are within the competence of the issuing state. Furthermore the travel requirement does not discriminate against British carriers.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the stocking rate to be used for standard quota, with reference to landlords and tenants in the milk producers outgoers scheme.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 19 May 1986, c. 71]: It was our intention to use a stocking rate of 1·31 cows per hectare. This stocking rate would have accurately reflected the number of cows per hectare of land, bearing in mind the average area occupied by followers in a herd. However, in the light of views put to us by the National Farmers Union, we have now decided that it would be more appropriate to exclude land used by followers. On the basis of land used by milking cows alone the appropriate stocking rate is 1·8 cows per hectare.

The choice of the basis for application of the stocking rate does not in itself affect the total amount of standard quota in the country as a whole. There are, however, practical advantages in the use of the basis excluding followers, in that it links the area more precisely with the cows that produce the milk. On many farms the followers may well be kept away from the main herd, possibly alongside beef animals, making it difficult to establish the precise area to be taken into account.

Cereals

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the proportion (a) of total cereals produced in the United Kingdom and (b) of cereals used in animal feed which will be liable for co-responsibility levy; and if he will give information on equivalent figures for the European Community.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1986, c. 659]: I am not in a position to give these estimates as details of the application of the co-responsibility levy are still under discussion in Brussels.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Select Committees

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) officials and (b) Ministers from his Department gave evidence to Commons Select Committees in each of the Sessions (i) 1983-84 and (ii) 1984-85.

Dr. Boyson: Oral evidence has been given as follows:

(i) In 1983-84; 1 Minister and 12 officials from Northern Ireland Departments.

(ii) In 1984-85; 1 Minister and 14 officials from Northern Ireland Departments.

Industry (Loans)

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the value of outstanding loans to industry since 1966 from any Government agency; and if he will give the names of firms that have defaulted on these loans, and the amount of money that has been lost due to companies defaulting on these loans.

Dr. Boyson: The value of outstanding loans at 31 March 1986 is £73·7 million. Of this £67·9 million is in respect of loans issued since 1966 by the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland and the former Department of Commerce, Northern Ireland Finance Corporation and Northern Ireland Development Agency. The remaining £5·8 million relates to loans made available by the Local Enterprise Development Unit since its inception in 1971. £16·2 million of loan has been written off as irrecoverable by the Industrial Development Board and the former Department of Commerce, and £1·2 million by the Local Enterprise Development Unit.

The former Northern Ireland Development Agency wrote off an amount of approximately £37·5 million which comprised both share capital and loan investments made by itself and its predecessor, the Northern Ireland Finance Corporation.

A list of names of the firms in respect of which loan has been written off over this period is not readily available, and to compile it would involve disproportionate cost.

Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state, in relation to catering equipment in the corridor kitchen of the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast (a) where the equipment, which was returned eventually, was used by the board and where it was stored before use, (b) which firm or firms supplied catering equipment to the royal group, (c) when the catering equipment was to be used for the supply of food to day centres in north and west Belfast removed from use, (d) what was the cost of the equipment, its age and when it was removed from use and (e) subsequent to the invitation of tenders on 17 May 1984, to whom they were circulated and in what papers.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Michael Tighe

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the death of Michael Tighe in Armagh in November 1982.

Mr. Tom King: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on these circumstances as I understand they are among matters that are the subject of an inquiry being carried out at the request of the chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary by a team of detectives from the Greater Manchester constabulary headed by the chief constable of West Yorkshire.

ENERGY

North Sea Oil (Price)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the quarterly average price paid per barrel of North sea oil in each of the last four quarters for which records are available.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The prices realised for North sea crude sales in the last four quarters, as given in the PQ1300 Business Monitor and converted to £/barrel, were:

1985
Q2	21·7
Q3	19·2
Q4	19·4

British Gas

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the equity in the privatised British Gas will be allocated to those who are employed in the industry; and how this will be allocated among the work force.

Mr. Peter Walker: I announced an attractive package of share offers for past and present employees of British Gas in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 18 June at columns 537-39. The proportion of shares allocated to employees will, of course, depend on the applications which are received from them.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) when he proposes to announce the terms of the flotation of British Gas plc;

(2) what sum will be allocated to the privatised British Gas as a debt to public funds.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 18 June at columns 537-39. Further announcements will be made as appropriate.

National Coal Board (Name)

Mr. Allen MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to introduce legislation to change the name of the National Coal Board to British Coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer to the answer given to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) on 2 May 1986 at column 503.

Plutonium

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to change the precautions taken to ensure that plutonium exported from the United Kingdom is put solely to its stated end use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: No. The policy in respect of exports of nuclear materials, including plutonium, remains that set out in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 28 January 1985 at columns 24-25.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 1 May, column 460, to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy if he will list the reactors of origin from which nuclear material has been withdrawn from safeguards since 1978.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 21 May 1986, c. 206]: All the material withdrawn from safeguards for defence purposes originated from the Chapelcross or Calder Hall reactors.

On a number of occasions small quantities of material, measured in grammes, have been temporarily withdrawn from safeguards by the AEA for experimental testing in unsafeguarded facilities. These tests were for civil purposes and the withdrawal of the material from safeguards and its subsequent return was a technicality necessary only because appropriate safeguarding facilities were not available. The material involved originated in either Chapelcross, Calder Hall or in generating board reactors.

PRIME MINISTER

Fraud Investigation

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 484, concerning fraud investigation, what progress has been made in the four cases referred to; if she is now aware of any further cases of fraud which have been hindered by difficulties in obtaining evidence; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am informed that progress has been made in two of the four cases referred to in my answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 484. One person has been charged and is awaiting committal in one of the cases, and one person has been committed for trial in the other case.

I have now been informed of two further cases involving public money, in which problems of obtaining evidence in other jurisdictions were experienced. Satisfactory evidence has now been obtained with the result that a total of five people have been charged and committed for trial since the beginning of this year.

EC (Budget)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement setting out the progress made in achieving the strict budgetary controls of expenditure of the EEC as agreed by the European Council in December 1984; if she will secure information from the Commission on the amount by which these limits will be exceeded in 1986; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: On progress to date, I refer my hon. Friend to the memorandum entitled "European Community Budget: Budget Discipline and Related Matters" which the Treasury submitted to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on 18 February. The comparison between actual spending appropriations and budget discipline limits in 1986 will depend on the outcome of further negotiations on the 1986 budget which will take place in July, following the European Court's judgment on the legality of the 1986 budget. The Government will keep the House informed about progress on these matters.

EC (Contributions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister when it first became the practice of Her Majesty's Government to make advance payments of contributions to the EEC before seeking parliamentary approval for such advance payments; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The first occasion on which the Government agreed to advance payments of levies and duties to the European Community, was on 20 June 1983. In accordance with established procedures for urgent cases, that payment was financed in the first instance by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund pending parliamentary approval of the necessary Estimate. All subsequent advance payments have been financed either from an Estimate or from the contingencies fund pending parliamentary approval of an Estimate. Advance payments affect only the timing of contributions to the European Community; there is no overall effect on public expenditure.

Research and Development

Mr. Soames asked the Prime Minister what percentage of Government funded research and development is directed to military work.

The Prime Minister: The "Annual Review of Government Funded R & D" shows that 51 per cent. of expenditure on R and D was accounted for by the Ministry of Defence.

NHS (Management Board)

Mr. Meacher asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to transfer public responsibility for any aspects of National Health Service policy and development to the National Health Service Management Board; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The National Health Service Management Board was set up in April 1985 within the Department of Health and Social Security by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services to assist him in carrying out the necessary central management functions in respect of the hospitals and community health services in England. There are no present plans to alter the board's formal responsibilities or its accountability to my right hon. Friend and his to Parliament.

Dr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Janner asked the Prime Minister (1) if, when she has discussions with the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany during his forthcoming official visit to the United Kingdom, she will ask him (a) to arrange for the disclosure of all information in the possession of his Government concerning the interrogation of British prisoners of war by German Army Group E while Dr. Kurt Waldheim was in charge of those interrogations and about their subsequent fate and (b) for his Government's full co-operation with the inquiries being made by Her Majesty's Government in the Waldheim case; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if, when she has discussions with the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany during his forthcoming official visit to the United Kingdom, she will ask him to arrange for his Government to disclose all documents in their possession relating to the whereabouts of Dr. Kurt Waldheim in so far as they relate to periods in respect of which Her Majesty's Government are investigating allegations concerning the interrogation and subsequent fate of British prisoners of war and Dr. Kurt Waldheim's alleged involvement therewith; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Ministry of Defence search of military records for information relevant in the context of the disappearance of British subjects in the Balkans in the second world war is not yet complete. Only when the results are known will the Government be in a position to decide whether it is necessary to seek further information from other sources.

Engagements

Mr. Rooker asked the Prime Minister if she will list the Ministers who have received deputations from Birmingham city council in the current year, stating the dates and the purpose of each meeting.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 17 June 1986, c. 512-13]: I regret that there was an ommission from the meetings listed in my earlier reply. The information should read as follows:

Secretary of State or Minister	Date and purpose of meeting
Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Baker)	31 January 1986 Meeting with Birmingham Inner City Partnership Committee
Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Baker)	12 February 1986 Meeting with Councillors on Olympic bid
Paymaster General (Mr. Clarke)	14 February 1986 Meeting on Inner City Initiative
Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction (Mr. Patten)	19 May 1986 Meeting with City Council Members and MPs on Defective Housing
Minister of State for Industry (Mr. Morrison)	5 June 1986 Meeting with Birmingham Economic Development Committee on BL

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Entry and Search Powers

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many officials for whom he has responsibility currently have the power to enter and search premises, subject to statutory conditions; and if, in each case, he will indicate the statutory authority under which power is exercised.

Mr. Chris Patten: No officials for whom the Secretary of State has responsibility have the express powers to enter and search premises. However, section 77 of the Education Act 1944 imposes a duty on the Secretary of State to cause inspections to be made of educational establishments, as defined in that section. HM inspectors are appointed for the purpose of enabling such inspections to be made. They have no express powers of entry or search, but it is an offence under section 77(4) to obstruct them in the execution of their duty. On 1 June 1986 there were 463 HM inspectors in post.

Universities (Research Funding)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the level of funding by the pharmaceutical industry of research in United Kingdom universities in each of the last five years.

Mr. Walden: None.

Teachers (Self-Assessment)

Mr. Peter Griffiths asked the Secretary of State of Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report those local education authorities which operate a self-assessment system for teachers.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is not available centrally.

NATIONAL FINANCE

African Countries (Debt)

53. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to seek to reschedule the debts of African countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As part of our approach to debt problems of developing countries, Her Majesty's Government have been ready, within the Paris Club, to reschedule official or officially guaranteed debts in appropriate cases. Since 1982 such reschedulings have covered some $8 billion of debt in respect of 18 African countries. For the poorest developing countries, Britain also has a generous policy of commuting official aid loans to grants. This has so far benefited 21 countries, including 12 in sub-Saharan Africa, at a total cost of almost £1 billion.

Select Committees

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) officials and (b) Ministers from his Department gave evidence to Commons Select Committees in each of the Sessions (i) 1983-84 and (ii) 1984-85.

Mr. Brooke: The number of Treasury officials and Ministers who appeared before Commons Departmental Select Committees is as follows:

Session	Officials	Ministers
1984-85	32	3

Because some of these gave evidence more than once, figures for the total number of sessions attended would be considerably higher than this. In addition, the Treasury Officer of Accounts or his deputy attends every session of the PAC, normally accompanied by an official of the relevant Treasury division.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Evennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice has been issued to officials of the Inland Revenue involved in interviewing those who may be charged with a criminal offence since the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 came into force.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Copies of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the codes of practice issued under section 66 of that Act have been made available to Inland Revenue officials involved in interviewing those who may be charged with a criminal offence. In addition departmental instructions setting out the revised interviewing procedures and the new forms of caution in use since 1 January 1986 have been issued to ensure that Inland Revenue procedures comply with the provisions of that Act and the codes of practice.

EEC (Budget)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what amount he estimates the European Economic Community will exceed the total of expenditure determined by the strict budgetary controls in the calendar year 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Total expenditure contained in the European Communities budget will depend on the outcome of discussion on the new 1986 budget which is due to begin shortly after the European Court has delivered its judgment on the 1986 budget dispute.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government that the terms of the 4 December 1984 agreement in relation to the adjustments in future years for overspending by the European Economic Community beyond the strict budgetary controls should be applied by the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Brooke: Yes.

EEC (Contributions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the European Economic Commission requested a further advance payment of contributions from member states; if the request was put to a meeting of the Council of Ministers; and why Her Majesty's Government agreed to the advance payment.

Mr. Brooke: The Commission requested the latest advance payment because of cash flow difficulties. Under article 10(2) of Council Regulation 2891/77 the Commission may, without recourse to the Council of Ministers, invite members states to bring forward any payments of traditional own resources in order to meet short term cash flow difficulties. The Government are prepared to accede to such requests when they are justified by the Commission's cash flow position.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rebates of abatements remain to be secured from the EEC by the United Kingdom in respect of the calendar year 1985 and previous years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: There are no rebates or abatements owing to us from years prior to 1985. Our abatement in respect of 1985 is being implemented in accordance with the arrangements agreed at Fontainebleau, with the result that our VAT contributions to the Community are some £75 million per month less than would otherwise be the case. The total provision for our abatement in the 1986 budget is 1,400 mecu (some £900 million). This amount will need to be corrected when outturn information on our 1985 VAT expenditure gap becomes available. The Commission has proposed that a correction of 500 mecu (£325 million) should be included in a supplementary and amending budget this year. A further correction might be required next year.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to make to the EEC any advance payments requested by the Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government are prepared to accede to requests for advance payments only when we are satisfied that the Commission's cash flow position justifies such requests.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the net contribution which the United Kingdom will be required to make to the EEC in respect of the calendar year 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's latest forecast of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the Community budget is that published in the Public Expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702).

Value Added Tax

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he had made of the percentage value added tax contribution which member states will be required to make to the European Economic Community in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: We estimate that the highest rate of VAT contribution for 1986 implied by the Council's Second Reading budget of last December is 1·22 per cent. The actual rates for the year will depend on the outcome of discussions on a new 1986 budget which will begin after the European Court has delivered judgment on the 1986 budget dispute.

Monetary Values

Mr. Winnick asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present day equivalent of the value of £10 in 1958, 1968, 1978 and 1981.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is given in the table:

1968	59·41
1978	19·71
1981	13·09

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Less Developed Countries

40. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives his Department is currently taking to relieve the debt burden of the less developed countries.

Mr. Raison: Britain has had a generous policy for the poorest countries of converting past aid loans into grants. Twenty-one countries have benefited at a total cost of nearly £1 billion. All new bilateral aid to these countries is provided on grant terms.

Indonesia

44. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the aid budget is allocated to the transmigration programme in Indonesia.

Mr. Raison: The Government do not give direct financial support to the Indonesian transmigration programme.

Africa (Child Immunisation)

45. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government will be contributing to the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund's special appeal for child immunisation in Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: I am expecting a detailed request from UNICEF, and will consider it carefully when it arrives. We have already contributed more than £2 million over the last two years to an earlier appeal for similar purposes.

Pensions

46. Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of overseas aid is devoted to the payment of pensions to retired members of the Overseas Civil Service; and what is the gross amount so paid.

Mr. Raison: We expect total expenditure on pensions to former overseas civil servants and their dependants to reach £140 million in the current financial year. This constitutes approximately one-tenth of the Overseas Development Administration's total budget. Of this about £19 million, representing the pre-independence element of these pensions, will count as aid. This is approximately 1·5 per cent. of the gross overseas aid budget.

Food (Transportation Costs)

47. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the aid budget is allocated for transporting food into recipient countries.

Mr. Raison: We do not make a separate allocation for these costs. In 1985 food aid accounted for 8 per cent. of total gross public expenditure on aid, but within that the transport element cannot be separately identified. A further £18 million was spent on the airlift of food in Ethiopia in 1985 and £6 million has been allocated this year on transporting food within Sudan.

India

48. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received in the last 12 months concerning aid to India.

Mr. Raison: I have received some 20 letters from right hon. and hon. Members, and a similar number from members of the public.

Africa

49. Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the policy review embodied in the United Nations programme agreed at the recent special session on Africa.

Mr. Raison: I welcome the final resolution of the United Nations special session where all concerned agreed to work together for sustained economic development based on realistic policies. The emphasis given to the agricultural sector is particularly encouraging, as is the recognition of the role of the private sector.

Relief Aid

50. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is satisfied with the arrangements for the provision of disaster relief aid.

Mr. Raison: The ODA responds rapidly and effectively to requests for disaster relief throughout the world. The most recent recipients have been countries in Latin America, the Solomon Islands and Jamaica, where we have provided a total of £1·27 million.

I was honoured to receive recently a plaque from the Mexican Government in recognition of our urgent response to the Mexico City earthquake last September.

Aid Debts

51. Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the cancellation of official aid debts.

Mr. Raison: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

Tropical Development and Research Institute

52. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the future programme of work of the Tropical Development and Research Institute.

Mr. Raison: The Tropical Development and Research Institute will continue to concentrate on its work on pest control and reducing post harvest losses in aid recipient countries. The hon. Member may care to look at the Tropical Development and Research Institute annual report for 1984-85, a copy of which is being placed in the Library of the House.

TRANSPORT

Public Transport

3. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the future of public transport in the light of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. Moore: I have received some 30 such representations.

Radiation (Aircraft)

8. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many domestic airliners have been grounded as a result of exposure to radiation following the Chernobyl explosion.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand from the Civil Aviation Authority, which is responsible for aviation safety, that no United Kingdom aircraft have been grounded as a result of exposure to radiation following Chernobyl.

British Rail

13. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: I last met the chairman on 10 June and discussed a wide range of matters of current interest.

17. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the current level of investment in British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for the board, not me, to propose what investment should take place. At present it plans £2 billion investment over the next five years, of which half has already been approved.

In addition the Government have approved in principle investment of up to £390 million for rail services associated with the Channel tunnel.

26. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will next meet the chairman of British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: We are next due to meet on 26 June.

27. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow).

Channel Tunnel

14. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail on matters related to the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The chairman and I have regular meetings at which we discuss a wide range of matters of current interest, including the Channel tunnel.

16. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress so far in the preparation of the project to construct the tunnel link in the English Channel.

Mr. Moore: The Channel Tunnel Bill received Second Reading on 5 June and has now been committed to a Select Committee.

20. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport how the west midlands will benefit from the proposed Channel fixed link.

Mr. David Mitchell: West Midlands firms are well placed to compete for major orders for mechanical and electrical equipment, rolling stock and tunnel linings. When the tunnel is complete, they will benefit from the substantially improved but less expensive access to European markets, particularly by rail. In environmental terms, residents will benefit from transfers of international freight from road to rail that the tunnel will make possible.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Wrexham of 18 June, on what expectation of demand British Rail has formed its views that it has sufficient capacity to handle the additional traffic generated by the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is a matter for BR, which will no doubt be giving evidence on this point to the Select Committee which considers the Channel Tunnel Bill.

Vehicle Excise Duty

15. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent measures have been introduced to reduce driving licence abuse and fraud.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We maintain a constant vigilance against abuse and fraud. In recent months no new measures have been considered necessary.

19. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the annual revenue lost from evasion of vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The survey carried out by the Department in 1984 showed the revenue loss through evasion to be about 4 per cent.—equivalent to some £99 million gross in 1985-86 excluding recoveries through enforcement.

28. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the most recent survey of the extent of evasion of vehicle excise duty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The survey carried out by the Department in 1984 indicated a gross loss of revenue of about 4 per cent., equivalent to some £99 million in 1985-86. The report on the survey was published on 18 December 1984 and a copy is available in the Library.

Civil Aviation Authority (London Airports)

18. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received from the Civil Aviation Authority regarding possible changes to the distribution system for aircraft at London's airports; and whether he intends to accept it.

21. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has responded to the Civil Aviation Authority's advice on traffic distribution at the London airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend received advice from the Civil Aviation Authority on 28 May, proposing additional rules for regulating air traffic within the London airports system. Copies were placed in the Library. He will make an announcement in due course.

Aldenham Bus Engineering Works

22. Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations have been made to him concerning the proposed closure of Aldenham bus engineering works; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a small number of representations, including an earlier question from the hon. Member on 4 June 1986, in column 597. I have made it clear that the proposed closure is entirely a management decision for LRT.

Gatwick Airport

23. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of the British Airports Authority to discuss franchise arrangements at Gatwick airport.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the British Airports Authority from time to time to discuss matters of common concern.

Residential Areas (Traffic)

24. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department is having with local authorities as to the present criteria on seeking to improve traffic conditions in residential areas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are in regular contact with local authorities on traffic and parking matters and are exploring possible ways to improve traffic conditions in residential areas.

Bypasses

25. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many bypasses have been added to the roads programme since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Eighty one bypasses and relief roads have been added since 1979. Other schemes in the programme—for example, M25—also take traffic out of communities.

Road Programme

29. Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the change in expenditure on the national road programme in real terms since 1978-79.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Planned expenditure on the national road programme in 1986-87 is 26 per cent. higher, in real terms, than in 1978-79.

Plutonium (Transport)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 11 June, if he will detail the regulatory provisions governing radiation exposure and outline the radioactive dosage to which the crew of the cargo aircraft are exposed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The technical instructions of the International Civil Aviation Organisation prescribe minimum distances from the surface of containers to areas occupied by personnel. As I said in my reply given to the hon. Member on 11 June, this ensures that no crew member should receive a radiation dose greater than that permitted for members of the public.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 191, if he will outline in detail the tests required of the International Atomic Energy Agency to which the containers are subjected; what type of wood and steel is used in their construction; what is the segregated distance between the packages and the occupied areas; and what protection is given to those who have to load and unload the plutonium.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The design requirements of the International Atomic Energy Agency applicable to these containers are set out in detail in the agency's regulations for the safe transport of radioactive materials, a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library. They consist of combinations of impact, penetration, compression, immersion and thermal tests associated with acceptance criteria based on the maximum levels of activity which could be released, increases in external radiation emitted and prescribed margins of subcriticality.

The containers are constructed externally from mild steel and hardwood with stainless steel inner components. Under the regulations of the IAEA there may be low, but measurable, levels of radiation.

The separation distances between the containers and occupied areas depend on these radiation levels external to the containers as prescribed by the International Civil Aviation Organisation's technical instructions, when carried by air. The protection of persons loading and unloading the containers is ensured by the requirements of the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, and questions on this matter would be for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 191, if the plutonium is returned by ship from Dounreay to Sellafield; why the plutonium is not transported by ship from Sellafield to Dounreay; what other flights were involved and from which airports; what were the restrictions; if he will detail the loads; and why these airports were used.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that in fact in some cases plutonium is returned to Sellafield from Dounreay by ship. However, I do not determine the mode of transport. The Department's certificates approving containers for the carriage of radioactive materials specify for what modes of transport they are valid. It is then for the consignor to decide which mode to use.

I understand that airports used by British Nuclear Fuels, other than Liverpool, have been Carlisle and until 1976 London Heathrow. Heathrow is also currently used, once or twice a year, for the transport of gram samples. British Nuclear Fuels tells me that these airports were used because of their convenience and suitability to the consignor. The shipments consisted of new fuel, plutonium oxides and plutonium residues for recovery. I also understand that the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority makes similar shipments using Bournemouth (Hurn) as well as those airports mentioned.

Consignments are subject to the normal restrictions of the International Civil Aviation Organisation's Technical Instructions for the carriage of radioactive materials by air. My compliance assurance officers verify that consignors have standing arrangements to ensure compliance with these regulations.

Trunk Road Improvements (Rights of Way)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the effect of implementing trunk road improvements in the United Kingdom since 1976 on statutory rights of way, bridleways, roads used as public paths or byways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The construction or improvement of trunk roads and motorways unavoidably involves interference with rights of way, including those covered by the question. The Secretary of State has power under sections 14 and 18 of the Highways Act 1980 to make orders authorising him to stop up, divert or alter highways or other such rights of way which cross or enter the routes of roads he proposes to construct or improve, or which will otherwise be affected by the works. There are procedural requirements for the publication of draft orders, the service of notices and the holding of inquiries into objections.

The Secretary of State may not make an order stopping up a highway unless he is satisfied that another reasonably convenient route is available or will be provided before the highway is stopped up. Detailed information about the extent to which these powers have been exercised over the last 10 years cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Okehampton Bypass

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take to inform Okehampton town council of the results of Wimpey Laboratories tests into toxic soils on the site of the proposed Okehampton bypass route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These soil investigations are to assist the design and construction of the road. I will arrange for a copy of the report from Wimpey Laboratories, which is expected next month, to be placed on deposit at the Okehampton offices of the borough of west Devon, where anyone interested will be able to study it.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the results of the soil tests being undertaken into mineralised deposits by Wimpey Laboratories on the site of the proposed Okehampton bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As indicated in my reply to the hon. Member's earlier question, the report of the soil investigations will be made available for public scrutiny in Okehampton.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport what tests were conducted into the extent of mineralised land containing arsenic along the site of the proposed southern route for the Okehampton bypass prior to the 1979 public inquiry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given to his earlier question on this topic on 27 March 1986, at column 566.

Ashbourne Bypass

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is now able to indicate when work will start on the building of the Ashbourne bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I expect to be able to appoint an Agent shortly to begin preparation work on a scheme to relieve Ashbourne. The future progress will depend on the results of their investigations, the successful completion of statutory procedures and the availability of funds. At this stage I do not expect construction work to start before the end of 1992.

British Rail Engineering Ltd.

30. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss proposed cutbacks in British Rail Engineering.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend is happy to discuss any matter which the chairman wishes to raise at our regular meetings. The next of these is due to take place later this week.

Docklands Light Railway

31. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning his intentions in respect of the proposed eastern extension to the Docklands light railway.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have no specific, costed proposals before us at present. We would consider any such proposals on their merits.

Woolwich Ferry

11. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the Woolwich ferry's standard of service to the public since he assumed responsibility for it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Greenwich borough council is operating the Woolwich ferry as our agent. Questions on day-to-day operations should be addressed to it.

Accident Reporting (Horses)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to include in the police accident report form Stats 19 provision for the accurate recording of traffic accidents in which horses are involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The only animals explicitly noted in Stats 19 road accident reports are dogs. Horses are included with "other animals". This category features in one half of 1 per cent. of all accidents. The Stats 19 system is currently under review and this aspect will be considered.

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many horses-related traffic accidents have occurred since 1976 in the United Kingdom by region.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The only available information is for personal injury accidents in Great Britain, where an animal other than a dog is recorded as being present. Horse-related accidents will represent part of this group. Data for years before 1980 can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

British Rail Tracks (Debris)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth of Monday 16 June, he will give details of the number of occasions the railway inspectorate has drawn British Rail's attention to debris on, or adjacent to, British Rail tracks; what was the type of debris most frequently found; and which were the three regions most frequently referred to.

Mr. David Mitchell: A full answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost since it would involve searching the inspectorate's records from the formation of British Railways. However, during the past three years the inspecting officers have drawn attention, in writing, to the need to clear away unwanted material from alongside the lines on 22 occasions. The debris most frequently referred to was railway material awaiting collection after engineering work, although rubbish thrown on to the lineside by the public also featured. It would be invidious to single out particular regions for BR since the number of references reflects the number of inspections made, and these vary. If the hon. Member has a specific concern, I suggest he writes to me.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Snape asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of heavy goods vehicles involved in spot checks by his Department's inspectors on the M2 during the week commencing 9 June were (a) towed away as being unroadworthy, (b) subject to instant prohibition and (c) found to have other serious defects.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No spot checks were conducted on the M2 at that time. On 12 June, 28 vehicles were checked at Falconwood on the A2: four were immediately prohibited; seven were given a delayed prohibition. I do not know how many were towed away.

Motorways (Direction Signs)

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the amount of expenditure on the maintenance of direction signs on motorways for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Moore: I regret that this particular information is not available, but the following is the expenditure incurred on maintaining signs and signals on motorways over the five years 1979-80 to 1983-84.

Year	Expenditure £
1979-80	1,449,660
1980-81	1,384,555
1981-82	1,584,715
1982-83	1,989,135
1983-84	1,900,689

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to take steps to improve the level of maintenance of direction signs on motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Our agents carry out weekly safety inspections which include checks on the general condition of signs. Necessary repairs are put in hand. In addition, a detailed inspection of each sign is usually made biennially. Cleaning takes place whenever necessary. These arrangements should be adequate. We shall continue to keep standards under review.

Langstone Harbour

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received regarding windsurfing in Langstone harbour.

Mr. Moore: About 100, from individuals and clubs.

Settle-Carlisle Railway Line

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to receive the report of the inspector following the public inquiry into the Settle to Carlisle railway line closure proposal.

Mr. David Mitchell: The transport users' consultative committees for north-eastern and north-western England have, in accordance with provisions in section 56 of the Transport Act 1962, held public hearings into the British Railways Board's closure proposal. I understand that the TUCCs expect to be able to submit a joint report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State later this year.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Smoking

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the incidence of smoking in each European Economic Community country for the five years up to the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: Information appears in tables 7 and 8 of "Statistics on Smoking in the member states of the Community" published by the European Commission, copies of which are in the Library. Latest figures for Great Britain show a further fall in cigarette smoking prevalence for men from 52 per cent. in 1972 to 36 per cent. in 1984, and for women from 41 per cent. to 32 per cent.

Cancer (West Cumbria)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the progress of research projects commissioned to implement the recommendations numbered 1 to 4 of the report of the advisory group, chaired by Sir Douglas Black, on the incidence of cancer in West Cumbria; and when the findings of each research project are likely to be received by his Department.

Mr. Ray Whitney: We are generally satisfied with the progress of these studies. We are advised however that collection of the data required for the studies to implement recommendations 1, 2 and 3 has proved to be more complicated than was expected. Consequently, these studies will be completed later than was originally anticipated. We understand that the report of the study implementing recommendation 1 should be received by the Department during the second half of 1987 and those from the studies implementing recommendations 2 and 3 should be received in the autumn of this year. The work on recommendation 4 is proceeding to schedule.

Nursing Posts

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report, for the last year for which figues are available, the number of nursing posts lost, gained and the net outcome, in terms of full-time equivalents (in numbers and as a percentage of the total) in the following categories (a) nursing auxiliaries, (b) enrolled nurses, (c) staff nurses, (d) sister, grade II, (e) sister, grade I and (f) learners (pupils and students), broken down by regional and district health authority.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that information on the number of nursing posts lost or gained is not available centrally and the net change in staff in post broken down by regional and district health authorities could be supplied only at disproportionate cost. Information on the net change in staff in post in England between September 1983 and September 1984 is given in the table. Detailed information for September 1985 is not yet available but the provisional total number of nursing and midwifery staff shows an increase of 0·8 per cent. to 396,900.

Nursing and midwifery staff in specific grades (excluding agency staff)
England—30 September

	1983	1984	1984 to 1983 change
	WTE	WTE	Percentage
*Specific grades
Nursing auxiliaries	87,240	85,860	−1·6
Enrolled Nurses†	70,010	71,200	+1·7
Staff Nurses	63,060	65,730	+4·2
Nursing Sister II	64,370	63,740	−1·0
Nursing Sister I	9,630	9,360	−2·9
Learners(students and pupils)‡	78,860	75,850	−3·8

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10. Percentages have been calculated on unrounded figures.

*The figures include all nursing and midwifery staff in these specific grades whatever area of work they are employed in: Health Visitors have been included in the Nursing Sister I category.

‡Includes health visitors, district nurse and midwifery students.

WTE = Whole time equivalent.

"Primary Health Care"

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 167, (1) what plans he has to draw to the attention of the public locations at which a copy of the Green Paper, "Primary Health Care", is available for free perusal or to borrow;

(2) if he will give the reasons why he has decided not to distribute copies of the Green paper, "Primary Health Care", to main libraries.

Mr. Hayhoe: Over 5,000 copies of the discussion document have been issued free to interested bodies for comment, and over 170,000 copies of a summary leaflet, copies of which are available free on demand, have been distributed. The leaflet's availability is to be advertised in the press shortly. Main libraries were sent copies of the summary leaflet, which it was considered would best meet libraries' immediate needs. The leaflet gives details of where copies of the main document can be obtained and it is open to libraries, if they believe this is likely to be justified by demand, to obtain copies as a priced document, at the standard 50 per cent. discount from Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the level and trend of new investment by the pharmaceutical industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hayhoe: Net capital expenditure in respect of establishments in the pharmaceutical products industry, including veterinary and certain other chemical and consumable materials, has been as follows:

	£ million
1979	155·5
1980	189·2
1981	239·2
1982	210·9
1983	225·8
1984	244·0

Information for 1985 is not yet available.

Pharmaceuticals (Research and Development)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the principal areas of research and development carried out by the pharmaceutical industry in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the Department does not collect information of the kind requested. I am not aware of any comprehensive published information relating solely to the United Kingdom, but the "Scrip Year Books" for 1985 and 1986, produced by PJB Publications Ltd. contain tables relating to research and development activity internationally.

Drug Addiction

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals for the introduction, within the National Health Service, of the Minnesota method of treating drug addiction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Department does not prescribe treatment approaches. It is for health authorities and practitioners in the field to decide whether the Minnesota method could be a useful approach in the treatment of drug misuse.

The Department is currently funding an evaluation of the treatment provided to National Health Service patients being referred to an establishment offering treatment based on the Minnesota philosophy.

NHS (US Casualties)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans the local health authorities have to formulate to meet with the tasks which might be placed on them with regard to treating United States casualties under the United States-United Kingdom lines of communication agreement in National Health Service hospitals in the event of an emergency.

Mr. Whitney: The Government are making contingency plans for the best use of all National Health Service resources in the event of war and these plans will cover the treatment in United Kingdom hospitals of both British and American military casualties should war in Europe ever break out. These plans will be incorporated in planning for the National Health Service as a whole in time of crisis or war, and are part of a continuous process. The United States is also establishing its own contingency hospitals which would be activitated in a crisis; these will be equipped, manned and financed by the United States Government and would reduce the burden on the National Health Service.

In transition to war, health authorities, if so directed, will cease to admit all but emergency cases and will arrange for patients whose retention is not medically essential to be sent home, the purpose being to free hospitals to deal with civil and military casualties. The latter may include United States service personnel.

Clinical Research (Children)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 12 June, Official Report, column 301, when he expects to complete his consideration of the possibility of issuing further guidance or reminders to health authorities about clinical research investigation involving children, and about references of such investigations to local ethical committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: In reaching a decision on whether to issue further guidance or a reminder to health authorities on clinical research we will wish to take account of the views of relevant professional and other bodies on the need for such guidance. Consultations will begin as soon as possible.

Bloomsbury Local Office

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many items of outstanding post are awaiting action at the Bloomsbury local Department of Health and Social Security office, Tavistock square; how long on average they have been outstanding; and how many of the items of unlinked post outstanding at 11 March have now been dealt with.

Mr. Major: The Department's Bloomsbury local office had 1,090 items of post awaiting action on 17 June, of which 798 were more than two days old. Records are not kept of how long on average post is outstanding. There are no items of post from claimants still outstanding from 11 March.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the detailed arrangements for processing urgent needs claims at the Bloomsbury local Department of Health and Social Security Office, Tavistock square; what particular arrangements are made for urgent needs claims when the office is shut (a) before its usual time, and (b) in any event; and how information about those proceedings is made available to claimants.

Mr. Major: Urgent needs claims at Bloomsbury local office are given priority and payment is normally made the same day, in accordance with the "S Manual" — paragraphs 8001-8651. If the office is forced to close early, eg because of industrial action, callers are invited to come back the next day, and claimants who cannot wait this long are advised of the Department's London emergency office. The London Emergency Office is open each evening and during the day at weekends. The local office also has an arrangement with the local authority Social Services Department to provide emergency payments on its behalf.

Midwifery

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on management structures for midwifery in the light of the report, "Neighbourhood Nursing — A Focus on Care".

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS (Resources)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how his Department calculateses the annual estimated growth in National Health Service resources demanded by demographic change;

(2) if he will give for each year from 1975 to 1995 the estimated growth in National Health Service resources demanded by demographic change.

Mr. Hayhoe: The estimates of growth in demographic demand on the hospital and community health services are arrived at by weighting the estimated and projected population changes each year, based on the latest figures published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, by the estimated expenditure per head in those groups to give for each of the years in question the total expenditure, and thus the percentage growth required to meet demographic needs. The resultant estimates of annual increases in demographic demand are thus expenditure-based but should not be taken to imply that increased spending is the only way in which increased demand can be met; improved efficiency and cost improvement programmes play a significant part in developing services to meet the various pressures on the service. On the foregoing basis the increase in demographic demand on hospital and community health services for each year from 1975-76 to 1995-96 is estimated as follows:

Year	Per cent.
1977-78	0·3
1978-79	0·9
1979-80	1·2
1980-81	0·9
1981-82	0·3
1982-83	0·5
1983-84	0·5
1984-85	0·6
1985-86	1·1

Year	Per cent.
1986-87	1·0
1987-88	0·9
1988-89	0·8
1989-90	0·7
1990-91	0·6
1991-92	0·5
1992-93	0·2
1993-94	0·0
1995-96	0·6

The effect of demographic changes is not identified separately from other pressures for the family practitioner services which are demand-led, but changes in population structure, and especially increases in the number of very elderly people, clearly lead to increased demand for these services as well.

Health Authorities (Documentation)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will issue instructions to district health authorities reminding them of the entitlement of hon. Members to receive all documents and accounts which are available to authority members, even those for confidential consideration in connection with hospitals, services and overall management covering the constituency of the hon. Member concerned and to seek to improve compliance with those rules by all health authorities.

Mr. Whitney: Under Section 1(4) of the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960 all members of the public are entitled to receive on request, and subject to appropriate payment, copies of the agenda and related documents for items to be discussed during that part of a health authority's meeting which is open to the public. There is no entitlement to receive confidential documents relating to items discussed in closed session. Hon. Members have no rights in this respect above those of any member of the public.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which paragraphs of circular S51/85 are still in force and which have been withdrawn.

Mr. Newton: The full contents of the circular are still in force.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if claims for supplementary benefit from young people born on or after 1 February 1970 are being dealt with pending the further legal advice which the Office of the Chief Adjudication Officer is seeking on their position.

Mr. Newton: Claims received from these young people are determined by the independent adjudicating authorities and the chief adjudication officer's guidance on claims from school leavers is contained in the published S manual and S circulars.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the number of claims for supplementary benefit being received at local offices from young people who left relevant education at or before Easter and about how many are being successful, the age of those applying, and how many have returned to school after Easter for 12 hours a week or less.

Mr. Newton: Local offices have been asked to record the number of successful claims to benefit made between 7 April 1986 and 3 June 1986 where payment has been made under the conditions outlined in circular S51/85 and in addition to record the number of successful claims made between May and the end of August 1986 where the claimant has left school before his legal school leaving date. The results of this exercise are not yet available.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's current circular explaining the rules governing claims to supplementary benefit by those who have recently left school.

Mr. Newton: A copy of the chief adjudication officer's published guidance—circular S51/85—is available in the Library.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the circular sent by the Office of the Chief Adjudication Officer to the regional adjudication officers which informed them that further legal advice was being sought on the question of benefit for school-leavers.

Mr. Newton: No. The hon. Member may wish to pursue the question of the letter with the chief adjudication officer.

Voluntary Organisations (Grants)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many voluntary organisations, funded by his Department, have not yet been informed of the level of their grant allocation for the financial year 1986-87; why this delay in notification has occurred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Custodianship Allowances

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to respond to the representations dated 7 November 1985, 20 November 1985 and 30 May 1986 concerning the treatment for social security purposes of custodianship allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: If the hon. Member will provide me with further details of these representations, I shall write to him with the information he has requested.

Foster Parents (Supplementary Benefit)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans to amend the provisions of the Supplementary Benefit (Resources) Regulations as regards the position of foster parents in receipt of supplementary benefit who wish to seek custodianship orders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are considering the treatment of custodianship payments across the range of means-tested benefits and will put forward any proposals for consultation in due course.

AIDS

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the names and occupations of the outside members of his Department's working party on acquired immunity deficiency syndrome convened under the auspices of the Chief Medical Officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Membership of the expert advisory group on AIDS drawn from outside the four health departments is:

North-West RHA (Computers)

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Bethlem Royal and Maudsley Special Health Authority

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting between the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) and representatives of the Bethlem Royal and Maudsley special health authority on 12 June.

Mr. Whitney: This was a useful meeting at which a number of issues were clarified. I emphasised the importance of the authority bringing its budget back into balance no later than the end of March 1988 and taking early decisions to achieve this but promised to look sympathetically at a number of issues raised by this authority, whose work the Government value greatly. I am writing to the chairman of the authority to confirm the points we agreed.

Benefits

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many students he estimates will be worse off, and how many will be better off, in 1986-87 as a result of the changes to student entitlement to supplementary benefit and to housing benefit allowances announced on 18 June.

Mr. Newton: Over 400,000 students in total will be affected by the proposals. It is estimated that some 140,000 living away from home will gain the full £36 increase in the grant. Of the remainder, some will make smaller gains, the effect for others will be neutral overall and some will sustain losses in their combined grant and social security entitlement. The net effect for those who make either a partial gain or loss will depend entirely on the individual's circumstances and estimates of numbers likely to have particular levels of gain or loss are not possible. However, in general, any losses from the various measures will not be cumulative.

Health Authorities (Tendering)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress made by health authorities on competitive tendering in the fields of catering, cleaning and laundry and give details in each case as to whether contracts have been awarded in-house or to outside contractors.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report details of the progress made by district health authorities in putting their services out to tender in the manner of the answer given on 14 April, Official Report, columns 273-80

(2) if he will name for each tendering exercise of which his Department is aware and which was completed since his answer of 14 April, Official Report, columns 279-86, the health authority, the hospital concerned and the successful tenderer.

Mr. Fowler [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1986, c. 447]: The policy of competitive tendering is producing increasing benefits for the Health Service. The resources that are released are available for health authorities to spend on improvements in services to patients. Savings have built up steadily. At the end of 1984 they amounted to £9 million a year. At the end of 1985 they had risen to £42 million a year. In the first quarter of 1986 alone further savings of some £10 million a year have been identified. It is now estimated that a total of £52 million a year will be saved through competitive tendering exercises completed by 31 March 1986. One hundred and forty eight contracts have been let to private contractors with estimated annual savings of £21·5 million. Five hundred and twenty two tenders have been secured by in-house organisations with estimated annual savings of £30·5 million.

Table A summarises the position in each health authority.

A list of results of further tendering exercises of which we are aware is shown in table B.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

New Zealand (Exports)

Mr. Alexander asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the New Zealand Government or the New Zealand Dairy Board about the exportation to the United Kingdom by New Zealand of milk or dairy products which did not originate in New Zealand.

Mr. Gummer: There have been no imports from New Zealand to the United Kingdom in recent years of milk or dairy products which did not originate in New Zealand. Anchor Foods Ltd., a wholly-owned subsidiary of the New Zealand Dairy Board registered in the United Kingdom, has, I understand, imported into the United Kingdom small quantities of dairy products from other member states of the Community. Such imports will have been subject to the normal rules for intra-Community trade, not the special arrangements for imports from New Zealand. My officials, in conjunction with those of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, monitor the import of New Zealand butter sent under the special arrangements. They also keep in regular contact with the New Zealand Government and the New Zealand Dairy Board about matters such as the trading activities of the New Zealand Dairy Board.

Sugar

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to renegotiate the terms of the subsidy paid by the European Economic Community to sugar producers with a view to reducing the price of sugar to commercial beekeepers and others within the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No subsidy as such is paid to Community sugar producers although refunds funded mainly by levies on producers apply to exports of surplus quota sugar to third countries. Previous Community schemes to provide reduced price sugar to beekeepers have not been cost effective, resulting in high unit administrative costs and little increase in sugar consumption, with less than 2 per cent. of the subsidised sugar under the last scheme being used in the United Kingdom. Moreover, the denaturing of the sugar required to prevent abuse has created problems for beekeepers. We therefore have no plans to press the Commission to introduce another such scheme. We do, however, support price restraint in the sugar sector and I am pleased to say that, over the last three years' price fixings, the effective support price for white sugar in the United Kingdom has increased by a total of only 2·1 per cent., which represents a substantial reduction in real terms.

Chemical Fertilisers and Pesticides

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies have been carried out to assess the effect of chemical fertilisers and pesticides on water supplies, and the long-term effect on soils and wildlife in agricultural land; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: There have in recent years been many studies relating to the effects of fertilisers and pesticides. My Department has been closely involved in a number of these, including a three-year study on the ecological effects of pesticides used in various ways at the Boxworth experimental farm, from which the report is now being finalised. My officials are also working currently with others on the forthcoming report of the nitrate co-ordination group, which concerns nitrate in water.

PRIME MINISTER

Ashow (Visit)

Q14. Mr. Pawsey asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to pay an official visit to the village of Ashow, near Kenilworth.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

F111 Aircraft

Q31. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer of 5 June to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), Official Report, column 1086, she will seek the necessary permission to enable her to reveal the source of the advice from the United States of America to the effect that F111 aircraft were more accurate and precise than carrier-based aircraft.

The Prime Minister: No.

Surplus Food

Q35. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the impact on the Third world of the European Economic Community policy of disposing of surplus foodstuffs on the world market; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I expect the European Council to discuss the problem of world agricultural surplus production and trade, to which the Community's surpluses contribute along with those of others notably the USA. This will no doubt include the effect of the surpluses on the economies of certain developing countries, a factor which was acknowledged in the declaration issued by the recent summit meeting in Tokyo.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 June.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 June.

Mr. Greville Janner asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

Disabled People

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy to expand rehabilitation facilities for disabled people of all ages in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As indicated in "Care in Action" Government priorities for health and social services already include provision of services for physically and sensorily handicapped, mentally ill and mentally handicapped people of all ages. These priorities apply to services both in hospitals and in the community. There has been a steady expansion in the number of therapy staff employed in provision of these services and regional health authorities' strategies show plans for further substantial increases.

The Government are considering urgently the recommendation in the McColl report about the artificial limb and appliance centre services, with a view to further improving the services they provide.

Considerable progress has also been made in developing support and assistance for disabled people living in the community. Through joint funding and the "Care in the Community" arrangements which are aimed at assisting the transfer into the community of people who do not need to be cared for in long-stay hospitals the Government have assisted the development of services for the most vulnerable groups.

Our initiatives on "Helping the Community to Care" based on central funding for voluntary bodies will also benefit people to whom the hon. Member's question refers.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Prime Minister what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the United Nations regarding the implementation of the world programme of action concerning disabled persons; if she will make it Her Majesty's Government's policy to help to promote further steps to implement the world programme in the second half of the decade; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have kept the United Nations Secretariat informed of the development of services for disabled people in the United Kingdom. These developments broadly reflect the aims and recommendations obtained in the world programme of action.

I have referred in another answer to the hon. Member today to the development of rehabilitation and other health and social services which benefit disabled people. Progress has also been made on a number of other fronts.

The Government have commissioned the first comprehensive study of disablement in the population for some 16 years. The information it will provide is essential if we are to make the best use of available resources in future planning for benefits and services for disabled people.

Total expenditure on cash benefits for long-term sick and disabled people in 1985-86 was over £5·1 billion. This represents an increase in real terms of some 53 per cent. since 1978-79.

The implementation of the Education Act 1981 has improved the arrangements for the assessment and integration of children with special educational needs.

There have been important developments in the key field of access. Amendments to the building regulations introduced in 1985 require developers to provide access facilities for disabled people in some categories of new public buildings. In 1984 the Government funded the establishment of the Access Committee for England, in which disabled people have a prominent voice, to help promote awareness of the access needs of disabled people and encourage provision for them.

The Transport Act 1985 established the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee, half of whose members must themselves be disabled, to advise the Department of Transport on all aspects of transport and mobility for disabled people. In 1985 the Department of Transport also set up a mobility advice and vehicle information service to provide practical advice on driving, or adaptations, and car choice for disabled drivers and passengers.

In November 1984 I was pleased to launch the first code of good practice on employment of disabled people, endorsed by both the CBI and the TUC, to encourage greater employment opportunities.

The Government will continue to seek opportunities for making improvements in facilities and opportunities for disabled people.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Prime Minister what co-operation is taking place between her Government and other nations involved in the world programme of action concerning disabled people in stimulating better rehabilitation facilities in the underdeveloped world; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As I explained to the hon. Member on 18 June, at column 546, we support the general aims of the United Nations world programme of action concerning disabled persons by giving direct assistance to specific projects under our bilateral aid programmes. In this way, we support rehabilitation programmes for disabled people in Bangladesh, India, Malaysia, St. Helena and Zimbabwe. We are also funding jointly with various British charities rehabilitation programmes and projects to assist disabled people in Bangladesh (two projects), Botswana, India (10 projects), Indonesia, Sri Lanka, Zaire and Zimbabwe (two projects).

In addition, the health aid programme of the Overseas Development Administration is directed at improving the availability of basic health services in the developing world. The programme contributes directly and indirectly to the welfare of the disabled and helps to prevent disability.

South Africa

Mr. Frank Field asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 546, what steps she has taken to encourage compliance in respect of those companies which refuse to make returns for their operations in South Africa; and if she will list each of the initiatives Her Majesty's Government has taken during the past 12 months to encourage British firms to comply fully with the provisions of the European Economic Community code of conduct.

The Prime Minister: The Government do not comment publicly on individual company reports volunteered under the EC code of conduct. They are made available publicly and speak for themselves. But in their normal contacts with companies, Ministers and officials encourage them to comply fully.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Prime Minister which Department first became aware that the version of the European Economic Community code of conduct for firms operating in South Africa made available to the public contained a misquote.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Trade and Industry.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

95. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people under the age of 25 years are currently unemployed in Lothian region.

Mr. Allan Stewart: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed people claiming benefit in Lothian region under the age of 25 years was 17,786.

Drink Offenders

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many places have been designated in terms of section 5 of the Criminal Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act 1980; and if he plans to increase the numbers of places designated.

Mr. John MacKay: At present one establishment, Albyn house, Aberdeen, is designated by my right hon. and learned Friend under section 5 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 as suitable for the care of drunken persons. A second establishment, Annan house, Dundee, is due to be opened by the Church of Scotland later this year, although formal designation has not yet been completed. I understand that proposals are also being devised for designated places in Inverness and at various locations in Strathclyde.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what savings have been made by diverting habitual drink offenders from the criminal justice system by the establishment of the designated place Albyn house, Aberdeen; and what were the specific savings made for (a) the police, (b) the courts and (c) Her Majesty's prisons for 1984 and 1985, arising therefrom.

Mr. John MacKay: It is not feasible to quantify the benefits of Albyn house on the line suggested. However, the facility has undoubtedly released police manpower in the Aberdeen area for other duties and diverted cases from the courts and prisons. But the principal benefit of this use of the relevant provisions of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 (under which Albyn house is designated) is that for the offenders concerned this provides a much more constructive approach to the problems of habitual drunkenness.

Forth Estuary (Sewage Disposal)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how much sewage is disposed of into the Forth estuary from (a) pipelines and (b) ships.

Mr. Ancram: Sewage from a population of some 1·2 million people plus industry and commerce is discharged from local authority sewers to the Firth of Forth, including the estuary and tidal reaches of rivers. This amounts to some 115 million gallons per day, of which 80 per cent. is treated. The Scottish Development Department has no information on the volume of sewage discharged from ships.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of secondary schools in Scotland are selective; and what were the comparable figures for 1979, 1970, and 1960, respectively.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There are no state schools at present with a purely selective intake policy. The information requested for past years is shown in the table. Comparable information is not available prior to school session 1966-67.

	Per cent.
1979-80	1·8
1970-71	38·8
1966-67	64·0

Holy Loch (Radioactivity)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details of the levels of radioactive contamination and the isotopes identified in the mud flats of the Holy loch in 1965 and in 1978.

Mr. Ancram: The fisheries laboratory of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food undertakes independent monitoring of the Holy loch in respect of the United States naval base. The results for 1978 which include radionuclides in sediments were published in the laboratory's aquatic environment monitoring report No. 4. The concentrations of man-made radioactivity reported were very low and of no significance radiologically.

Although the Holy loch has been monitored regularly by MAFF since the United States base was established, the results for earlier years were not included in the monitoring reports because at that time details of all aspects of the operation of the base were classified. I am assured that the results for 1965 showed no grounds for concern and in terms of doses to people were well within the internationally recommended standard of radiological protection.

Water and Drainage Schemes (Rural Villages)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to assist local authorities to finance water and drainage schemes in small villages which cannot sustain large enough housing developments to make the investment in water and drainage infrastructure economically viable.

Mr. Ancram: Regional and islands councils have a duty to provide water and drainage services where this can be done at reasonable cost. Where provision of water supplies in a rural area would impose a significant financial burden on the council, grant assistance is available towards capital expenditure under the Rural Water Supplies and Sewerage Acts. The grant is payable on approved expenditure, subject to a ceiling cost per property served, at a rate between 30 and 75 per cent. depending on the needs and resources of the council.

Grant assistance for rural sewerage schemes was terminated as from 31 March 1986, after consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, but loan charges incurred in respect of capital expenditure on drainage works continue to count as relevant expenditure for the purpose of distributing rate support grant.

Private Hospitals (Diseases)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, under public health legislation, there have been any reports to him in 1984, 1985 and 1986 of outbreaks of infectious diseases or salmonella poisoning in any of Scotland's private hospitals.

Mr. John MacKay: I am informed that no such outbreaks have been reported to the communicable diseases unit of the Common Services Agency for the Scottish Health Service in any of the years specified.

Employment (Stirling)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, further to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, he will publish the information on the structure of employment in the Queensland division of the Stirling constituency which was available to him when he decided not to include that area within the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1986, c. 419]: In analysing the case for an extension of the Highlands and Islands Development Board area my right hon. and learned Friend used the percentages of persons employed in several categories of employment, together with the unemployed as surrogates for employment structure. A qualitative analysis of the areas adjoining the HIDB area as a whole was undertaken to determine whether their employment structure was better than the average for the board's area. These qualitative assessments when taken along with similar assessments of other factors clearly showed that only parts of Moray district could be considered as satisfying the criteria for inclusion in the board's area. Information is not therefore available in the form requested.

ENERGY

Director General of Gas Supply

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to appoint a Director General of Gas Supply.

Mr. Peter Walker: Subject to Parliament approving the Gas Bill, I intend to appoint Mr. James McKinnon to be Director General of Gas Supply. His appointment will be full-time and run for a period of three years from the day on which the Office of Gas Supply is set up under the new legislation.

Mr. McKinnon is an accountant with considerable experience in commerce and until recently was finance director of the Imperial Group. His background is ideally suited to assessing the financial information needed to carry out his duties in safeguarding the interests of consumers.

The Gas Bill contains powers for the Director to monitor and enforce the authorisation to be given to British Gas as a public gas supplier. The director, together with the Gas Consumers' Council will provide greatly improved protection for consumers, compared with present arrangements.

Coal Industry

93. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate he has of the effect on employment in the coal industry of the recent reduction in the price of coal being sold to the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. David Hunt: The recently concluded deal between the NCB and the CEGB on coal prices will help to secure the future of the coal industry. Details of employment within the coal industry are a matter for the NCB.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will now make available all those documents relating to the foundation of the United Kingdom civil nuclear programme withheld from public inspection for beyond a period of 30 years.

Mr. Goodlad: No. The disclosure of such documents would be contrary to the national interest.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those matters relating to nuclear activities for which he is responsible on which it is his policy to withold information on the grounds of (a) national security, (b) commercial confidentiality, (c) history and (d) cost of provision, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend has made clear his commitment to openness with respect to the nuclear industry. Requests for information are considered individually, taking into account the considerations listed by the hon. Member. A question would not, however, be answered when the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report the total cost to date of research and development for the Magnox nuclear programme and the advanced gas cooled reactor nuclear programmes, and indicate the extent to which these costs were borne by the electricity boards.

Mr. Goodlad: This information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. On the Magnox programme I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) of 23 July at column 470.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the total weight of plutonium reprocessed at Sellafield originated from Central Electricity Generating Board installations, in the period 1970 to 1985.

Mr. Goodlad: It would not be in the national interest to disclose this information as this would assist the calculation of plutonium produced for defence purposes.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will review his Department's information programme in relation to nuclear energy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government wish to ensure that full and reliable information on the nature and uses of civil nuclear power is readily available to the public. Apart from its day-to-day press services, the Department provides funds for the UKAEA to prepare and publish a range of information about nuclear energy. This programme of expenditure by the UKAEA is reviewed periodically by the Department, as are all its expenditure programmes.

Magnox Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy what have been the capital investment costs of Magnox stations in constant pounds since 1956.

Mr. Goodlad: The Central Electricity Generating Board, the South of Scotland Electricity Board and British Nuclear Fuels plc advise that these costs were some £5,660 million at constant March 1986 prices. The original costs have been inflated using the retail price index.

Plutonium

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will state the total weight of plutonium exported for civil use since May 1979, and give the amount, by weight exported to each country involved.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library copies of all correspondence between himself and the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board between January 1983 and May 1986 concerning the use of plutonium produced from civil nuclear power in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: No. It is not the practice to publish correspondence between Ministers and the chairmen of nationalised industries.

Potassium Iodate

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all occasions that potassium iodate (iodine) has been issued to workers or civilians at or around nuclear stations in the United Kingdom; what dosage was administered on each occasion; and if he will give details of any side effects recorded.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to the reply, 18 June 1986, c. 578-79]: In so far as these details are available, they are contained in the Health and Safety Executive's quarterly statements of nuclear incidents, which are published and placed in the Library of the House.

THE ARTS

Export of Works of Art

Mr. Faulds asked the Minister for the Arts whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East on 26 February Official Report, column 593, he is now able to announce the publication of the report of the Reveiwing Committee on the Export of Works of Art covering the year ended 30 June 1985.

Mr. Luce: I expect to present it to Parliament and to publish it on 27 June.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Initiatives

13. Mr. Baldry asked the Paymaster General what progress is being made on the employment initiatives that the Paymaster General announced in Luxembourg in the current month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Together with the Employment Ministers from Italy and the Irish Republic I tabled a paper entitled "Employment Growth into the 1990s—A Strategy for the labour market" at the EC Council of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers in Luxembourg on 5 June. The Council welcomed the paper and agreed that discussion on it should continue at the informal meeting of Social Affairs Ministers in Edinburgh in September. The United Kingdom's aim, shared by those countries with which we tabled the paper, is to secure the adoption by the European Community of an employment strategy along the lines of the paper during the forthcoming United Kingdom Presidency of the Community.

Labour Statistics

14. Mr. Flannery asked the Paymaster General what is the latest figure of United Kingdom unemployed people.

Mr. Lang: On 8 May 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,271,000.

15. Mr. Pavitt asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report the number of unemployed in Willesden and Wembley on 1 June for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Following is the available information. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants in an area closely corresponding to that covered by the Willesden and Wembley jobcentres on the unemployment count date in June 1983, 1984 and 1985. Statistics of unemployment for local areas are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only since June 1983. Information for 12 June 1986 will be available in the Library on 17 July.

Unemployed claimants in Wembley and Willesden—June each year

13 June 1985	9,568

Note:
These figures relate to the following wards: Alperton, Barham,

Barnhill, Kenton, Kingsbury, Preston, St. Andrews, Sudbury, Sudbury Court, Tokyngton, Wembley Central, Chamberlayne, Church End, Harlesden, Kensal Rise, Manor, Roundwood, St. Raphaels and Stonebridge.

19. Mr. Canavan asked the Paymaster General what is the total number of unemployed people in the United Kingdom.

35. Mr. Eadie asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures.

43. Mr. Martin asked the Paymaster General what is the total number of persons unemployed at the latest available date; and what rate of unemployment this figure represents.

75. Mr. Latham asked the Paymaster General whether he will make a statement on the level of unemployment.

Mr. Lang: On 8 May 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,270,892, which corresponds to an unemployment rate of 13·5 per cent.

32. Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General what is the best available estimate of the number of women who are unemployed but not included in the unemployment figures because of their ineligibility for benefit.

Mr. Lang: According to preliminary results from the labour force survey, in the spring of 1985 in Great Britain, there were 580,000 women who were without jobs seeking work but were not included in the monthly count of benefit claimants. There were also about 440,000 women who were claiming benefits and included in the monthly figures, who either had a paid job or were not looking for work.

37. Mr. Fisher asked the Paymaster General what percentage of the total number of persons aged under 25 years and unemployed have been unemployed for more than 12 months.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age and duration is available, 28 per cent. of unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in the United Kingdom had been unemployed for more than 12 months.

38. Mr. Ron Lewis asked the Paymaster General how the number of unemployed women aged under 25 years compares to that of unemployed men aged under 25 years.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available, the numbers of male and female unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in the United Kingdom were 731,170 and 452,663, respectively.

40. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Paymaster General what are the latest figures available concerning the numbers of long-term unemployed.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for over 12 months was 1,356,509.

42. Mr. Cunliffe asked the Paymaster General how many persons aged under 25 years have been unemployed for more than 12 months at the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age and duration is available, the number of unemployment claimants aged under 25 years who had been unemployed for over 12 months in the United Kingdom was 331,471.

47. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the arrangements for determining the number of unemployed people.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 21 May at column 152.

51. Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General how many persons there are in full-time employment in the United Kingdom at the latest available date; how this figure compares with the figure for May 1979; and what are the corresponding figures relating to Wales for those dates.

Mr. Lang: Within the regularly published employment series the estimates of the numbers of self-employed persons and of male employees in employment do not separately identify those in full-time employment. Analyses of full and part-time female employees in employment are not available for the United Kingdom for the dates specified. The available information for Great Britain and for Wales is given in table 1.

52. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General what proportion of the unemployed have been without work for (a) one year, (b) two years and (c) three years.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, the proportions of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for between one and two years, two and three years and over three years were 15·4 per cent., 8·4 per cent. and 17·1 per cent., respectively.

57. Mr. Barron asked the Paymaster General what is the total number of people under 25 years of age unemployed in the Rother Valley; and how this compares with the national figure.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available, the numbers of unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in the Rother Valley parliamentary constituency and in the United Kingdom were 2,286 and 1,183,833, respectively.

60. Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General how many people in the Bradford travel-to-work area have been unemployed for more than a year.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, the number of claimants who had been unemployed for over one year in the Bradford travel-to-work area was 13,906.

62. Mr. Dormand asked the Paymaster General if he will state the number of unemployed, and the percentage, at May 1979 and May 1986, respectively, in the northern region.

Mr. Lang: On 8 May 1986 the number of unemployed claimants, seasonally adjusted excluding school leavers, in the northern region was 226,600, which corresponds to an unemployment rate of 18 per cent. The corresponding number and rate for May 1979 were 99,100 and 7·3 per cent.

66. Mr. Shersby asked the Paymaster General what was the total number of people in part-time or full-time work on the latest date for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure on 1 July 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

Employed Labour Force in Great Britain

The Employed Labour Force is the sum of employees in employment. The self-employed, and HM forces.

74. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Paymaster General what are the latest unemployment figures; and how these compare with the figures for December 1979.

Mr. Lang: On 8 May 1986 the number of unemployed claimants, seasonally adjusted excluding school leavers, in the United Kingdom was 3,208,600. The corresponding number for December 1979 was 1,121,700.

77. Mr. Wareing asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently registered as unemployed in the Liverpool, West Derby constituency; how many have been jobless for more than a year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available. The number of unemployed claimants in the Liverpool, West Derby constituency was 9,768, of whom 5,357 had been unemployed for over one year.

82. Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures for Merseyside.

Mr. Lang: On 8 May 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the Merseyside metropolitan area was 139,502.

91. Mr. Hardy asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently in full-time employment; what proportion of the population this represents; and what was the comparable figure 10 year ago.

Mr. Lang: Information is not available in the exact form requested.

Within the regularly published employment series, the estimates of the numbers of self-employed persons and of male employees in employment do not separately identify those in full-time employment. That latest available information for Great Britain, together with information for June 1975, is given in Table 1.

* Based on respondent's own assessment, not on hours worked.
† If those identified in the LFS as being in full-time employment and above working age are excluded this proportion becomes 55·4 per cent.

Clean-up Campaign

16. Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General if he estimates that the proposed clean-up campaign will create any full-time employment.

Mr. Lang: As I said in my earlier reply to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), it is estimated that the new environmental improvement initiative will initially provide work for up to 5,000 long-term unemployed people, and of these about 25 per cent. will be full-time workers.

Job Release Scheme

17. Mr. Knox asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the operation of the job release scheme.

Mr. Lang: I am satisfied with the operation of the job release scheme. At the end of April 1986, 40,000 people were receiving an allowance under the scheme.

Business Expansion Scheme

18. Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Paymaster General how much has been raised to date under the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Inland Revenue statitics indicate that a total of £252 million was raised by 1,403 companies under the business expansion scheme in the first two years of its operation—1983-84 and 1984-85.

School Leavers

20. Mr. Viggers asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the current level of employment amongst school leavers.

Mr. Trippier: The level of employment among school leavers depends mainly on the performance of industry, business and the economy as a whole. Our economic policies are designed to create the conditions for improvement and we are making substantial progress. Our training and employment measures will help young people into jobs.

Long-term Unemployment

21. Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General what is the latest figure for the poportion of the unemployed who have been out of work for over a year; and what has been the increase in this figure since May 1979.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, the proportion of claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for over 12 months was 40·8 per cent. The corresponding proportion of unemployed registrants in April 1979 (not available for May 1979) was 27·4 per cent. The figures are not strictly comparable because of changes in the way the figures are collected.

Earnings

22. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Paymaster General what percentage of workers employed in the north-west are on earnings below 25 per cent. of the national average earnings.

Mr. Lang: The latest information from the new earnings survey relates to April 1985 and shows that less than 0·2 per cent. of full-time adult employees in the north-west region had gross weekly earnings below £42·8. The figure which is 25 per cent. of average gross weekly earnings of all full-time adult employees in Great Britain.

American Tourists

23. Mr. Chapman asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the number of tourists from the United States expected to visit Britain in 1986; and how this compares with 1985.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

24. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Paymaster General what is the effect of the shortfall on previous years of United States tourists on employment within the tourist industry.

Mr. Trippier: It is too soon to assess the extent of any reduction in the number of United States tourists and the consequences for employment within the United Kingdom tourist industry.

North Yorkshire (Young People)

25. Mrs. Shields asked the Paymaster General what plans he has for the employment of young people in North Yorkshire.

Mr. Trippier: Employment prospects for young people in North Yorkshire depend on a sustained improvement in the performance of industry, business and the economy as a whole. Our economic polices are designed to create the conditions for that improvement and we are making substantial progress. We also need levels of pay which ensure the competitiveness of our industry.

In 1986-87 two-year YTS will provide 3,328 places in North Yorkshire, with a further 738 continuation places being provided for young people who entered training last year. The job prospects of those completing YTS and those ineligible for training will be further enhanced by the new workers scheme.

Those young people who have been unemployed for some time will be able to benefit from temporary employment under the community programme. At April 1986 1,340 places were available in North Yorkshire and the target is to increase this figure to 1,520 by October this year. Our other employment measures will also directly or indirectly benefit young people.

Tourism

26. Mr. Gregory asked the Paymaster General what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations contained in "Pleasure, Leisure—and Jobs; The Business of Tourism."

Mr. Trippier: I am pleased to report that good progress has been made in the majority of the action points listed in "Pleasure, Leisure and Jobs" and that work is continuing on the outstanding recommendations. Particular achievements to date include the introduction of the new voluntary hotel classification scheme throughout Great Britain, the opening last month of the new British travel centre in Lower Regent street, the introduction throughout England of the new system of white on brown road signs for tourist attractions and the publication of the consultative document on tourist coaches in London including proposals for additional coach parking facilities for summer 1986. We have also taken steps to improve the co-ordination of Government policies affecting tourism by instituting regular meetings of Ministers under the chairmanship of my right hon. and noble Friend and by setting up new arrangements for co-ordination at regional level.

46. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Paymaster General how many people work, directly or indirectly, in the tourist industry; and how this compares with 1979.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that about 1·1 million jobs were supported directly or indirectly by tourism spending in 1985. A comparable figure for 1979 is not available. However, separate information on the number of employees in those sectors which most directly serve tourists (hotels and catering, and leisure services) showed an increase of just over 100,000 to around 1·3 million between June 1979 and June 1985.

54. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the proportion of those working in the Southern Tourist Board region whose jobs depend directly or indirectly on tourism.

Mr. Trippier: Estimates covering jobs depending both directly and indirectly on tourism in particular areas are not available. However, the following table shows the available information on the number of employees in the main tourism-related industries from the 1981 census of employment. Comparable details for 1984 will be available later this year.

Number of employees in employment in Hampshire, Isle of Wight and part of Dorset in September 1981*

‡ Groups 977 and 979 of Standard Industrial Classification 1980.

68. Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what further plans he has to aid the British tourist industry.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have already taken a number of measures to aid the tourism industry this year, including an additional £6 million to the British Tourist Authority and English Tourist Board for promotion of tourism in regions where unemployment is high and there is potential for development. We shall continue to take appropriate measures to encourage the industry's development within available resources; but the prime responsibility for investment in the industry must rest with the private sector.

79. Mr. Terlezki asked the Paymaster General what new overseas marketing initiatives have been proposed by the British Tourist Authority.

Mr. Trippier: For 1986-87 the BTA has been set the objectives of encouraging overseas visitors to regions with above average unemployment and the potential to attract additional tourism traffic, and extending the tourism season. Its new marketing campaigns are intended to meet these objectives, and will focus on the promotion of senior citizen, youth travel and special interest markets, together with the business and conference sector.

85. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the net contribution of the tourist industry to the creation of jobs.

Mr. Trippier: The growth in the number and spending of tourists has been a vital contribution to the growth of employment in recent years. It is estimated that the spending of tourists supports about 1·1 million jobs, directly in hotels, restaurants, transport, tourist attractions, and so on, and indirectly in supplying industries. Also, in the two years to June 1985, the official estimates of the numbers of employees showed a growth of 106,000 in the sectors most heavily dependent on tourism — hotels and catering trades, and leisure and recreational services — and self-employment in hotels and catering grew by around 28,000 over the same period.

87. Mr. Coombs asked the Paymaster-General by how much he expects employment in the tourism industry to grow in 1986-87.

Mr. Lang: Future employment levels depend on many factors, some of which are difficult to predict. In recent years there has been a substantial growth in the number of employees in those industries which most directly serve tourists (up by over 100,000 in the hotel, catering and leisure and recreational services sectors between June 1983 and June 1985) at a time when the growth of tourists' spending rose in real terms by around 6 per cent.

If tourists' spending continues to grow at a similar rate as in the recent past. I would expect to see further significant growth in employment in the sectors serving tourists.

Black Unemployment

27. Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what is the best available estimate of the level of black unemployment compared with the overall level of unemployment.

Mr. Lang: According to preliminary results of the labour force survey, in the spring of 1985 in Great Britain, 202,000 or 20 per cent. of the non-white labour force were without a job and seeking work, compared with 2,808,000 or 10·6 per cent. of the total workforce.

Tourist-related Employment

28. Mr. Pawsey asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps to improve training and re-training for tourist-related employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 16 April at columns 386-87.

London Visitor and Convention Bureau

29. Mr. Porter asked the Paymaster General whether he proposes to provide financial support to the London Visitor and Convention Bureau, following the abolition of the Greater London Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government already provide financial support to the LVCB through the English Tourist Board and this support will continue. I am happy to report that in addition to this support from the ETB, the London boroughs' grants committee is to provide in 1986-87 £360,000 of basic funding to the LVCB with a further £180,000 for special projects.

New Workers Scheme

30. Mr. Jackson asked the Paymaster General how many young people will be provided for under the new workers scheme.

Mr. Lang: We estimate that, by the end of March next year, some 100,000 young people will have been helped into employment under the new workers scheme.

Community Programme

31. Mr. Rogers asked the Paymaster General what proportion of people leaving the community programme obtain a permanent job.

Mr. Lang: The results of the latest survey of former community programme participants show that 54 per cent. of those responding had had at least one job within 10 months of leaving the community programme; 28 per cent. of respondents obtained a job immediately on leaving.

41. Mr. Dixon asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to introduce a refuse cleaning element into the community programme.

Mr. Lang: I have no specific plans to introduce a refuse clearing element into the community programme. However, the programme already funds projects which, for example, remove flytips from beauty spots and collect and recycle waste materials.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has recently announced a new environmental improvement initiative which it is estimated will initially provide work for up to 5,000 long-term unemployed people through the community programme.

65. Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what is the average wage on the community programme; and what proportion of participants are paid more than this and what proportion less.

Mr. Lang: The latest survey estimate shows the average wage paid to community programme participants, including managers and supervisors, to be £73 per week; 43 per cent. were paid more than this and 57 per cent. less.

80. Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to seek to improve the training element in the community programme.

Mr. Lang: The principal objective of the community programme is to provide worthwhile temporary employment for long-term unemployed people. The latest survey evidence shows that about 70 per cent. of participants receive training, and this will continue to be encouraged.

Mr. Steen asked the Paymaster General if he will list the projects funded under the community programme in each of the last three years; how many jobs were created as a result; at what total cost in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The community programme began in October 1982. At the end of the last three years the number of projects and places were as follows:

	Projects operating	Places filled
March 1984	7,498	112,886
March 1985	7,894	132,755
March 1986	10,315	199,919

The total annual costs were as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	400·1
1985-86	683·8

It would be impractical to provide a complete list of all projects and places which have been funded in each of the last three years. Such a list could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Wages Bill

33. Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General what recent representations he has received concerning the provisions of part III of the Wages Bill.

Mr. Trippier: I had a meeting with TUC representatives on 7 May. In addition, I have had letters from the CBI and a number of other employers organisations.

Northern Region

34. Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General how many people find work each month in the northern region.

Mr. Lang: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Between May 1985 and May 1986 an average of 25,900 persons per month ceased to be unemployed claimants in the northern region.

North-West and Northern Regions

36. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Paymaster General whether he will consider the introduction of further measures to reduce unemployment in the north-west and northern regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am always prepared to consider further measures to reduce unemployment in these regions. Both regions will benefit from the new package of measures announced in the Budget to accelerate the growth of enterprise, boost employment opportunities for the young and help the long-term unemployed find work.

The north-east will also benefit from the measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry of 14 May to alleviate the problems caused by the regrettable redundancies in the shipbuilding industry.

The Government's economic strategy is providing the climate of low inflation and sustained growth which is the only sensible way to secure real jobs throughout the country.

Vocational Qualifications

39. Mr. Torney asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the review of vocational qualifications.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) on 8 May 1986 at column 205.

Industrial Relations

44. Mr. Eastham asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to introduce further legislation in the field of industrial relations.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no plans at present to introduce further legislation in the field of industrial relations, but will be keeping the situation under review.

Disabled People

45. Mr. Robert C. Brown asked the Paymaster General what is the current rate of unemployment for registered disabled people.

Mr. Lang: There were 26,396 unemployed registered disabled people registered for employment at jobcentres and careers offices on 4 April 1986. It is not possible to convert this figure into an unemployment percentage rate because the number of registered disabled people in employment is not available.

Jobcentres and Benefit Offices

48. Mr. Maples asked the Paymaster General what steps are being taken to encourage links between jobcentres and unemployment benefits offices.

Mr. Lang: Most jobcentres already have close links with unemployment benefit offices, and liaison arrangements are kept under review.

In order to increase the awareness of jobcentre services amongst claimants, including longer term unemployed, 46 pilot projects in unemployment benefit offices are currently under way and a further 70 are planned. The projects include vacancy displays, information displays and the installation of electronic equipment which gives information on jobcentre services.

Job Start Scheme

49. Mr. Chope asked the Paymaster General whether he will report upon the latest progress in Southampton on the job start scheme.

Mr. Lang: The job start scheme, which is part of the restart programme, will begin on 1 July 1986. The other elements of the restart programme, counselling of long-term unemployed people and restart courses, will be available in Southampton from 30 June.

Black Economy

50. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Paymaster General what estimates his Department has of the number of people working in the black economy.

Mr. Trippier: Because of the nature of the black economy it is impossible to estimate the number of people working in it.

Foreign Nationals (Employment)

53. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce legislation to provide for the substitution by United Kingdom nationals of foreign nationals employed in the United Kingdom when the foreign national's initial contract expires.

Mr. Lang: It is not always reasonable for such substitution to take place. Where appropriate, the need for the overseas national is reviewed at the end of the initial contract.

Hotel Accommodation (London)

55. Mr. Butterfill asked the Paymaster General if he plans any initiatives to promote an increase in the stock of hotel accommodation in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have noted the findings of consultancy study, "London's Tourist Accommodation in the 1990s", recently published by the English Tourist Board, British Tourist Authority and other sponsors. The report predicts a shortfall in hotel capacity by the early 1990s. We shall be responding shortly to its recommendations for increasing the supply of accommodation.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

56. Mr. Hargreaves asked the Paymaster General how many entrants there have been to the enterprise allowance scheme since August 1983.

Mr. Trippier: 146,930 people entered the enterprise allowance scheme between 1 August 1983 and the end of May 1986.

Mr. Rooker asked the Paymaster General if he will arrange to give more specific advice to applicants for the enterprise allowance scheme at the information session about the need to apply for help whilst still in receipt of social security benefits.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 13-14]: Applicants for the scheme are already clearly advised both at information sessions and in the printed guide to the scheme that they must be receiving unemployment and supplementary benefit at the time of application. Applicants are also invited to ask questions about their eligibility for the scheme during the information session if they are in any doubt.

Mr. Rooker asked the Paymaster General how many applicants applied for help under the enterprise allowance scheme after operation of their business commenced in the last period for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 13-14]: The allowance is intended to provide an incentive for unemployed people to set up in business and is therefore not available to those who have already commenced operation of their business. Separate statistics are not kept for those whose applications were rejected because they had already started their business but 3·7 per cent. of applications received during May 1986 were rejected for various reasons.

Redundancies (Merseyside)

58. Mr. Alton asked the Paymaster General how many people have been made redundant on Merseyside since June 1983.

Mr. Lang: A provisional total of 33,245 redundancies during the period 1 June 1983 to 30 April 1986 were confirmed by the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur in the jobcentres areas covering the Merseyside metropolitan county.

Job Clubs

59. Mr. Greenway asked the Paymaster General what is the latest information he has as to the number of people currently in job clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: On 12 June there were 1,039 people attending the 83 job clubs currently in operation. Forty-four of these job clubs have been operating only since May 1986.

Up to 2 May, 2,334 people had passed through job clubs. Of these, 1,478 (63 per cent.) had found work. A further 266 have gone on to the community programme and 67 into training making a total of 78 per cent. positive outcomes.

The Manpower Services Commission plans to expand the job club network to 200 sites by the end of 1986 and 450 as soon as possible thereafter.

Manufacturing Industries

61. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Paymaster General what number of people were working in manufacturing industries in 1979, 1983 and the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

Employees in Employment and the Self-Employed in the Manufacturing Industries in Great Britain

	Number
March 1979	7,253,000
March 1983	5,690,000
March 1986	5,586,000

Career Development Loans

63. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Paymaster General what responses he has so far received to the Government's pilot scheme of career development loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I am encouraged by the interest shown since the career development loan scheme was launched on 15 April in the four pilot areas of Aberdeen, Bath/Bristol, Greater Manchester and Reading/Slough. Some 48,000 leaflets have so far been distributed with some 5,000 responses to its invitation to make more detailed inquiries. I hope that as many people as possible in the pilot areas will consider whether taking a loan at the very favourable terms now on offer would enable them to train to improve their career prospects.

Tin Industry

64. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Paymaster General what studies he has made of the employment implications of the present crisis in the tin industry in Cornwall.

Mr. Lang: Although no studies have yet been concluded of the employment implications of the present crisis in the tin industry in Cornwall, officials in the area are studying the implications for employment of the crisis and all the services of the Department of Employment and MSC are being made available to those made redundant.

Job Counselling

67. Mr. Watts asked the Paymaster General how many long-term unemployed people have been assisted to find jobs or training in Slough and nationally since job counselling became a nationwide scheme.

Mr. Lang: Counselling of long-term unemployed people is part of the restart programme. Although this will become a national programme on 1 July, some localities will start earlier, including Slough on 16 June.

At this early stage, results are not yet available.

Neighbourhood Energy Projects

69. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Paymaster General what contribution the Manpower Services Commission is making to the reduction of unemployment through neighbourhood energy projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to be able to report that, following discussions between my Department, the Manpower Services Commission and the Department of Energy, a national initiative to encourage energy efficiency projects has been established. At the end of May over 250 energy projects were providing about 5,600 jobs for previously long-term unemployed people.

Restart Programme

70. Mr. Leigh asked the Paymaster General what is the timetable for the implementation of the restart programme.

Mr. Lang: The restart programme will be under way throughout Great Britain by 1 July 1986. Some areas will begin earlier.

By 31 March 1987 all people unemployed for more than 12 months will have been interviewed by jobcentres.

Work-related Non-advanced Further Education

71. Mr. Wood asked the Paymaster General what measures have been taken to improve the quality of work-related non-advanced further education.

Mr. Trippier: The resources for work-related non-advanced further education, transferred from the local authority rate support grant (England and Wales) to the Manpower Services Commission (£110 million in 1986-87), will be used to improve the quality of work-related NAFE provision.

All local authorities have produced or are in the process of providing three-year development plans for the academic years 1986-87 to 1988-89 and one year annual programmes for the academic year 1986-87.

Self-employed Persons

72. Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General what are the latest percentages of self-employed persons for the areas of East Anglia, the south-west, the north, the north-west, and Yorkshire and Humberside, respectively.

Mr. Lang: The following table gives, for each region specified, the numbers of self-employed persons expressed as a percentage of the civilian employed labour force (the sum of employees in employment and the self-employed) in that region at June 1985, the latest date for which regional estimates of the self-employed are available:

	Percentage
East Anglia	13·7
South West	14·0
North	9·2
North West	10·1
Yorkshire and Humberside	11·2

Job Creation

73. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Paymaster General how many jobs have been created in the United Kingdom since June 1983; and what information he has on comparable figures in other EEC countries.

Mr. Lang: Between June 1983 and December 1985, it is estimated that total employment in the United Kingdom increased by 952,000. Figures for most other European Community countries are not so up-to-date. The available comparisons are given in the following table.

Changes in Total Employment in EC countries

Youth Training Scheme

76. Mr. Park asked the Paymaster General what are the latest figures on the proportion of people employed under the YTS who have retained their jobs after 12 months.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission conducts a monthly follow-up survey of all young people leaving YTS. A 10 per cent. sample of leavers is followed up in more detail. The latest figures available from the sample show that over three quarters of employed YTS trainees who completed their training were retained by the same employer. In addition, more than 10 per cent. were in work with a different employer.

Mr. Richard Page asked the Paymaster General what percentage of YTS trainees obtain full-time employment (a) nationally and (b) in the Hertfordshire, South-West constituency.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission conducts a monthly follow-up survey of all young people leaving YTS. The latest results, covering those who left YTS between 1 April and 31 December 1985, show that 53 per cent. were in full-time work some three months after leaving YTS. A further 4 per cent. were in part-time work.

Information about YTS leavers in the Hertfordshire, South-West constituency is not available. However, latest results from Dacorum and Three Rivers local authority districts, which together cover most of the constituency, show that 72 per cent. of YTS leavers were in full-time work. A further 3 per cent. were in part-time work.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General why his Department has stopped publishing figures relating to numbers employed on YTS schemes.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 14]: Figures showing numbers of young people taking part in YTS are published regularly in the Employment Gazette.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General how many young people were employed on or about to leave YTS schemes in the United Kingdom in May

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 14]: At the end of May the latest date for which statistics are available there were 250,327 young people intraining on YTS. Approximately 11,000 young people left the scheme in May.

Employment Policy

78. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Paymaster General whether Her Majesty's Government plan any further measures to assist the long-term unemployed beyond those announced on 20 May, Official Report, column 145.

Mr. Lang: The full range of help available to the long-term unemployed is set out in our "Action for Jobs" booklet. We regularly review all schemes carefully to ensure that they meet their objectives.

90. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General if he will list the policies of his Department to help unemployed people over the age of 50 years into employment.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 18 March at column 179. Older workers can benefit from most of the schemes outlined in "Action for Jobs".

Wage Levels

81. Mr. Fatchett asked the Paymaster General if he will update to April 1986 the change in wage levels of the top paid 20 per cent. compared with the lowest paid 20 per cent. since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Information in respect of April 1986 is being collected currently in the 1986 new earnings survey and will be available in October this year.

Social Security Claimants (Pre-paid Envelopes)

83. Mr. Wallace asked the Paymaster General whether he intends to restore pre-paid envelopes for use by unemployed claimants in rural areas.

Mr. Lang: I do not intend to restore pre-paid envelopes for use by unemployed claimants in rural areas to return their fortnightly claim forms. Most unemployed attend the unemployment benefit office in person each fortnight to sign on and claim unemployment benefit bearing any travelling costs involved. People living over six miles from their nearest office and some others with special travelling difficulties have the option of claiming by post instead. Since 6 April these "postal claimants" have been asked to pay the postage when returning their fortnightly claim forms. The change was made as a contribution to containing control of public expenditure and a move towards parity of treatment between postal claimants and those bearing regular travelling costs.

Sporting and Leisure Facilities

84. Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the effects of the business expansion scheme on covered sporting and leisure facilities.

Mr. Trippier: Companies providing covered sporting and leisure facilities will continue to be eligible for investment under the business expansion scheme, provided that they meet the conditions on the backing of investment by property assets. I am anxious that the scheme should continue to encourage genuine risk-bearing investments, and my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury will be monitoring the effects of the new provisions.

Pay Bargaining

86. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend asked the Paymaster General what is his policy towards methods of pay bargaining.

Mr. Lang: Other than in the limited exception of wages councils industries, I believe that the method of pay bargaining is a matter for employers and employees or their representatives to determine.

Job-finding Services

88. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Paymaster General what job-finding services are offered by his Department or the Manpower Services Commission to unemployed persons travelling as members of a commune.

Mr. Lang: The full range of assistance provided by the Manpower Services Commission is available, principally through jobcentres, to all unemployed persons alike on an equal basis. This includes providing information about jobs available locally and in other districts (including information about employers recruiting casual labour); advice on employment matters and schemes run by the Department of Employment and Manpower Services Commission; advice on and assistance with training and retraining; and normal job placing services.

Small Firms (Venture Capital)

89. Mr. Sayeed asked the Paymaster General what is the trend in venture capital investment in small firms.

Mr. Trippier: Industry sources indicate that a total of £279 million was invested by United Kingdom-based venture capital organisations in 597 United Kingdom companies in 1985. These figures represent increases of 22 per cent. and 3 per cent., respectively, over the corresponding figures for 1984. Information on the size of companies benefiting from these investments is not available although 30 per cent. of financings in 1985, representing 20 per cent. of the total amount invested, supported start-up or other early stage developments. In addition, direct investments by individuals under the business expansion scheme are providing significant amounts of equity capital for small companies.

Young People

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Paymaster General, for January, April, July and October, each year from 1974 to the latest available date, how many (a) 16 to 17-year-olds, (b) 18 to 19-year-olds and (c) 20 to 24-year-olds (i) there were in total, (ii) were recorded as unemployed, (iii) were in education, (iv) were in full-time work or self-employment, (v) were in part-time work or self employment or (vi) were in other categories, showing in each case, where possible, males and females, separately.

Mr. Lang: The full range of information requested is not available. The available labour force survey estimates for the age groups 16 to 19 and 20 to 24 years are shown in table 1.

Information on the ages of registered (up to October 1982) or claimant (since October 1982) unemployed males and females in the United Kingdom is published regularly in Employment Gazette (currently table 2.7) and is available in the Library.

Estimates of the labour market status of those aged 16 to 17 in Great Britain, derived from Department of Employment, Manpower Services Commission and Department of Education and Science sources, are shown in table 2 for the years for which they are available.

* Includes those who did not state if they worked full or part-time; and those on a Government employment scheme or, in 1979 and 1981 only, who were self employed who were not asked if their work was full or part-time.

† The definition of full-time and part-time is based on the respondent's own assessment, not on the number of hours worked.

‡ Those without a job and looking for work in the reference week, or prevented from seeking work by temporary sickness or holiday, or waiting for the results of a job application or waiting to start a job they had already obtained.

‖ Inactive students are those students not classified as in employment or unemployed. Those who reported doing paid work are classified as in employment. In 1979 and 1981 all students who said they were seeking work were classified as unemployed, but in later years those who said they were seeking work but not available to start a job because they had to complete their education were classified as inactive.

¶ Mainly for females looking after house or home, and sick and disabled.

The figures for 1985 are preliminary estimates.

¶ Mainly those in employment outside YTS. Also includes some who are seeking work but not claiming benefit (for 1983-86) or not registered for employment (prior to 1983), some of whom are neither employed nor seeking work (e.g. because of domestic responsibilities) and net errors in the other estimates.

Mr. Stern asked the Paymaster General how many additional young people have been employed as a result of the current requirement for an employer to notify the local careers office if he intends to employ a young person.

Mr. Trippier: The current requirement is for notification after employment has begun. It does not encourage employment of young people, is burdensome and little use appears to be made of the information where it is provided. The Government announced their intention to repeal the requirement in the White Paper "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers".

Labour Force Survey

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General when the next labour force survey is expected to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 16 April 1986 at columns 388-89.

Preliminary results of the 1985 labour force survey were published in the May 1986 edition of the Employment Gazette, which is available in the Library.

Radiation

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps to ensure that a dose of 500 mSv. to the lungs, breast, red bone marrow or gonads is not received by workers.

Mr. Trippier: The Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 specify a dose limit in terms of effective dose equivalent for the whole body of 50 $mSvy^{-1}$ and a dose limit for individual organs in terms of dose equivalent of 500 $mSvy^{-1}$.

Both requirements must be met. In practice, one or other will be limiting; whichever limit is achieved first will set the ceiling. In the case of irradiation of lungs, breast, bone marrow or gonads singly, the overriding limit will be the whole body effective dose equivalent limit of 50 mSv which will be reached before the individual organs mentioned receive 500 mSv.

Magnox Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Paymaster General if he will increase the resources available for assessing the safety of Magnox nuclear reactors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Decisions on the allocation of resources to particular areas of work are a matter for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive subject to the limits set by the Government on their total salary expenditure and manpowr. The safety of Magnox nuclear reactors is kept under constant review by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General whether he will make a statement on the operation and effect of the code of practice of the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Mr. Lang: Since the code came into operation only on 30 April 1985, it is too early to assess its effect. The code was, however, warmly welcomed by the Government, CBI and TUC, and over 60,000 copies have now been sold. I understand that the EOC has had a number of requests from firms and other employing organisations for help in preparing and implementing equal opportunities policies as a result of the code.

Highfields Task Force

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General if the Highfields task force is receiving the full co-operation of Leicester city council and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 13]: I would prefer that the Highfields task force should work in close co-operation with Leicester city council. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and I have both held separate meetings with the council to explain our plans and seek its assistance with them. I have to say we both encountered a certain amount of hostility from some councillors. I very much hope therefore that the council, which is still considering its relationship with the task force, will now give the initiative its full support so that the task force and the city council can start working together to tackle the urgent problems in Highfields.

Circular 109/252 (School Leavers)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General when circular 109/252 was issued; when it was withdrawn; and how many changes in the rules relating to claims from school leavers occurred between those two dates;

(2) if he will investigate the circumstances in which a telex was sent to local unemployment benefit offices referring to circular 109/252 which was three years old and which contained incorrect information about entitlement to benefits; and if he will make a statement.

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that those young people who hav been discouraged from claiming supplementary benefit by staff in local unemployment benefit offices on the basis of the erroneous information contained in circular 109/252 are now encouraged to make a claim.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 14]: Circular 109/252 was issued on 4 February 1983 and withdrawn on 11 June 1986. There were no actual changes to the rules relating to claims from school leavers between those dates. However, following a decision on appeal to a tribunal of commissioners, revised guidance was issued to UBOs in April 1985 and February 1986; this guidance related to claims made by Easter school leavers.

A telex was issued to UBOs on 30 May 1986 as a result of queries from UBOs which were faced with large volumes of school leaver claims.

To dispel any confusion, a further telex was issued on 11 June 1986 clarifying the position for mid-summer term school leavers and cancelling circular 109/252. The telex reaffirmed the guidance previously given — that, as a general rule, people who leave school mid-way through the summer term are not entitled to supplementary benefit until the first Monday in September. UBOs have been reminded throughout that any young person wishing to make a claim should not be discouraged from doing so.

Occupational Medicine and Hygiene Laboratories (Sheffield)

Mr. Dobson asked the Paymaster General what is the estimated cost of relocating in Sheffield the occupational medicine and hygiene laboratories of the Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 15]: It is estimated that the capital cost of relocating those parts of the occupational medicine and hygiene laboratories at present situated at Cricklewood, and a small number of Health and Safety Executive headquarters staff in Sheffield, to a new site adjacent to the laboratories' existing Sheffield premises would be about £6·4 million. The cost of transferring staff, equipment and stores would be about a further £900,000.

Technical and Vocational Initiative (Batley and Spen)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General what technical and vocational initiative proposals he has approved for the Batley and Spen constituency.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 15-16]: A proposal for a technical and vocational education initiative project from Kirklees education authority was approved to start in autumn 1984, but was subsequently withdrawn by the local authority before negotiations were completed.

No further proposals have been received.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces (Racial Discrimination)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many racial discrimination complaints from any of the branches of the armed forces have been investigated under the existing redress of grievance procedures.

Mr. Freeman: Since the introduction of the Race Relations Act 1976 there have been no complaints made and investigated under the redress of grievance procedures.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the current level of provision for mentally handicapped adults in the Dungannon area;

(2) what is the level and nature of provision for mentally handicapped adults in each local government district in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available in the form requested. The following table gives the available information in respect of specialist health and personal social services provision for mentally handicapped adults in the Health and Social Services Boards' units of management:

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration has been given to the provision of a day service in Dungannon for mentally handicapped adults.

Mr. Needham: There are 50 day care places available for mentally handicapped adults at the Sperrinview centre, Dungannon. At present there are no plans to provide additional day care places at Dungannon.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many mentally handicapped adults there are in each local government district in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Information is not available in the form requested. Details of the number of mentally handicapped adults in contact with the social services departments of the Health and Social Services Boards are set out in the following table.

RUC Stations (Visits)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many requests to visit Royal Ulster Constabulary stations have been referred to the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, in accordance with standing instructions, for the latest availabe 12-month period, from (a) Ministers of the Crown, (b) hon. and right hon. Members, (c) members of the Northern Ireland Assembly, (d) councillors and (e) other dignatories; how many have been refused; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Requests for visits to Royal Ulster Constabulary stations are a matter for the Chief Constable who has to take into accont a number of factors, not least the operational commitments of the force.

Dog Licences

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what lessons have been learnt from the trial period of dog licences at £5 per annum introduced in 1985.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, 9 June 1986, c. 84]: Since the incidence of dog nuisance was more acute in Northern Ireland than in Great Britain, the introduction of this order has been welcomed as a positive move in lessening the problem.

Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state, in relation to catering equipment in the corridor kitchen of the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast, (a) where the equipment, which was returned eventually, was used by the board and where it was stored before use, (b) which firm or firms supplied catering equipment to the Royal Group, (c) when the catering equipment was to be used for the supply of food to day centres in north and west Belfast removed from use, (d) what was the cost of the equipment, its age and when it was removed from use and (e) subsequent to the invitation of tenders on 17 May 1984, to whom they were circulated and in what papers.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 44]: These are matters which are within the day-to-day management responsibility of the Eastern Health and Social Services Board. However, I understand that the equipment was stored in the Royal Victoria hospital and then transferred to Musgrave park hospital and Belfast city hospital. Non-usable items were sold as part of a general consignment of scrap.

The following firms have supplied catering equipment to the Royal Group since 1978.

Berkel Ltd.
J. N. Fulton
Hobart Manufacturing
J. Stotts
Stamex Limited
Hoylake
Gilmore
Mulcahy Group
Stott Benham
Stephens Catering
Calvert Electric
Universal Business Machines
A-Z Refrigeration
Caterware
Edmunds Catering
Millbrook Catering
A-Z Tec Refrigeration
Crypto Peerless
HTI Services
Catering Equipment Engineers

No catering equipment in the corridor kitchen was to be used exclusively for the supply of food to day centres in north and west Belfast.

The replaced equipment was in excess of 12 years old and its original cost is not readily available. The replacement cost was £55,741 (excluding VAT). It was removed from use in December 1984.

Invitations to tender were not issued on 17 May 1984. Tenders were invited from the following firms on 17 April 1984:

Stephens Catering
Mulcahy Group
Grundy (Calvert Electric)

As these were the only firms in Northern Ireland capable of supplying the equipment concerned, invitations to tender were not advertised in the press.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration Rules

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish any information taken into consideration by his Department in the preparation of the "Statement of Changes in the Immigration Rules", HC503, concerning households originating from (a) the old Commonwealth, (b) the new Commonwealth and (c) the European Community and accepted as homeless and in priority need of accommodation by (i) Tower Hamlets London borough council and (ii) other local authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Waddington: The amendments that the Government made last summer in the "Statement of Changes in the Immigration Rules" (HC503), clarifying and strengthening the maintenance and accommodation requirements are designed to provide better safeguard for public funds. In making these changes, the Government were conscious of the additional demands that newcomers can place upon a variety of scarce resources, including public housing. In particular, as I stated in the debate in the House on 23 July 1985, at column 954, we had in mind the cost to the London borough of Tower Hamlets of maintaining families in bed and breakfast accommodation.

Bill of Rights

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received in favour of a Bill of Rights.

Mr. Mellor: Since the beginning of 1985, 11 representations in favour of a Bill of Rights, most advocating the incorporation of the provision of the European Convention on Human Rights, have been received.

Representation of the People Act 1985

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to inform United Kingdom citizens abroad about the Representation of the People Act 1985.

Mr. Mellor: A major publicity campaign will be mounted following the approval of the Representation of the People Regulations 1986 which are now before Parliament. Advertisements will be placed in newspapers in countries where there are large numbers of Britons, in overseas editions of United Kingdom newspapers, and in other publications read by Britons living abroad. Copies of the declaration form to be used by overseas electors, and an explanatory leaflet will be available at consular offices and diplomatic missions and from electoral registration officers; copies have also been offered to the political parties. Many other publicity activities will be initiated, including an interview which will be made available to foreign radio stations. The BBC World Service also plans to give coverage.

Cigarettes (Advertising)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the ban on advertising of cigarettes on television is implemented.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In May 1965, the Government issued a direction to the ITA, the forerunner of the IBA, banning the broadcast advertising of cigarettes and cigarette tobacco. This direction remains in force under section 8(5) of the Broadcasting Act 1981. It is for the IBA to ensure that the independent programme companies comply with the direction.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will take steps to co-ordinate and tighten the existing guidelines operated by each police force in relation to access to (a) police computers generally and (b) the police national computer; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he proposes to implement the guidelines proposed in paragraph 38 of the report by the Police Complaints Authority on the police national computer as the basis for instructions to police forces regarding practices and procedures in relation to the national computer; if he will set a time scale for chief officers of police to comply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Access to the computer systems in operation in individual police forces is a matter for the chief officer concerned. The Association of Chief Police Officers has established a working party on data protection which will be issuing recommendations to chief officers covering the use, access, security and disclosure of information held on police computer systems.

As regards the police national computer, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on Wednesday, 18 June at columns 540-41.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he intends to take to seek to prevent the growing incidence of drug abuse in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The many measures we are taking are set out in "Tackling Drug Misuse: a summary of the Government's strategy" which we sent to hon. Members at the end of March. Our aim is to prevent drug misuse wherever it may occur, whether in rural areas or elsewhere.

Police Property

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many flats and houses are owned by (a) the Metropolitan police and (b) other police forces in England and Wales; and how many in each category are currently occupied.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The stock of houses and flats held in 1985, the latest date for which information is available, was as follows:

	Total Stock	Occupied	For Sale‡
Metropolitan Police*	3,703	2,796	638
Other police forces in England and Wales†	14,810	12,378	992

* As at 31st December 1985.
‡ Identified as surplus to requirements and sanctioned for sale.

Jurors

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to reform the method of random selection of jurors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Proposals affecting the jury system were canvassed in the White Paper on plans for criminal justice legislation. Decisions on these will be taken in the light of comments received. We have no other plans for change.

Prison Department Housing (Hammersmith)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the number of one, two, three and four-bedroom flats or houses owned by the Prison Department in Hammersmith; and how many in each category are currently occupied.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

Flats/houses	Number owned	Occupied
One bedroom	—	—
Two bedroom	—	—
Three bedroom	*37	24
Four bedroom	3	2

* 12 unfit for occupation because of structural defects.

Mrs. Eva Stein

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to be able to grant an entry visa to Mrs. Eva Stein, formerly of 40 Garden Road, Orchards, Johannesburg, reference No. EC/STE/E, who applied to the British consulate in Johannesburg to emigrate to England in January of the current year.

Mr. Waddington: Mrs. Stein's application was received in the Home Office on 2 June. We have decided that entry clearance should be granted, and the entry clearance officer in Johannesburg will be instructed accordingly in the course of the next few days.

Heysel Stadium, Brussels

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has about the home towns of those British citizens in respect of whom the Belgian authorities have made requests for extradition in connection with the events at the Heysel stadium, Brussels in May 1985;

(2) in respect of how many British citizens requests for extradition have been made by the Belgian authorities in connection with the events at the Heysel stadium, Brussels in May 1985.

Mr. Mellor: We have not yet received any such requests.

Broadwater Farm Estate, Tottenham

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to arrange for the report commissioned by the Metropolitan police on police actions during the events at the Broadwater Farm Estate, Tottenham in 1985, to be circulated to all police stations in the Metropolitan police area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner that a report on the outcome of his public order review will be circulated to all divisional stations shortly.

Immigration

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there has been any change in the panel of three advisers appointed to consider representations from persons required to leave the country on security or political grounds, who have no right of appeal under the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. Hurd: I intend to retain the presently constituted panel, all of whom have agreed to reappointment for a further term of three years with effect from 8 August 1986. The panel comprises the right hon. Lord Justice Lloyd as chairman with Mr. David Neve and the right hon. Sir Patrick Nairne, GCB, MC, MA as the other members. Sir John Garlick, KCB and Mr. Edward Hewlett are the reserve members.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers of the Deaf

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what evidence he satisfied himself as to the expected adequacy of supply of teachers of the deaf following the implementation of the ACSET proposals.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend took particular account of the views of ACSET and of HMI.

Hull (Secondary Schools)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will announce his decision on the allocation of pupils proposals of Humberside education committee for secondary schools in the Hull education division.

Mr. Dunn: These proposals will not now come to my right hon. Friend for decision. The Humberside education committee decided on 18 June 1986 to withdraw the proposals and commence consultations with a view to republication. My right hon. Friend will in due course consider the republished proposals which will be for implementation in September 1987.

WALES

Ruthin-Mold Road (Investigation)

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Wales, in view of the further serious accident on the Ton-yr-Unto bend, on the Ruthin-Mold road, whether the detailed investigation into the long-term solution has now been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Investigations into a long term solution to the problems posed by the Tan-yr-Unto bend are proceeding as rapidly as possible. It is important to identify the most sensible solution but I assure my hon. Friend that I shall make a further announcement as soon as I can. In the meantime we are doing all possible to improve the safety of the existing road: a double safety barrier, an earth bund and an arrestor bed for runaway vehicles are being constructed at the bend. Completion of these measures is expected by the end of July.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of secondary schools in Wales are grammar schools; and what were the comparable figures for 1979, 1970 and 1960, respectively.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Grammar schools in Wales as a percentage of all maintained secondary schools

January	Percentage
1979	2·9
1970	19·4
1960	28·6

Dogs

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now state his proposals on continuation or re-issue of dog licences, the appropriate level of such licences, and the provision of powers to local authorities to control the pollution of pavements by dogs.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Future arrangements for dog licensing and associated matters remain under consideration. We will announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

Coach Parking (London)

94. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what action he plans to take to improve tourist coach parking facilities in London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's report "Tourist Coaches in London" was published in March.

The report's main proposals include better information, a non-cash payment scheme using magnetic cards (coachcard), more on-street spaces near tourist attractions, more off-street spaces, coach couriers to give advice on-street about parking facilities and more effective enforcement. A number of these proposals are being tried out this summer.

Details of the proposals were announced last week. A copy of the announcement has been placed in the Library of the House.

Road Safety

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail what discussions he is having with family organisations on how best to combat road accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Earlier this year, I invited Family Forum and affiliated organisations of its choice to a discussion of how this part of the voluntary movement could become more closely involved in road safety activity. Representatives of the Child Accident Prevention Trust, the Children's Society, the National Childbirth Trust and the National Childminding Association also attended. Since then I have had various formal and informal contacts with Family Forum and other voluntary bodies.

Such organisations and their members have an important part to play in helping to reduce the toll of deaths and injuries — and their tragic social and economic consequences — by providing families throughout the life cycle with practical support, information and publicity on road safety issues. The Department and others with statutory road safety responsibilities wish to encourage their efforts and would welcome similar support and recognition of them from the media and other influential parts of the community.

Road Haulage (Maintenance and Safety)

Mr. Snape asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the overall standard of maintenance and safety within the road haulage industry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The failure rate at the annual heavy goods vehicle test remains too high at nearly 23 per cent. On average over 18 per cent. of vehicles inspected at the roadside are issued with prohibitions.

British Rail (Locomotives and Coaches)

Mr. Snape asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the statement made by his predecessor on British Rail Engineering on 20th May, Official Report, column 188, if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the current figures for British Rail locomotive and coaching availability and (b) the British Rail locomotive and coaching availability targets under the new manufacturing and maintenance policy.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for BRB management to decide what rolling stock availability it requires to provide its services. I do not have the information requested.

British Rail (Performance)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 17 June, if he will take steps to ensure that British Rail furnishes his Department with information relating to train punctuality for the larger intermediate stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The detailed monitoring of punctuality is a matter of management of the Railways Board.

British Rail

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 17 June, what is the definition of sector in the context of sector-wide standards set for British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: The sectors referred to are the three sectors — Inter City, London and south-east (recently renamed Network South-East) and provincial — which since 1982 have made up the Railways Board's passenger business. In the case of Inter City and Network South-East, the board has set punctuality standards which apply to the sector as a whole. In the case of provincial, because of the diverse nature of the services which make up the sector, separate punctuality standards apply for particular service groups.

M40 (Holton Interchange)

Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what measures his Department proposes to take to ensure that the new interchange at Holton will not be used by motorway traffic when the northern section of the M40 is open to traffic and while the southern section is still under construction;

(2) what effect he estimates his Department's proposals to construct a new interchange at Holton will have on the number of vehicles using the B4027 through the villages of Forest Hill, Stanton St. John and Islip.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to have the northern and southern sections of the M40 extension ready for use at about the same time. The object of proposals to be published shortly is to improve the safety of the existing junction of the B4027 with the A40. The restriction and volume of traffic using the B4027 are matters for the highway authority, Oxfordshire county council, which would have the right to object to our proposals.

Petersfield-Liphook Bypass

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Transport when a decision is expected on the Petersfield-Liphook bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I hope to make an announcement by the autumn.

Drivers' Hours

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations his Department has received from the Transport and General Workers Union concerning changes in the drivers' hours and rest period regulations; what reply has been sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall answer this question shortly.

ENVIRONMENT

Waste Disposal Authorities (Pollution)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been taken out against waste disposal authorities for polluting rivers and streams for each year since 1980.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not held centrally. Water authorities are responsible for controlling pollution of rivers and streams and for taking any necessary enforcement action, although it is also open to individuals to institute proceedings.

Sewerage

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how often sewage sludge dumped from pipelines is sampled for analysis; and on how many occasions that samples have been taken they have exceeded the permitted levels for (a) list I substances and (b) list II substances.

Mrs. Rumbold: Sampling frequencies of discharges from water authority sewage treatment works vary considerably according to the size of the works and the nature of the receiving matters. Public registers maintained by each water authority contain details for individual discharges of the consents to discharge and the samples taken.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how much sewage is disposed of into the Mersey estuary from (a) pipelines and (b) ships.

Mrs. Rumbold: Discharges to the Mersey estuary from land-based outfalls are controlled by the North-West water authority. Information about the discharges is not held centrally, but is available from the public register maintained by that authority.

Discharges from ships are controlled by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. However, I understand that there are no authorisations for the disposal of sewage from ships into the Mersey estuary.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to (a) how many and (b) what percentage of houses in (i) the public and (ii) the private sector in each local housing authority area are now empty.

Sir George Young: The latest available information is from the local authorities' housing investment programme returns for 1 April 1985. The figures are:

Vacant dwellings as a per cent. of all dwellings at 1 April 1985 (HIP 1)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on (a) how many and (b) what percentage of homes in (i) the public and (ii) the private sectors in England and Wales are now empty.

Sir George Young: The latest available information for England is from the local authorities' housing investment programme returns for April 1985 and it was given in answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 19 December 1985 at column 263. For information on housing in Wales, I refer the hon. and learned Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Inner Area Programme (Leicester)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to assume greater central control over the operation of the inner area programme; if he will detail the amount to be given to Leicester under the programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: All partnership and programme authority inner area programmes are subject to approval by Ministers; there are no plans to change these arrangements. The inner area programme allocation for Leicester for 1986-87 is £5·43 million.

North Pennines

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on the inspector's report on the public inquiry into the proposed north Pennines area of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is hoped to announce the decision during the summer.

Brookwood Lye (Planning Inquiry)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to announce his decision on the Brookwood Lye planning inquiry.

Mr. Tracey: Shortly.

Model Water Byelaws

Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the new model water byelaws will be published; and when he expects water undertakers to make new byelaws.

Mr. John Patten: The new model water byelaws are being published today by Her Majesty's Stationery Office on behalf of my Department, the Welsh Office and the Scottish development department. I am placing copies in the Library.

The new model will provide the basis for byelaws made by the 50 separate water undertakers in England, Wales and Scotland aimed at preventing waste, misuse and contamination in consumers' water installations. In conjunction with the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland I am consulting the water undertakers with a view to the introduction of new water byelaws based on the model in a co-ordinated national exercise during 1987.

Milton Keynes

Mr. Benyon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, following the reviews of progress of development at Milton Keynes, he is now able to define a more precise target for the winding up of the development corporation.

Mr. Tracey: On 4 February 1981, my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for the Environment indicated that the target date for winding up Milton Keynes development corporation, along with a number of other new town development corporations, should be the late 1980's. We have been reviewing that conclusion.

We are impressed by the very high rates of growth the development corporation has achieved in both housing and employment investment in recent years. We would like these rates to be maintained. We also recognise the corporation's success in attracting private investment and wish to see its continuing efforts to widen the involvement of the private sector.

Nevertheless, key tasks remain for the corporation, such as promoting the further development of central Milton Keynes and in opening up for development the outer parts of the designated area of the new town, for which the special powers and concentration of effort which a development corporation brings are desirable. We will also wish to ensure that the considerable opportunities for further growth and investment in Milton Keynes are fully safeguarded.

In the light of these considerations my right hon. Friend has decided to set 1 April 1992 as the target date for winding up Milton Keynes development corporation. The final decision and formal order will be made in the usual way after further consultations nearer the date.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

St. Stephen's House (Photocopying)

Mr. Cohen asked the Lord Privy Seal (1) if he will take steps to ensure that the photocopying facilities in St. Stephen's house are restored to full working order as soon as possible; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take steps to provide more modern photocopying facilities at St. Stephen's house; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I understand that there have been a small number of serviceability problems with the copying machines on the first floor of St. Stephen's house and I would be grateful if the hon. Member could write to me if he has any specific points to make. I have, in any event, asked the Serjeant at Arms to get in touch with him direct about the provision of copying machines in St. Stephen's house.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Southern Africa (Job Dependency)

92. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of British jobs which depend directly or indirectly on the maintenance of trading relationships with southern Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: No estimate has been made of the number of jobs dependent on the maintenance of trading links with the whole of the southern African region. However, given the current levels of trade with South Africa, our best estimate is that the equivalent of 120,000 United Kingdom jobs may be involved in the export of goods and services to that country. If trade is disrupted with adjoining states also, this total would be further increased.

Blank Audio Tapes

Mr. Hubbard-Miles asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has held with the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany on the operation of a levy on blank audio tapes in that country; and the problems they have encountered.

Mr. Pattie: Although the Federal Republic of Germany has had a levy on recording equipment since 1965, a levy on blank audio and video tape was introduced only in 1985. I have not formally consulted the German Government on how well these relatively new schemes are operating but contacts between my officials and their German counterparts have not identified any serious problems.

Mr. Hubbard-Miles asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of home taping on blank audio cassette tapes of more than 35 minutes duration is for the purpose of time shifting.

Mr. Pattie: Time-shifting is an activity associated with recording from television. We have received no evidence that recording from radio for time-shift purposes, rather than for the purpose of retention and repeated play-back, is a significant activity.

Trade Names

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of trade names registered at 31 December 1985.

Mr. Pattie: Approximately 260,000 trade marks were registered at 31 December 1985.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state (a) the number of new trade names registered during 1985, (b) the number of trade name registrations renewed during 1985, and (c) the number of trade name registrations which expired and were not renewed during 1985.

Mr. Pattie: The number of new marks registered in 1985 was 16,154 and the number of registrations renewed was 14,098. A total of 8,578 registrations expired and were not renewed during 1985.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the service offered by the trade marks branch of the Patent Office of supplying to certain public libraries paper copies of trade names submitted for registration was introduced; when this service was discontinued; why it was discontinued; and which public libraries had been receiving those lists of trade names and their owners.

Mr. Pattie: The Trade Marks Registry started to provide certain public libraries with paper index slips of marks in word form (not pictorial marks) in 1958. The service was discontinued in 1980 because it could not be justified against the constraints on Patent Office resources. The list of public libraries which had been receiving the index slips is as follows:

Libraries to receive word mark index slips

1. Aberdeen City Library
2. Central Library, Belfast
3. Birmingham Reference Library
4. Dublin Public Library
5. Glasgow Commercial Library
6. Hatfield Polytechnic Library
7. Central Library, Hull
8. Central Library, Leeds
9. Central Library, Liverpool
10. City Business Library, London
11. Central Library, Manchester
12. County Library, Nottingham
13. Sheffield City Library
14. Central Library, Wolverhampton

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if all registered trade names are now held on computer; and if it is technically possible to print out these trade names on microfiche.

Mr. Pattie: All registered trade marks are now held on computer. It would be technically possible after a further development programme to print out details of the registrations on microfiche.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will produce on microfiche, a list of the trade names on the register, with the name and address of the owners, the date of the first registration, and the registration number; if he will ensure that it is regularly updated, in a way similar to the updates provided for the microfiche directory of companies; and if he will make it his policy to sell this information at a reasonable price to libraries and others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: I do not plan to produce this information on microfiche. The Government have announced that the Patent Office is to be established as a non-departmental public body. I think it right that the new office should be left free to decide what services it can provide within its general remit to promote awareness of intellectual property and to commercialise its resources and expertise for the benefit of industry and commerce.

Trade Marks Register

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any commercial agents for trade marks have been supplied with, or are being supplied with, information in an electronic form from the trade marks register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The Patent Office currently has non-exclusive contracts with three commercial organisations in the field of information supply: Pergamon, Compumark, and Computer Patent Annuities. The contracts are on a fully commercial basis. They involve the delivery by the Patent Office of a full list of trade marks with period amendments to keep it up to date. The information is supplied on magnetic tape.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy towards providing access to the information held on the register of trade marks about trade names and the identity and location of their owner.

Mr. Pattie: It is official policy to encourage access to information on the register of trade marks. That information is presently supplied to commercial organisations which make it available through a subscriber service. Additionally, a full set of indices is made available for public use at the Trade Marks Registry and the register is open to public inspection.

Uranium

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to the answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 397, he will take steps to collect information about the amount of uranium, by country of procurement imported for civil nuclear use in the United Kingdom for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Statistics in trade in uranium are not available for publication for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

South Africa

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to ensure implementation of the embargo on the importation of arms and armaments from South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: All open individual import licences for arms and ammunition, which are issued only to registered firearms dealers, have been endorsed to the effect that they are no longer valid for imports originating in the Republic of South Africa. Applications for specific import licences must be made for each proposed importation. No arms or armaments are procured from South Africa for the armed forces.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 569, whether the target wage level for British firms operating in South Africa is the minimum living level plus 50 per cent. or plus 30 per cent. as calculated by the University of South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Milcom Electronics UK Ltd.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's investigations into the case of Milcom Electronics UK Ltd. in the context of the arms embargo on South Africa;

(2) what steps have been taken to enforce the embargo on the import of arms from South Africa since the discussions between his Department and Milcom Electronics UK Ltd.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Semi-Arid Tropics (Research)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester South, on 16 June, Official Report, column 379, he will list in the Official Report the 16 research and development schemes at British institutions which support the International Crop Research Institute for Semi-Arid Tropics research programme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Terrorism

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries which have been designated as parties to the European convention on the suppression of terrorism under section 8 of the Suppression of Terrorism Act 1978, with the dates on which each country ratified the convention; and what other countries have signed the convention but have not ratified it.

Mr. Eggar: The following represents the latest position of adherence to the European convention on the suppression of terrorism:

Country	Signed	Ratified
United Kingdom	27 January 1977	24 July 1978
Austria	27 January 1977	11 August 1977

Liechtenstein*	22 January 1979	13 June 1979

* Spain, Italy and Liechtenstein are shortly to be designated under Section 8 of the Suppression of Terrorism Act 1978. All other countries listed above are already designated.

France, Greece and Republic of Ireland have signed but not ratified the European convention on the suppression of terrorism. Malta has neither signed nor ratified the convention.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Union

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards a federal or quasi-federal interpretation of the concept of the European union.

Mrs. Chalker: As my right hon. and learned Friend told the House on 23 April the Government's policy is reflected in the references to European union in the Single European Act, which invoke practical steps towards the unity essential to Europe if it is to maintain and enhance its economic and political position in the world.

Heysel Stadium, Brussels

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the number of Italian citizens whose extradition has been sought by the Belgian authorities in connection with the deaths at the Heysel stadium, Brussels in May 1985.

Mr. Eggar: I have no information on this matter, which is primarily one for the Belgian and Italian authorities.

South Africa

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 569, if he will state exactly what constituted the misquote in the European Economic Community code of conduct of European firms operating in South Africa; if he will further state if this misquote resulted from a mistranslation; whether the European Economic Community Foreign Ministers themselves misquoted the previous code; on what date he first realised there was a misquote; which departments have issued the document with the misquote; what steps are being taken to trace these documents; whether any incorrect codes have been issued to companies trading in South Africa; and if the misquote is being issued in documents by our European Economic Community partners.

Mrs. Chalker: The text of the new code of conduct issued by Ministers in Brussels on 19 November 1985 was issued as a press release by the Presidency. Unfortunately, in the footnote to the section on pay and wage structures the press release misquoted the 1977 code. The error was discovered soon afterwards and has been corrected. The new code will be published as a White Paper in due course.

Krugerrands

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the gap in time between the announcement of the decision to ban krugerrands and the implementation of it.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend announced the decision to introduce a ban on imports of all gold coins from South Africa in a written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 23 May. The ban came into effect at midnight the same day.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Radiation

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if members of the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment have been required to sign declarations under the Official Secrets Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Pavitt) on 16 May at columns 587-88.

Babies (Clinical Research)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) of 12 June, what evidence he has as to the incidence of breaches of or infringement against the codes of practice relating to clinical research practised on sick or premature babies without parental consent or knowledge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We are aware of the recent report of the working group of the Institute of Medical Ethics on medical research on children. I understand that the study was not set up because the institute had reason to believe that unethical or harmful research was being undertaken into children in the United Kingdom. However, the report did suggest that certain breaches of existing codes of practice may be taking place, but no direct evidence has been brought to my attention. We will take the working group's report into account in considering the need for renewed departmental guidance on this subject.

Childhood Dysfunction

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what training the teaching staff in teaching hospitals have in diagnosing early childhood dysfunction.

Mr. Whitney: The paediatric content of the post-graduate training of teaching staff in teaching hospitals is a matter for the hospitals and the royal colleges.

National Radiological Protection Board

Mr. Boulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to increase the level of financial support to the National Radiological Protection Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The National Radiological Protection Board's grant from this Department is agreed annually after considering the board's expenditure proposals and the extent to which these will be funded from income from technical services provided or contract research undertaken. We have not yet received the board's proposals for 1987-88.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated impact on the standards of living of those claiming social security benefit of the Government's proposals to make such recipients of benefits pay 20 per cent. of their rates.

Mr. Newton: It is not sensibly possible to generalise in the way implied by my hon. Friend's question, since this proposal is part of a wider pattern of changes which, being designed to produce a fairer and better targeted benefit structure, necessarily varies in its effects on different individuals and groups. The technical annex to the White Paper "Reform of Social Security" does, however, contain tables showing, on certain illustrative assumptions about benefit rates and other matters, the possible overall effect of the proposals both with and without a 20 per cent. contribution to domestic rates.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Merseyside)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide details of the waiting list for each specialty for every hospital on Merseyside.

Mr. Whitney: The number of persons awaiting admission to each specialty at each of the hospitals in the Liverpool, St. Helens and Knowsley, Southport and Formby, South Sefton and Wirral district health authorities is given in the table.

AIDS

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recommendation he has received from his Department's acquired immune deficiency syndrome working party on the provision of needles and syringes to drug misusers.

Mr. Hayhoe: The expert advisory group on AIDS is still considering this matter and has yet to make recommendations.

Road Accidents (Emergency Treatment Fee)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to introduce legislation to abolish the road traffic accident emergency treatment fee.

Mr. Whitney: The Government intend to introduce legislation to abolish the emergency treatment fee payable to health authorities under section 155 of the Road Traffic Act 1972 at the earliest convenient opportunity.

Special Payments (Loans)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance is given by local officers of his Department to claimants seeking special needs or emergency payments regarding approaches to loan companies; what advice is given in this context as to the availability of low interest loans from reputable money lenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: People who do not qualify for supplementary benefit in the normal way can be considered for urgent needs payments under the Supplementary Benefit (Urgent Cases) Regulations. In these circumstances, they are asked whether they already have credit or loan facilities available.

However, the Department does not expect claimants to negotiate new commercial loan facilities in any circumstances and therefore does not give guidance about making approaches to loan companies or money lenders.

Domestic Assistance Addition

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of persons (a) receiving the domestic assistance addition and the average weekly payment and (b) receiving the domestic assistance addition for the travelling expenses incurred by a caring relative and the average weekly payment for each of the past five years.

Mr. Major: The information to 1984 (the latest available date) is as follows:

	Total number of domestic assistance additions (thousands)	Average weekly amount £
1980	4	1·37
1981	5	2·51
1982	4	3·83
†1984	1	3·92

* These amounts do not take account of the effect of the available scale margin in relevant cases so that the average amount of benefit actually received would be somewhat lower than shown.

Source: Annual statistical inquiries.

No information is available about the number and amounts included within the domestic assistance additions in respect of the travelling expenses incurred by a caring relative.

NHS (Resources)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the growth in real terms in the amount of resources devoted to the National Health Service and available for patient care in 1984-85 in absolute and percentage terms, taking account of demographic factors and the impact on costs of technological advances.

Mr. Hayhoe: Total expenditure on the National Health Service in 1984-85 increased by 2·8 per cent. (£360 million) in real terms of which 1·4 per cent. (£180 million) was spent on pay and price increases, leaving the remaining 1·4 per cent. available for services. The table shows the increase in resources from higher spending and cost improvement available to the Hospital and Community Health Service (HCHS) in 1984-85 and estimated demographic pressure. It is not possible accurately to measure the effect of technological change on costs. It is not possible to provide similar data for the National Health Service as a whole.

These figures do not fully reflect the significant increases in patient care which took place. In 1984-85 health authorities achieved cost improvement programmes of over £100 million (equivalent to 1·1 per cent. of revenue resources). In 1984 the number of in-patient cases rose by 159,000 (2·6 per cent.), day cases by 90,000 (11 per cent.) and out-patient and accident and emergency attendances by 690,000 (1·4 per cent.). Overall, services to patients increased by 3 per cent. more than sufficient to meet demographic pressure and to take advantage of the opportunities offered by medical progress.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of gross national product was devoted to expenditure on the National Health Service in each year since 1981; what equivalent information he has about other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries; and to what factors he attributes any difference between the figures for the United Kingdom and the average for the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Patients (Statistics)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the change in (a) the number of in-patients dealt with by medical and dental staff and (b) the number of out-patients treated in the period from 1975 to 1984; and to what factors he attributes the trends shown by the figures.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the precise information he seeks. Information on individual patients is not available centrally. The relevant available statistics are given in the table. The figures show a rise in the numbers of cases treated, reflecting the more intensive use of beds and greater use of day case treatment. The figures for 1975 and 1982 were affected by the industrial action in the Health Service.

Research Grants

Mr. Dorrell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his plans for the Department's small grant scheme for processing spontaneous applications for research grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Costs of the small grants scheme have risen from £207,000 in 1983-84 to an expected £340,000 this year and thus form a growing proportion of the Department's total research budget. This has had the inevitable effect of reducing the opportunities for developing the main commissioned research programme in the priority areas. In order, therefore, to increase the emphasis that is placed on these priority projects, no new applications to the small grants scheme are currently being considered. A decision on the future of the scheme will be made when the new chief scientist is appointed.

Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the housing schemes funded by the Housing Corporation in each year since 1980 have been for the (a) adult mentally ill and (b) adult mentally handicapped.

Sir George Young: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that the information on Housing Corporation funded schemes since 1980 is not available in the form requested and could not be obtained other than at disproportionate cost. An analysis of fair rent schemes based on evidence provided by housing associations in 1984 was, however, published in the Housing Corporation's corporate plan 1985. This showed that 3 per cent. of the people housed by associations were mentaly ill and a further 3 per cent. mentally handicapped.

North-Western RHA (Computers)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with the North Western regional health authority concerning the DHSS audit report and the authority's conduct in relation to the procurement and development of the integrated personnel system and the patient administration system computers.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986]: The audit report has been considered by the authority which has now submitted its formal written comments. These will now be considered by the Department.

Cancer (West Cumbria)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress in implementing recommendations numbered 5 to 7 of the report of the advisory group, chaired by Sir Douglas Black, on the incidence of cancer in West Cumbria.

Mr. Whitney: We are advised that the position in respect of these recommendations is as follows.

Recommendation 5

Following extensive consultation between all involved United Kingdom Departments, Ministers have agreed in principle to the funding of a unit to carry out the work recommended by the advisory group. Provisional arrangements have been made on the siting and funding of this unit. As soon as these are confirmed I will inform the House.

Recommendations 6 and 7

The Medical Research Council has recently produced an interim report for the Department in response to our request last year. This is now being considered.

Work on the direct measurement of radionuclides in post-mortem tissues from the northern region is being undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board in collaboration with local clinicians and pathologists. The board also has an experimental programme to investigate factors that may affect gastro-intestinal absorption.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has contracted for studies using a mobile whole body monitor to provide information on the levels of gamma emitters in members of the population in the northern region and throughout the United Kingdom. He is also sponsoring work to identify the presence of radionuclides in household dust. This study was started prior to the publication of the Black report, is continuing and will provide the information necessary to assess the radiological impact of this possible exposure route. This work is a more extensive follow-up of a pilot study carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board, the results of which were published.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has carried out studies into the ingestion of plutonium and americium by adults in West Cumbria and elsewhere through the consumption of shellfish from the Sellafield area; the results have been published. He has, in addition, established a comprehensive monitoring programme for radioactivity in food and agriculture which extends to the terrestrial environment the same sort of coverage as already exists for the marine environment.

EMPLOYMENT

EC (Labour and Social Affairs Council)

Mr. Forman asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the European Community Labour and Social Affairs Council he'd in Luxembourg on 5 June.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented the United Kingdom at this Council. The Council agreed the directive on equal treatment in occupational social security schemes, the recommendation on the employment of the disabled and the resolution on the promotion of equal opportunities for women. A new joint United Kingdom, Irish and Italian paper on the labour market was tabled for discussion and welcomed by the Council.

The agreement on the directive for equal treatment between men and women in employers' pensions or sick pay schemes is a major step forward in giving women valuable financial security on terms which are fair in comparison with those available to men. It will prohibit discrimination between men and women in the conditions of membership of schemes, in the level of contributions and subject to certain exceptions in the level and type of benefit. The United Kingdom Government wish to encourage and support the provision of good occupational schemes to workers and welcomes the directive for the important part it will play in ensuring that these schemes throughout the Community look after women workers as successfully as their male colleagues.

The United Kingdom Government welcome the recommendation on the employment of the disabled which encourages member states to adopt measures promoting fair employment and training opportunities for disabled people. The Government also welcome the fact that agreement on the terms of the resolution has been reached so rapidly. United Kingdom policy and practice is already consistent with the terms of the resolution.

I was also pleased to support the resolution on the second action programme to promote equal opportunities for women. I particularly welcome the attention which it gives to education and training policies which can expand women's occupational choice and encourage their entry into new technology jobs and entrepreneurship. The United Kingdom is already implementing a number of the measures suggested in the programme and will continue to promote equality of opportunity.

The joint United Kingdom, Irish and Italian paper on "Employment growth into the 1990s—a strategy for the labour market"—was tabled as forecast in my earlier reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) of 3 June, at columns 423-24. The paper, which proposes measures in four main areas—promoting enterprise and self-employment; flexible patterns and conditions of work; training; and steps to help long-term unemployed people—was welcomed by the Council, which agreed to continue its work on the paper during the United Kingdom presidency, particularly at the informal meeting of EC Employment Ministers in September. It remains our aim to secure the adoption of an employment strategy along the lines of the paper later this year.

The Council also discussed a presidency note on the long-term unemployed. On behalf of the United Kingdom Government I was able to support its conclusions aimed towards giving more priority to the problems of long-term unemployed people. We will be looking to take the proposals in the paper forward in the United Kingdom presidency within the context of an overall labour market strategy.

In a discussion on the so-called Vredling directive, the Council reached conclusions recalling their earlier view that before further progress on the directive could be made a solution had to be found to the fundamental problems posed by the fact that in some member states the issue was essentially one for voluntary agreements between employers and employees. The Council concluded that it would not hold further discussions on the draft directive before the beginning of 1989, but that in the meantime the Commission should be invited to follow closely developments in the member states.

The Council was unable to reach agreement on the draft directive on equal treatment for self-employed women and on proscribing certain carcinogens. In the latter case the United Kingdom Government would have been prepared to support a text proposed by the presidency, but other countries had fundamental objections to it. In the former case the United Kingdom shared the reservations attached by the Republic of Ireland relating to the establishment of an unsuitable legal framework for the employment status of those who assist their spouses in the running of their businesses.

Finally, the Commission stated its view to the Council that in view of the lack of progress on the draft directive on parental leave, the Council would instead put forward proposals for a series of actions in the area of sharing family and occupational responsibilities.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood on 26 March, Official Report, column 469, what progress is being made towards establishment of the Crown prosecution service in England and Wales; when he now expects the Director of Public Prosecutions to promulgate to Crown prosecutors the code provided for by section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985; if he has any plans to seek to alter the constitutional relationship between himself and the Director of Public Prosecutions; and what will be the relative status of the code and the existing guidelines for prosecution promulgated by the Attorney-General in March 1983.

The Attorney-General: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department made a commencement order last week which will have the effect of bringing the Crown prosecution service into operation in those parts of England and Wales where it is not already established on 1 October 1986. The Director of Public Prosecutions is today issuing to members of the Crown prosecution service the code for Crown prosecutors required by section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. The code reaffirms and expands my earlier guidance so as to provide a public statement of the fundamental principles according to which the Crown prosecution service will discharge the duties placed upon it by Parliament as well as its policies on the specific matters mentioned in section 10.

By providing clear and open criteria as the basis for decisions by crown prosecutors, the code complements the director's accountability to me. I am, of course, in turn accountable to Parliament. However, the constitutional position of the director in relation to Her Majesty's Government will be unaffected. Prosecution policy is not a matter for Her Majesty's Government; such prosecution policies as the Director of Public Prosecutions may adopt are a matter for his independent judgment, subject only to superintendence by me in my capacity as a Law Officer and not as a member of Her Majesty's Government.

I welcome this opportunity to reaffirm the principles enunciated in this House on 29 January 1951, at column 681, by the then Attorney-General (now the noble Lord, Lord Shawcross) which remain as valid today as they were at the time of that classical exposition of the relationship between the Law Officers, the Director of Public Prosecutions and Her Majesty's Government.

In applying those policies to individual cases and deciding whether the interests of public justice will be served by a prosecution, it will be the duty of the director and the staff of the Crown prosecution service to acquaint themselves with all the relevant facts, and for this purpose the scope of the considerations which may be taken into account may be very wide. But there is one consideration which is altogether excluded and that is the repercussion of a given decision upon the personal fortune of either the Attorney-General for the time being or his party's or the Government's political fortunes; that is a consideration which never enters into account. Apart from that, those responsible for taking decisions whether to prosecute (whether it be myself, the director or a Crown prosecutor) may have regard to a variety of considerations, all of them leading to the final question – would a prosecution be in the public interest, including in that phrase, of course, in the interests of justice?

The code now supersedes the existing guidelines and accordingly I propose to invite all other prosecuting authorities and those, such as the police, who are responsible for initiating criminal proceedings to adopt it to the extent that it is applicable to their respective functions. All those whom my officials have been able to consult have indicated that they are willing to do so.

I have caused a copy of the code to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses pending incorporation in the manner prescribed by section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 in the director's annual report for 1986-87.

Publications (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Attorney-General if he will list those forms, leaflets and pamphlets used in the courts of Wales which are available in the Welsh language or in a bilingual Welsh-English format.

The Attorney-General: The forms listed are currently available in Welsh. All other forms, leaflets and pamphlets can be translated into Welsh on request. Additionally, a bilingual notice is attached to county court summonses that a Welsh translation will be provided on request.

DEFENCE

Falkland Islands (Gazelle Helicopter)

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement about the loss of an Army Gazelle helicopter in the Falkland Islands on 6 June 1982.

Mr. Stanley: I will set out, as fully as is possible at this distance in time, the circumstances surrounding the loss of the Gazelle.

2. On 6 June 1982, night flying conditions were excellent with a clear sky and a prominent moon and a wind speed of some 20 knots. There is no evidence of any restrictions on night flying. The Gazelle was flying from 5 Brigade headquarters, at Darwin, to Pleasant Peak, a distance of some 19 nautical miles. A radio rebroadcast station had been established there the previous day in order to provide a communications link between the headquarters and the 2nd Battalion the Parachute Regiment which had reached Fitzroy. There were problems with this link, and the Gazelle was taking spares and the officer commanding the Signals Squadron and a technician to investigate. It had been intended that the flight would go on to Fitzroy and then return to Darwin the next day. The helicopter's identification friend or foe (IFF) was switched off because it had been established that at that time the use of this equipment caused interference with other weapons systems critical to the battle. Five Brigade was in contact with the Gazelle until it was shot down, and those at the rebroadcast site saw an explosion and reported it to the headquarters almost immediately. It cannot now be ascertained with certainty whether any unit other than 5 Brigade was aware at that time of the helicopter's flight. At first light a search was mounted and the wreckage found. The two aircrew and two passengers were found to have been killed.

3. On the same day, 6 June, suspicions arose that the helicopter had been shot down by a Sea Dart missile fired from HMS Cardiff; but these suspicions fell well short of certainty, and indeed the situation was confused. The eastward advance of our forces through East Falkland was still in progress at the time, and the initial reaction to the loss of the helicopter was that there could still be Argentinians in the area. An investigation on the ground was unable to determine with finality whether Argentinian action or the missile from HMS Cardiff was responsible. In the circumstances of continuing operations it was decided that a board of inquiry was not required, and the helicopter was reported as lost in action. In view of the doubts about the cause, the commanders at the time understandably took the view that it would be wrong to add to the grief of the relatives by telling them that the Gazelle might have been lost as a result of an error on their own side.

4. After the conflict the investigation into the loss of the Gazelle was continued, and a study of missile fragments found in the wreckage commenced at the Royal Aircraft Establishment Farnborough in 1982. The coincidence of the Sea Dart firing and the Gazelle's loss at the same time and in the same vicinity had been noted, and a Sea Dart missile casing had later been found several hundred yards from the wreckage. However, the scientific tests by RAE in 1982 led to the conclusion that the missile fragments were not from a Sea Dart.

5. Drawing on this work, the Army Air Corps submitted evidence in December 1982 to the Southampton coroner who held the inquest into the death of one of those killed whose body had been repatriated. It was stated that scientific analysis of warhead fragments found in the wreckage indicated that the aircraft had been destroyed by an anti-aircraft missile of a type known to have been in the possession of the enemy. It is now known that this was not correct, and the coroner has been informed accordingly.

6. Since 1982 work has continued on the lessons of the conflict, and this led to the scientific evidence being assessed afresh. A review was carried out by RAE Farnborough in the latter part of 1985 of the findings of the 1982 tests by RAE to which I have referred. The 1985 review, which was completed in November, concluded that there could be no definitive conclusion as to the exact source of the missile fragments recovered from the crash site. This led the Ministry of Defence to conclude in the light of all the available evidence that the Sea Dart missile fired by HMS Cardiff must be adjudged the probable cause of the loss of the helicopter.

7. The question whether the relatives of those killed in the Gazelle should be told of the conclusions drawn from the revised assessment was given very careful consideration. The prime concern was to minimise the additional distress which such news would cause; however it was concluded that they should be informed, and this was done on 23 May.

8. With the benefit of hindsight, and divorced from the pressures of war, it is arguable that the 1982 decision not to hold a formal inquiry into the loss of the Gazelle was mistaken. Regarding the question whether the relatives of those killed should have been told earlier that the helicopter might have been lost through action by our own side, the deep concern of the Ministry of Defence has been not to cause further anguish to relatives until the facts were clear. We are very sorry indeed for any additional distress that the relatives have suffered.

NATO (Permanent Representative)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the United Kingdom permanent representative in NATO is authorised to agree policy matters on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Stanley: The principal NATO committees, including the North Atlantic Council and the defence planning committee, meet both in permanent and ministerial session. The United Kingdom's permanent representative represents Her Majesty's Government's policy to NATO in meetings in permanent session, acting on instructions as necessary, and is responsible to United Kingdom Ministers.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what machinery exists within the NATO Alliance for deciding about the use of chemical weapons in war.

Mr. Stanley: No chemical weapons are declared to NATO and no machinery has been established within NATO specifically to decide on the use of United States of America chemical weapons in war. However, were consideration to be given to using such weapons in the NATO area, there would no doubt be consultation at the highest political level. In NATO headquarters, the defence planning committee would be the appropriate forum.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the deployment of chemical warheads for cruise missiles in the United Kingdom will require the prior approval of Her Majesty's Government;

(2) what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the NATO force goal that includes modernisation of the United States share of a NATO chemical deterrent.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) on 28 April 1986 at column 665 and 15 May 1986 at column 546.

Armed Forces (Homosexuality)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces in 1985 were disciplined on the ground of male or female homosexuality; under what military regulations they were charged and disciplined; of the total number disciplined in that year, how many were (a) discharged administratively, (b) dishonourably discharged, (c) court-martialled and (d) given military prison sentences; and, in these cases, what was the minimum, maximum and average length of sentence, respectively.

Mr. Freeman: No member of the services is disciplined purely on the ground of being a homosexual. If an individual has committed no offence, he will usually be administratively discharged, which is not a disciplinary procedure. However, homosexual practice is an offence under each Service Discipline Act, and may lead to administrative discharge for action under the Acts, which may result in dismissal or imprisonment.

I refer the hon. Member to the statistics for 1981-84 given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 8 March 1985 at column 624-6.

The information for 1985 is as follows:

	Royal Navy		Army		Royal Air Force
Administrative discharge	7		23		24
Dismissal Dismissal* with disgrace	5		6		3
Court martialled†	3		19		3

Average sentence	42 days	—	4 months	4 years	77 days	90 days

* The term "dishonourable discharge" does not exist in the British Armed Forces; it is assumed that dismissal and dismissal with disgrace are referred to.

† Figures refer to number of cases brought, not to the number of convictions.

‡ Relates to detention in Royal Navy detention quarters only.

‖ Includes military detention and civil prison sentences.

Armed Forces (Racial Discrimination)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Commission for Racial Equality regarding alleged racial discrimination in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There have been a number of contacts between officials of the Ministry of Defence and the Commission for Racial Equality. These contacts which were of a routine nature, related to general race relations policies and practices in the armed forces.

Royal Navy (Meal Charges)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to require Royal Navy personnel to contribute to the cost of their meals when on board ship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There are no such plans. As discussed at paragraphs 79 to 82 of the review body's 15th report, Cmnd. 9784, the Armed Forces Pay Review Body will be considering the overall remuneration package for those at sea in a future review.

Publications (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those leaflets, pamphlets and forms published by his Department for use in Wales which are printed in Welsh or in a bilingual Welsh-English format.

Mr. Freeman: No leaflets, pamphlets or forms, published by the Ministry of Defence, are printed in Welsh or in a bilingual Welsh-English format.

UN (Military Budgets)

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Defence what response the United Kingdom has made to the latest United Nations exercise on the reduction of military budgets; and how this compares with the record of Warsaw Pact countries.

Mr. Stanley: The United Kingdom has replied to the questionnaire on military expenditure issued by the UN this year, as it has done every year since 1982. None of the Warsaw Pact nations has provided any input, with the sole exception of Romania which provided a response, albeit an incomplete one, for the first time last year. This refusal by most of the Warsaw Pact to participate is most regrettable.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his policy to seek a mandate for the ad hoc committee of the conference on disarmament at Geneva to commence the negotiation of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

As we have made clear on numerous occasions, it would be premature to resume negotiations until progress has been made in resolving verification issues.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the specific ways in which Her Majesty's Government are working towards the achievement of a test ban treaty.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the remarks made by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) during the Adjournment debate on 26 March at column 1049.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 542, if he will list any discussions Her Majesty's Government have held with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics since January 1980 on the absence of any effective verification procedures for a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

We have discussed arms control matters, including nuclear testing issues, with the Soviet Government on a number of occasions, most recently when my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) saw Mr. Karpov on 18 April.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 542, if Her Majesty's Government are currently holding any discussions with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in pursuit of Her Majesty's Government's wish to find a way to eliminate nuclear weapons as soon as possible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. and learned Friend will have an opportunity to discuss the broad ranges of arms control issues, including current nuclear arms control negotiations, when the Soviet Foreign Minister visits the United Kingdom on 14-15 July. However, as my right hon. and learned Friend said in a speech to the Foreign Press Association on 17 March, nuclear weapons will continue for the foreseeable future to make an essential contribution to preserving peace.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answer given on 13 May, Official Report, column 542, if Her Majesty's Government plan to hold any discussions with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the absence of effective verification measures for a comprehensive test ban treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

As my right hon. and learned Friend has informed the House, the Soviet Foreign Minister will be visiting the United Kingdom on 14-15 May and we expect the discussion will cover a wide range of issues including arms control.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the further measures on verification that are required of the Soviet Union in order that progress can be achieved on a comprehensive test ban.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

It is not possible to specify the measures that might be required in advance of further discussion at the conference on disarmament, which we favour.

Naval Ships (Video Recordings)

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Defence why, when Her Majesty's ships are in port in Great Britain or within the three mile limit video recording cannot be played where the recording system is one relayed from a central source whereas they can be played if the playback is of an individual system; if he will take steps to permit video recordings to be played back on board Her Majesty's ships at all times, irrespective of the source of the playing back; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 18 June 1986, c. 579]: Because individuals are not permitted to bring personal video recorders on board Her Majesty's ships, the ship's own public system is the only means of showing video recordings. There is a unique and very advantageous arrangement between the Royal Naval Film Corporation and the film distributors, which allows the screening of very recent releases at low cost over the ships' systems, where they do not compete with normal commercial outlets. This arrangement is of great benefit to the Navy as a whole, and we certainly wish to continue to honour it; but under its terms it is not generally possible to allow video recordings of commercial films to be played back over the ships' system while in port, or at anchor less than two miles from a commercial cinema.

Entry and Search Powers

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many officials for whom he has responsibility currently have the power to enter and search premises, subject to statutory conditions; and, in each case, if he will indicate the statutory authority under which power is exercised.

Mr. Lee: I shall be writing to my hon. Friend.

Royal Wedding

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether live ammunition will be issued to members of the armed forces for the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew.

Mr. Stanley: It is not intended that members of the armed forces undertaking ceremonial duties in connection with the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew will be issued with live ammunition.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total estimated cost to his Department of providing security and ceremonial services at the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces will be engaged in duties connected with the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew.

Mr. Stanley: On present estimates some 1,600.

Trident

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs will be dependent on the Trident project programme in 1988.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 25]: In 1988 the number of job opportunities created by the Trident programme in United Kingdom industry will be nearly at its estimated peak of 27,000, including over 2,000 construction jobs on the Clyde. In addition, some 11,000 civilians are presently employed by the Ministry of Defence on nuclear weapons-related activities.

Defence Programme

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of gross domestic product will be spent on the defence programme in 1988-89 compared with 1978-79 and 1985-86.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 28]: The information requested is as follows:

	per cent.
1978-79	4·3
1985-86	5·1
1988-89	4·4

The calculations are based on the following figures:

(1) Defence expenditure as published in the 1986 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702), except for 1985-86 which reflects estimated outturn. The Defence expenditure figure for 1978-79 is actual outturn and that for 1988-89 is planned provision.

(2) The Central Statistical Office's latest estimates for money GDP at market prices for 1978-79 and 1985-86. The forecast figure for 1988-89 is taken from the 1986 financial statement and Budget report (HC 273).

SP70 Howitzer

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the technical problems delaying the SP70 howitzer's entry into service; and when he expects them to be overcome.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 25]: The main problem faced is the reliability of the equipment in particular in the areas of the turret and ammunition handling system. A review of the programme is currently being undertaken to determine the best way ahead. This is being pursued as a matter of urgency but it is not possible to say when decisions will be reached.

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the precise dates of the concept stage, of the feasibility study stage, of the project definition stage, and of the full development stage of the SP70 155 mm howitzer; and if he will list the specific reasons of the delay at each stage.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 25]: Because it is a collaborative project, SP70 does not fit exactly into the framework in the question. The main milestones in its history are:

Date	Activity	Remarks
1969	Start of collaborative studies
1970	Start of formal project study
1973	Start of Phase A development	Design changes to overcome deficiencies in meeting the required performance.
1977	Phase A development suspended	Difficulties in meeting the operational requirement.

Date	Activity	Remarks
1978	Start of Phase B development	This followed a design review aimed at improving the design increasing reliability, and reducing costs
1985	Germany ceased development funding following evaluation trials. Phase B suspended.	System reliability inadequate.

VC10 Aircraft

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to convert further VC10 aircraft to tankers; and what is the reason for the delay.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 25]: We plan to invite competitive bids for the conversion of further VC10 aircraft to tankers in the first half of 1987. The aircraft are not required to enter service until the early 1990s and the question of delay does not therefore arise.

Tucano Basic Trainer

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence how long is the delay on the Tucano basic trainer programme; and what is the reason for it.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 25]: There will be a few months' delay in the delivery of the first aircraft but it is hoped to recover most of the slippage later in the delivery programme. The delay has occurred because the initial phases of the programme took a little longer than expected and there was an industrial dispute which is now resolved. There are no technical problems.

Torpedo Programme

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he has introduced into the torpedo programme to increase competition.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 26]: We insist on the maximum use of competition at subcontractor level and we monitor contracts to ensure that this is effectively achieved. We also plan to go to competitive tender for future torpedo production orders, starting with Spearfish which is now under development.

Procurement Executive

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many people work for the Procurement Executive; how many are civilians; and how many have service personnel.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 27]: At 1 May 1986 the number of people working in the Procurement Executive was 36,138 civilian personnel and 1,527 service personnel.

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the operation of the Procurement Executive management board.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 27]: Yes.

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence who are the members of the Procurement Executive management board.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 27]: The membership of the Procurement Executive management board is as follows:

Chief of Defence Procurement — Chairman
Controller, R&D Establishments, Research and Nuclear — Controller of the Navy Master General of the Ordnance Controller Aircraft
Head of Defence Export Services
Deputy Under Secretary of State (Defence Procurement)
Deputy Under Secretary of State (Finance)
Deputy Under Secretary of State (Civilian Management)
Director of Procurement Policy — Secretary
In Attendance: Director General of Defence Contracts

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many secondments there have been both inwards and outwards in 1985-86 from the Procurement Executive.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 27]: The figures for Procurement Executive secondments inwards and outwards for 1985-86, excluding Royal Ordnance plc, were as follows:

	Number
Outward	87
Inward	52

Equipment Programmes

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the equipment programmes in which he is experiencing management or contractual difficulties; and if he will specify what precise steps he is taking to overcome them.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 27]: The cost of the MOD equipment programme is currently running at some £8·5 billion a year, and we have extant at any one time some 100,000 contracts. Clearly, in a programme of this size, it would not be possible to answer the question without totally disproportionate effort.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

White Salt

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on white salt is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The report is published today.

The commission found that the market shares of Imperial Chemical Industries plc and British Salt Ltd., a wholly owned subsidiary of Staveley Industries plc, constitute a monopoly situation in relation to the supply of white salt. The commission also found that the lack of price competition in the United Kingdom and the pricing of white salt in the United Kingdom market are attributable to this monopoly situation and operate against the public interest.

The commission has concluded that British Salt has chosen to follow the price increases of ICI, despite significant cost differences between the two companies which favour British Salt as the lower cost producer. Although the commission did not consider that the procedure for determining prices amounted to collusion, in its view it has resulted in a restraint of competition and domestic price increases made by the two companies being greater than they would have been with effective competition.

The commission found evidence of significant existing barriers to entry in the market, and discovered several factors suggesting, when taken together, that new entry on a significant scale was unlikely: notably the advantages conferred by economies of scale, the length of time needed to develop boreholes, existing mineral rights and the present degree of excess capacity which favour the established producers. The commission, however, finds no evidence to suggest that the companies have excluded potential competitors through uncompetitive practices.

As there appears to be little likelihood of the adverse effect on prices being remedied by new entrants or competition from imports, the commission has recommended a system of price control intended to break the link between the price increases of British Salt and ICI's costs, but without depriving either company of the incentive to improve efficiency.

The commission recommends that prices should be controlled by reference to increases in a weighted index of production costs. However, the commission considers that it would be both impracticable and unnecessary to exercise direct control of both companies' prices either by a single composite index or by a separate index for each company. The application of price controls to British Salt alone — as the commission recommends — would effectively ensure that no competitor can raise prices beyond the levels charged by British Salt without jeopardising its market share.

I accept the findings and recommendations of the commissions report. I am consequently asking the Director General of Fair Trading to consult British Salt and Staveley Industries with a view to obtaining from them undertakings designed to limit the prices of white salt sold in the United Kingdom by British Salt in accordance with the principles and suggested input cost index set out in the commission's report.

European Regional Development Fund

76. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much European regional development fund non-quota infrastructure aid for textile and steel closure areas has been allocated by the European Economic Community Commission to the United Kingdom; how much has been spent; and how much has been committed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The non-quota programmes approved by the European Commission in respect of certain areas in the United Kingdom suffering from the decline in the textile and steel industries provide for aid from the European regional development fund of about £50·7 million in respect of infrastructure measures. £21 million of this has been committed to specified projects, and £6·5 million has already been spent. In addition, the Commission announced last March that around £7·5 million will be made available to the United Kingdom under the steel non-quota regulation. The necessary amendment to the United Kingdom's programme has not yet been submitted, but it is likely that infrastructure measures would receive about half of this additional money.

Entry and Search Powers

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many officials for whom he has responsibility currently have the power to enter and search premises, subject to statutory conditions; and if he will, in each case, indicate the statutory authority under which power is exercised.

Mr. Butcher: Officials for whom the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has responsibility have powers of entry and search under the following statutory provisions:

Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949, Section 15.
Trade Descriptions Act 1968, Section 28(1)(a) and (3).
Crystal Glass (Descriptions) Regulations 1973, Regulation 8(3) (SI 1973/1952).
Textile Products (Indications of Fibre Content) Regulations, Regulation 9(2) (SI 1973/2124).
Hallmarking Act 1973, Section 9(3).
Fair Trading Act 1973, Sections 29(1)(a) and (3), 123(1).
Prices Act 1974, paragraph 3 of Schedule and paragraphs 9 and 11 (not at present active).
Calibration of Tanks and Vessels (EEC Requirements) Regulations 1975, Regulation 9(1)(b) (SI 1975/2125).
Alcoholometers and Alcohol Hydrometers (EEC Requirements) Regulations 1977, Regulation 13(1)(b) (SI 1977/1753).
Consumer Safety Act 1978, Schedule 2, paragraphs 3 and 5 Taximeters (EEC Requirements) Regulations 1979, Regulation 15 (SI 1979/1379).
Industrial Development Act 1982, Schedule 1, paragraph 1(2).
Telecommunications Act 1984, Sections 37 and 79 (79 to be read with Section 15 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949).
Construction Plant and Equipment (Harmonisation of Noise Emission Standards) Regulations 1985 (SI 1985/1968).
Companies Act 1985, Section 448.

It is not possible to say how many officials (even in theory) could exercise these varied powers.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent in each area under the assisted area scheme in each of the last three years (a) on capital account and (b) on revenue account; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following grant payments were made under the regional selective assistance and old and new-style regional development grant (RDG) schemes in the last three years.

£ million

Region-Country	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
North-East	82·6	76·1	61·7
North-West	130·7	121·1	95·4
Yorkshire and Humberside	32·3	36·0	30·7
East Midlands	16·9	10·2	8·3
West Midlands	—	1·8	6·6
South West	9·8	11·3	10·6
Scotland	166·2	138·4	149·1
Wales	87·3	111·0	106·2

Revenue expenditure is not eligible for grant under the RDG schemes although payments of new-style RDGs may be related to the number of jobs created. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of payments of regional selective assistance in the form requested, but the bulk is related to capital expenditure. The Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales are responsible for the administration of these schemes in their respective territories.

Steel Industry

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what has been the percentage change in English steel production since 1979;

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the nature of the main items of business discussed at the Internal Market Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community since May 1985, listing those decisions taken.

Mr. Alan Clark: Since May 1985 the Internal Market Council has discussed a wide range of measures aimed at reducing barriers to free trade in goods and services in the

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community Council of Industry Ministers of 9 June.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Industry Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, heard a report from the European Commission on its consultations with member states on the Community regime for state aids to shipbuilding which should apply after the fifth directive expires at the end of 1986. The Commission will produce formal proposals for a new directive during the United Kingdom presidency of the Community.

The Council also reviewed progress on a number of measures in the high technology field. Of these the following were adopted:
- Directive concerning the first phase of the establishment of the mutual recognition of type approval for telecommunications terminal equipment.
- Resolution on the use of videoconference and videophone techniques.

The Council also held a preliminary discussion on public purchasing. The Commission is expected to put forward proposals in this area during the United Kingdom presidency.

Director General of Telecommunications (Report)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has yet received the report by the Director General of Telecommunications for the year 1985, as required under section 55 of the Telecommunications Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: Yes. The second report by the Director General of Telecommunications is being published today. It covers the period 1 January to 31 December 1985. Copies of the report have been laid before each House of Parliament.

Consumer Credit Act

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement about the renewal of licences under the Consumer Credit Act.

Mr. Howard: I have today laid regulations to extend the period of standard licences under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 from 10 to 15 years.

The system of licensing has been in place for nearly 10 years. The Office of Fair Trading is in the process of computerising its licensing operation. In the long term this will benefit business by substantially reducing the time taken to process applications. I have therefore agreed to a request by the Director General for a five-year extension in the validity of licences to ensure that the computer system is fully operative well before the first licences issued are due for renewal.

The statutory instrument that I have laid is the Consumer Credit (Period of Standard Licence) (Amendment) Regulations 1986.

Birmingham City Council (Deputations)

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Ministers in his Department who have met deputations from Birmingham city council in the current year, stating the date and the purpose of each meeting.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to the reply, 23 June 1986, c. 42]: I also met representatives of the Birmingham city council economic development committee with MPs on 11 March to discuss BL.

South Africa

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 569, whether the target wage level for British firms operating in South Africa is the minimum living level plus 50 per cent. or plus 30 per cent. as calculated by the University of South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1986]: The level of minumum wages required under the revised code of conduct for companies operating in South Africa, as agreed by EC Foreign Ministers last November, is the supplemented living level (SLL) for the district concerned, as calculated by the University of South Africa, for a family of average size. The code stresses that this level should be regarded as an absolute minimum and not as a target.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's investigations into the case of Milcom Electronics UK Ltd. in the context of the arms embargo on South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1986]: I have no reason to believe that our international obligations in respect of the import of arms from South Africa are not being observed. If there is evidence to the contrary, I am willing to receive it.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to enforce the embargo on the import of arms from South Africa since the discussions between his Department and Milcom Electronics UK Ltd.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1986]: I would refer the hon. Member to my earlier replies of 24 June and today. It is not clear which are the alleged discussions the hon. Member refers to.

THE ARTS

Dance (Business Sponsorship)

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on new business sponsorship of dance.

Mr. Luce: The Digital Equipment Company has today announced a major new sponsorship programme for dance. The programme is receiving matching funding under the Government's business sponsorship incentive scheme, which was a major influence in DEC's decision. This means that in total the programme will inject £500,000 new funding into dance. It is an imaginative sponsorship package covering the whole range of dance activity, and is an outstanding example of business and Government joining forces to support the arts. It will be welcomed by all who love dance. DEC deserves enormous credit.

WALES

School Equipment Costs

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make an estimate of the amounts of money provided each year by parents towards maintained school equipment costs in Wales for each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87; and if he will express the amount in cash terms and adjusted according to the gross domestic product deflator; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mentally Handicapped Persons

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many profoundly mentally handicapped children and young adults there are in each of the health and social services board areas in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Routine statistical data do not enable the identification of those clients who are profoundly mentally handicapped. The total number of young mentally handicapped clients in contact with the Social Services Departments of the Health and Social Services Boards at 31 December 1984 is set out in the following table.

Health and Social Services Board	Mentally handicapped children (aged 0-15)	Mentally handicapped young adults (aged 16-24)	Total
Eastern	463	520	983
Northern	272	337	609
Southern	225	262	487
Western	271	228	499
Northern Ireland	1,231	1,347	2,578

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the budget allocation of each of the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland for the provision of care and services to profoundly mentally handicapped children and young adults and their parents; and what proportion this represented of their total budget;

(2) how much each of the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland spent on the provision of care facilities and other services to profoundly mentally handicapped children and young adults in each of the last five years, for which such figures are available; and what proportion this represented of their total budget.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what care facilities and other services for profoundly mentally handicapped children and young adults are provided for in the budget of each of the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland;

(2) what provision is made for daytime nursery-care of very young and profoundly mentally handicapped children in each of the health and social board areas in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Mentally handicapped people of all ages and degrees of handicap have access, in common with the rest of the population of Northern Ireland to a range of general health and personal social services. In addition, at 31 December 1984, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 118 day care places available in Northern Ireland specifically for mentally handicapped children aged 0-4, 957 places for those aged 5-15 and 982 places for young adults aged 16-24. Within this provision, the available information does not enable those who are profoundly mentally handicapped to be identified.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what provision is made for short-term care of profoundly mentally handicapped children and young adults in each health and social services board area in Northern Ireland;

(2) what guidelines his Department has as to a recommended level of accessibility of short-term care facilities for profoundly mentally handicapped children and young adults, in terms of numbers, bed places, and in terms of distance to travel;

(3) what summer recreation schemes are provided by each of the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: No specific guidelines have been issued by the Department of Health and Social Services but Health and Social Services Boards have been asked to include the profoundly mentally handicapped in determining priorities for the development of services for the mentally handicapped.

Short-term respite care is provided to varying degrees across the Province for mentally handicapped people of all ages and varying degrees of handicap. Short-term residential care is provided in some mental handicap hospitals and residential homes as appropriate on a year round basis. Alternative ways of providing families with a break such as short-term fostering schemes are being developed in some areas. In addition, during the summer holiday period, some short-term care is provided in holiday homes and summer camps. Day time activity schemes, some of which are run in co-operation with voluntary organisations, are also available in some areas. Details of these schemes are not held centrally.

Therapists

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many qualified specialists, speech therapists, physiotherapists, occupational therapists and music therapists each of the health and social services boards employ in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

	Eastern Board	Northern Board	Southern Board	Western Board
Speech Therapists	62	35	16	23
Physiotherapists	245	61	48	30
Occupational Therapists	130	30	26	19

There is no music therapists grade in the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Westminster Hall

Mr. Janner asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he will raise with the Services Committee the replacement of the railings in Westminster Hall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: No. I accept that the existing railings are plain and functional in character; but demands on the parliamentary works programme are heavy at present and will remain so for the foreseeable future, and in these circumstances I do not regard replacement of the railings as a priority.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Department Property

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the number of flats and houses owned by the prison department in England and Wales; and how many are currently occupied.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 March 1986, 8,258 flats and houses were owned by the prison department, of which 6,839 were occupied.

999 Calls

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will discuss with the chairman of British Telecom the possibility of ensuring that all 999 emergency calls have an immediate play back facility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: All 999 calls are recorded by British Telecom; most are recorded also by the emergency service concerned.

British Telecom records these calls to enable it to monitor the quality of the service and to deal with allegations of mishandling. The recordings are retained for three months during which period access to them is granted only on the authority of a BT district manager following a request from a chief constable or other chief officer.

Data Protection

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for the effectiveness of the operation of the Data Protection Act of the current number of registrations under the Act.

Mr. Waddington: It is too early to make such an assessment. Applications for registration are still being received by the Date Protection Registrar, who is to carry out research into the impact of the Act on businesses and into the number of data users who may still need to register.

Naturalisation

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria as to competence in the use of English for persons seeking naturalisation; whether there are different criteria for Vietnamese refugees; and whether it is standard practice for applicants to be interviewed.

Mr. Waddington: The language criteria and the practice on interviews were set out in the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend on 23 May at column 335. They apply to refugees as to other applicants and allow for the particular circumstances of all applicants, including refugees, to be taken into account.

Crime Prevention (Leicester)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for preventing crime in the inner city areas of Leicester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of Leicestershire gives a high priority to crime prevention in his force strategy. For example, efforts are being made to encourage the development of neighbourhood watch schemes in inner city areas. Also, the chief constable has recently launched a special publicity campaign to encourage an awareness of crime prevention in the city's Asian community using publicity material, provided by the Home Office, in five languages of the India sub-continent. In addition, Age Concern in Leicester manages a community programme funded scheme which provides, among other services, a security device fitting service for elderly householders.

Forms, Pamphlets, Leaflets (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those forms, pamphlets and leaflets published by his Department which are available in either a Welsh language or a bilingual version.

Mr. Hurd: The Home Office currently publishes the following booklets, leaflets and posters in Welsh:

Danger from fire (Booklet and leaflet)
Complaints against the Police (Leaflet)
Electoral registration (Ten forms and a poster).

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to extend the scope of the criminal injuries compensation scheme to include victims of joy riders in stolen cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The scheme provides for compensation to be paid for personal injury attributable to a traffic offence where a deliberate attempt has been made to run the victim down. A person who has suffered injuries caused by a motor vehicle may also be within the scope of the scheme if he was attempting to prevent an offence or to apprehend a suspected offender. Other persons injured as a result of traffic offences, including those committed by drivers of stolen cars, have access to compensation through compulsory motor insurance and Motor Insurers' Bureau arrangements. The Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme is at present under review in preparation for legislation.

Domestic Pets

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were taken against individuals for offences relating to control of domestic pets for the last five years which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The only information available to me, which may be incomplete relates to court proceedings for offences in connection with dogs and is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 1" under offence classifications 111 (offences relating to dogs) and 171 (revenue offences concerning dog licences).

Royal Wedding

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the estimated total cost to the Metropolitan police of policing the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew;

(2) how many members of the Metropolitan police will be engaged in duties connected with the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that he plans to deploy some 2,000 officers for this occasion at an estimated cost in police overtime of about £61,000. Other additional policing costs on transport, catering and so on, cannot be quantified at this stage.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether live ammunition will be issued to members of the Metropolitan police for the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that armed officers will be deployed as part of the security arrangements.

Extradition Warrants

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to delay the sealing of extradition warrants until relevant applications lying before the European Commission on Human Rights are decided;

(2) when the surrender warrant for Werner Bruchhausen's removal from the United Kingdom was sealed;

(3) what notice he took of Werner Bruchhausen's application to the European Commission on Human Rights in making his decision to remove him from the United Kingdom;

(4) at what time on Friday 13 June he executed the warrant for Mr. Bruchhausen's removal from the United Kingdom;

(5) what representations were made to him on Friday 13 June regarding the proposed extradition and removal of Werner Bruchhausen from the United Kingdom;

(6) why he decided to extradite Werner Bruchhausen on 13 June;

(7) what information was available to his Department on the application by Mr. Bruchhausen's legal advisers on 13 June for judicial review of his decision to surrender Werner Bruchhausen to the United States authorities.

Mr. Hurd: In May 1985 the United States Government applied for the extradition of Mr. Werner Bruchhausen on charges related to the illegal export of high technology equipment to the Soviet bloc. After my predecessor had issued the necessary orders to proceed the Chief Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate at Bow Street committed Mr. Bruchhausen to custody on 25 October 1985 on four counts of obtaining property by deception and eight counts of false accounting. Mr. Bruchhausen applied to the Divisional court for a writ of habeas corpus but this was refused, as was his petition for leave to appeal to the House of Lords. On 6 June Mr. Bruchhausen applied to the European Commission on Human Rights alleging irregularities in the extradition procedures (allegations which had already been rejected by both the Divisional court and the House of Lords). The United Kingdom is under no obligation under the European Convention on Human Rights to defer the removal of a person under the Extradition Act 1870 pending the consideration of a petition, nor do we understand it to be the practice of the Commission to ask for removal to be delayed except where, for example, there are allegations of likely ill-treatment in the country of destination. No such allegations were made in this case, nor was such a request made by the Commission. I therefore signed a warrant for the surrender of Mr. Bruchhausen at about 1 pm on 13 June and the warrant was executed later that afternoon. The Commission will be able to continue its consideration of the petition notwithstanding Mr. Bruchhausen's removal.

In the course of the afternoon of 13 June Mr. Bruchhausen's solicitor, who had been informed that I had already signed the surrender warrant, asked if the removal of Mr. Bruchhausen could be delayed while further representations were made. In subsequent conversation with the solicitor it was established that the basis of these representations would be that the offences for which Mr. Bruchhausen was to be extradited were political and that the petition had not been decided by the Commission. On further consideration of the arguments it seemed clear that they did not add to the case, which had already been fully considered by the Divisional court and myself. Although the possibility of an application for judicial review had been mentioned by the solicitor earlier in the week, time to prepare such an application did not form part of the case for an extention of the time limit for Mr. Bruchhausen's removal.

For the foregoing reasons, I am not prepared to make it a general policy to delay the signing of surrender warrants in extradition cases pending the consideration of petitions by the Commission.

Mr. D. Abbott

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the qualifications of Mr. D Abbott, an official of his Department; and in which division of his Department he works.

Mr. Hurd: Mr. D. J. Abbott is an established civil servant in respect of whom a certificate of qualification was issued by the Civil Service Commissioners in January 1958. He has spent the last two years in the extradition section of the Home Office general department.

Motoring Offences

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time that elapses between motoring offences (a) generally and (b) drunk in charge, involving an accident and a prosecution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The available information relates to proceedings completed at magistrates' courts during the week ending 24 to 29 June 1985. The average time between date of offence and completion of proceedings in magistrates' courts was 18 weeks for all summary motoring offences and 13 weeks for offences relating to driving while under the influence of drink or drugs. Information is not separately available for offences arising from accidents.

Parole

Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) of prisoners serving sentences eligible for parole in each of the years 1983, 1984 and 1985, what proportion of what percentage served (a) less than 25 per cent., (b) less than 30 per cent., (c) less than 40 per cent., (d) less than 50 per cent., (e) less than 60 per cent. and (f) less than two thirds of their sentence;

(2) what proportion of prisoners sentenced were eligible for parole in each of the years 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to my reply, 11 June 1986, c. 17]: The available information is as follows, showing separately the two halves of 1984 to reflect the reduction from 30 June 1984 in the minimum qualifying period for parole from 12 to six months. Prisoners do not serve less than one third of their sentence unless they successfully appeal, die in custody or are transferred to a psychiatric hospital or to a prison outside England and Wales. Time served owing to loss of remission is not included but would increase the overall proportion of sentence served by around 1 per cent. Further information on the periods of licence recommended and on the lengths of sentences being served is given annually on the report of the Parole Board (Table 3, Appendix 4 of the latest issue, for 1985, HMSO June 1986).

Proportion of sentence served by prisoners eligible for parole by year of discharge

England and Wales

percentages

Proportion of sentence served	1983	1984 Jan-June	1984 July-Dec	1985
Less than 25 per cent.	1	*	*	*

50 but less than 60 per cent.	28	30	30	26
60 per cent. but less than two thirds	37	37	23	28

* Less than 0.5 per cent.

In 1983 and the first half of 1984, about one tenth of prisoners discharged had been eligible for parole. In the second half of 1984 and in 1985 the proportion was about a quarter.

PRIME MINISTER

Royal Wedding

Mr. Canavan asked the Prime Minister what is the total estimated cost to all Government Departments of providing services at the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew.

The Prime Minister: The estimated net cost of providing services is approximately £40,000 but this does not include costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence, which are the subject of a separate written answer tabled by the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Trooping of the Colour

Mr. Canavan asked the Prime Minister what is the total cost to all Government Departments of providing various services at the Trooping of the Colour.

The Prime Minister: The identifiable extra cost to Government Departments of providing services at the Trooping of the Colour 1986 was £11,594.

Birmingham City Council (Ministerial Deputations)

Mr. Rooker asked the Prime Minister if she will list the Ministers who have received deputations from Birmingham city council in the current year, stating the dates and the purpose of each meeting.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to the replies, 16 June 1986, c. 498; 17 June 1986, c. 512-13 and 23 June 1986] I have been asked to reply.

I also met representatives of the Birmingham city council economic development committee with MPs on 11 March to discuss BL.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Freedom of Speech

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a list of all incidents reported to him in which students or invited speakers were denied the right to speak, asked not to appear, had invitations to speak withdrawn, were physically or otherwise stopped from speaking at universities or other institutions of higher education in the last two years; and if he will give a description of each such incident and details of any information he has on subsequent disciplinary action taken;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a list of all incidents reported to him occurring in the last two years at universities and other institutions of higher education where students or duly-invited guests have met with violence where there is evidence that the cause was related to views they held.

Mr. Walden: The detailed information sought by the hon. Member is readily available only for the period since November 1985. Most incidents followed up by the Department have involved invited speakers rather than students. Some allegations have been received about action by students against other students, and two were pursued with the institutions.

The denial of free speech may of course be much greater than the following list reveals. Only reported incidents can be stated. There may be many other instances where the existence of a "no platform" policy or the threat of disruption has led to a controversial speaker not being invited. It is in the nature of the problem that such denial of free speech will not always be known.

SPEAKERS ASKED NOT TO APPEAR/INVITATIONS WITHDRAWN

1. Guildford College of Law—October/November 1985

In late October 1985, the press reported the alleged banning of meetings in mid-November 1985 and in February 1986 at which Mr. Jeffrey Archer and the Solicitor-General respectively had been invited to speak. The college, a small private establishment, explained that it could not accommodate other than strictly private meetings arranged by students on its premises. It assisted the College Conservative Association in finding and funding an alternative venue for Mr. Archer's meeting a few days later on premises provided by the University of Surrey. The college wrote to both Mr. Archer and the Solicitor-General to explain the position and invited the latter to speak on a later occasion as a guest of the college.

2. University of Essex—6 November 1985

The University Conservative Student Association had failed to give notification in accordance with established rules to the university authorities of their invitation to the hon. Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle), and was required to withdraw it.

3. Sheffield University—26 November 1985

Following the severe disruption that a small number of activists had caused at a debate addressed by Mrs. Victoria Gillick on 29 October, the university had supported the student union in concluding that a brief "cooling-off" period was needed before any further meetings were held on clearly controversial subjects. When, during this period, my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North was invited by the Student Conservative Association to speak on the sporting boycott of South Africa, the university authorities supported the student union in cancelling the proposed meeting.

4. York University—13 February 1986

My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North was invited to speak to students at the university by the Conservative

Student Association. The student union then re-adopted a "no-platform" policy against speakers deemed to be "racists". The university authorities immediately reinstituted legal proceedings against such a policy (action had lapsed when the student union at a mass meeting overturned the no-platform policy in October of the previous year). In order to avoid confrontation before a legal ruling and an injunction could be obtained, the university authorities cancelled the proposed meeting.

5. Leeds Polytechnic—20 February 1986

My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North accepted the conclusion of the director, Mr. Christopher Price, reached on the basis of police advice, that his visit should be postponed to a later date.

6. Bristol Polytechnic—March 1986

Mr. Ray Honeyford was invited by Bristol Polytechnic Conservative Students Association to address a student meeting. The proposed meeting, said to have been advertised by the student association in emotive terms, had caused much local controversy. Although the polytechnic authorities were prepared to allow the meeting to proceed, with the intention of preparing against disruption, the governing body decided that the meeting should not take place "at the present time on polytechnic premises".

SPEAKERS PHYSICALLY OR OTHERWISE STOPPED HEARD BUT MET WITH VIOLENCE

1. Manchester University—8 November 1985

The Minister of State, at the Home Office, my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Waddington) was invited by the University Conservative Student Association to speak on the Government's immigration policy. The meeting was held in the student union's premises. It was violently disrupted and my hon. and learned Friend was forced to leave. The university initiated disciplinary proceedings against four students. Following an appeal by all four students against the decision of the disciplinary committee, it was decided on 21 March that three of the appeals be rejected and one upheld.

2. Bradford University—13 February 1986

My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. John Carlisle), was invited by Bradford University Conservative Student Association to address a mainly student audience on politics, sport and South Africa. Shortly after he arrived my hon. Friend was knocked down and assaulted by a group of young men. Those involved were said not to be students. The university's student union deplored the incident and immediately offered to co-operate with the police in any investigation.

3. Sunderland Polytechnic—16 February 1986

My hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon), was invited by the Student Christian Movement at Sunderland polytechnic to speak to students on the "Future of the North East". The student union at the polytechnic supported the invitation, providing a room and the necessary facilities. The meeting passed without incident. After the meeting, whilst talking to students in the student union bar, Mr. Fallon was struck in the face by a person who is believed to be an associate member of the bar (possibly an ex-student of the polytechnic). The student union deplored the incident and sent a formal apology to my hon. Friend on 19 February. My hon. Friend declined a police invitation to prosecute.

4. Oriel College, Oxford—17 February 1986

My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. John Carlisle), was invited by Oxford University Monday Club to speak about sporting links with South Africa. A number of people barricaded themselves in the room at Oriel college where the meeting was to be held and so prevented the meeting from going ahead. Only one student was identified as having been present and it has been accepted that he was attempting to clear the room. The university believes that those responsible for the incident were members of the Socialist Workers Party from outside the university. Mr. Carlisle has been invited back to the university, but no date has yet been agreed for his visit.

5. Bolton Institute of Higher Education—5 March 1986

My hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden), Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science, was jostled by demonstrating students who attempted to prevent his entry to the institute, where he was to address a meeting. The students union declined on invitation to a meeting with him. Following police intervention, my hon. Friend gained access to the institute.

6. University of East Anglia—24 April 1986

My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. John Carlisle), was invited by the University Conservative Student Association to speak to students on sporting links with South Africa. The student union voted to mount a silent vigil on the steps of the hall where the meeting was due to take place. Conservative students were prevented from entering the building when some of the demonstrators blocked the steps and resisted police attempts to move them. Mr. Carlisle was forced to cancel his proposed speech. Some of those involved were said to be from outside the University. The university authorities proposed to take action against any of those involved whom they could identify as students of the university.

An additional incident not covered by the question, but where freedom of speech was denied, concerned Professor Vincent of the University of Bristol, whose lecture was disrupted by students of the university. Disciplinary action was subsequently taken by the university against 7 students.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTIMIDATION OF STUDENTS BY STUDENTS

1. Polytechnic of North London—1984

During the summer of 1984, fellow students attempted to exclude Mr. Patrick Harrington, a National Front Organiser, from lectures at the Polytechnic. Mr. Harrington obtained a High Court injunction to prevent the picketing against him. In December 1984, a committee of inquiry was established by ILEA into the management of the polytechnic.

2. University of Essex—May 1985

An article was published in the London Evening Standard on 20 May 1985 which alleged Left-wing intimidation of students at Essex university. The university, supported by a number of its student societies, denied the allegations. The author of the article is understood later to have admitted that the article contained a number of inaccuracies and falsehoods.

Elderly People (Care and Treatment)

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which Scottish universities make special courses available to doctors who wish to specialise in the care and treatment of elderly people; and what information he has to how many students are presently enrolled in such courses.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the University of Glasgow and the University of Edinburgh each provides occasional one-week courses in geriatric medicine for qualified doctors, and that enrolements on these are normally between 25 and 30.

Publications (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list any forms, leaflets and pamphlets in relation to university education in Wales which his Department has issued in Wales in a bilingual or Welsh language format.

Mr. Walden: The Department has not issued any such documents.

Institute for Motor Disorders, Budapest

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to visit Hungary, and in particular the Institute for Motor Disorders in Budapest.

Mr. Dunn: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend have any plans to visit Hungary at present.

Schools Repairs (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated cost of carrying out outstanding urgent repairs to West Yorkshire schools as notified to him by local education authorities.

Mr. Dunn: There is no requirement for local education authorities to notify my right hon. Friend of the extent of outstanding repairs to schools. The information requested is therefore not available centrally.

School Attendance

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to require the children of parents of no fixed abode to attend schools or participate in schemes of regulated education otherwise than at school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Under the Education Act 1944 it is already the duty of the parent of every child of compulsory school age to cause him or her to receive efficient education suited to his or her age, ability, and aptitude, and to any special educational needs he or she may have, either by regular attendance at school or otherwise. Local education authorities also have a duty under the Act to ensure that the parents of any children of compulsory school age in their area are performing this duty.

Russian Language

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils were presented for O-level and A-level Russian in each year since 1979 in England and Wales.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested is not available centrally for school pupils. The table gives the numbers of all candidates entered for examinations, other than overseas examinations, in Russian set by the English examining boards.

GCE O-level and A-level entries in Russian Summer examinations

	O-level Entries	A-level Entries
1979	1,756	396
1980	1,768	372
1981	1,433	372
1982	1,429	377
1983	1,326	313
1984	1,279	307
1985	1,375	307

Information on the numbers of candidates entered for examinations set by the Welsh Joint Education Committee is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Departmental Procedures (Review)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to review his Department's procedures, under sections 12 to 16 of the Education Act 1980.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The procedures followed are designed to enable the efficient discharge of the responsibilities conferred by the Act, but I have decided that there would be advantage in a scrutiny of them; I have particularly in mind the need to reduce the time taken to reach decisions.

I have appointed Mr. J. A. M. Mitchell CB, CVO, MC, formerly secretary of the Scottish Education Department, to undertake the scrutiny with the following terms of reference:

i. to examine the respective responsibilities for the organisation of schools of the Secretary of State, the local education authorities, and the governors of aided schools, as embodied in Sections 12-16 of the Education Act 1980, taking account of the Secretary of State's policies as set out in the White Paper "Better Schools";

ii. to consider the procedures adopted by the Department in assisting the Secretary of State to discharge his functions under these Sections;

iii. to assess the appropriateness and cost-effectiveness of these procedures;

iv. to identify options for change, including legislative options if appropriate, to assess the estimated manpower and financial implications for central government, taking account of any for local government, and to make recommendations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has an estimate of the date by which solutions to the technical difficulties of adequately verifying a comprehensive nuclear test ban will become more apparent.

Mr. Eggar: No. But it will be difficult to make progress while some countries refuse to agree to an appropriate mandate for an ad hoc committee at the conference on disarmament to discuss these issues.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, when the Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Shevardnadze visits the United Kingdom, he proposes to take any new initiatives with regard to (a) a comprehensive test ban treaty, (b) a freeze on new nuclear weapon deployments, (c) tactical nuclear weapons in East and Western Europe, (d) intermediate-range nuclear weapons in East and West Europe or (e) strengthening the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

Mr. Eggar: We look forward to pursuing a broad dialogue on arms control and other issues when the Soviet Foreign Minister visits the United Kingdom on 14-15 July. It would not be appropriate to go into detail at this stage.

Women (Job Opportunities)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the policy of his Department concerning job opportunities for women as distinct from men at senior levels of the Diplomatic Service; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to improve job opportunities for women as distinct from men at senior levels of the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, as an equal opportunities employer, is committed to equal opportunity for employment and advancement, regardless of sex. Current efforts to recruit more women into the administrative grades of the Diplomatic Service, and to make it easier for women officers to reconcile career and family, should in time ensure a higher proportion of women at more senior levels. (In 1985 competitions, 46 per cent. of the total intake into the administrative grades, and 57 per cent. of the DS9 intake, were women.)

Spain (British Tourists)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British tourists have been (a) killed, (b) seriously injured and (c) slightly injured in Spain in each of the past three years.

Mr. Eggar: I regret that the statistics requested are not readily available. Not all cases are reported to us. Even for those that are it would require a disproportionate amount of time to provide figures in the categories indicated.

Spain (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar) will make a statement on his recent visit to Spain.

Mr. Eggar: I paid an official visit to Spain from 15 to 19 June. I visited Malaga, Madrid and Palma de Mallorca. During the visit I saw our consular operations in action at first hand, looked at the problems faced by British tourists and held discussions with Senor Barrionueve, the Interior Minister. I also met with a wide range of central and local government officials, tour operators, British tourists and residents.

Mr. Oliver Tambo

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he or his ministerial colleagues intend to hold discussions with Mr. Oliver Tambo of the African National Congress during Mr. Tambo's visit to London.

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to meet President Oliver Tambo of the African National Congress during his visit to London on 23 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: As my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman will now be aware, I met Mr. Tambo in London yesterday. I underlined the importance of suspending violence on all sides in South Africa in order to promote a constructive dialogue.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Asset Sales (Revenue Loss)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the annual loss of revenue to the Exchequer for the years 1986 to 1987 and 1987-88 as a result of the sale of assets since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Commercial Bank of Wales (Subsidiary)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has received about alleged misappropriations of funds of an Isle of Man based subsidiary of the Commercial Bank of Wales; wh assessment has been made of the implications within t United Kingdom; and what action he has taken.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Commercial Bank of Wales (I of Man) Ltd. is the supervisory responsibility of the I of Man authorities. I understand that in the course normal contacts between regulatory bodies the Bank England has been informed by the Isle of M Government Financial Supervision Commission of th matter and assured that there is no risk to deposito funds.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dairy Herds (Prohibition Order)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agricultur Fisheries and Food how many dairy herds are located the areas of Cumbria and Wales covered by th prohibition order affecting sheep referred to in h statement of 20 June; what information is available to hi about the nature and level of contamination of mi produced by those herds during May; and if he will list th information he has as to the creameries and dairies which the milk from those areas was delivered durin May.

Mrs. Fenner: Approximately 554 and 908 dairy herd are located respectively in the areas of Cumbria and nort Wales designated under the Food Protection (Emergenc Prohibitions) Order 1986. The data published by m Department on 20 June, a copy of which is in the Librar of the House, contains the results from individual farm creameries and dairies since the beginning of May. Thes show that the levels of both radioiodine and radiocaesiun in cows milk and dairy products have always been we below those at which any precautionary action would nee to be considered.

SCOTLAND

Radioisotopes

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland in the light of the answer of 21 May, Official Report column 192, regarding radiological monitoring, wha facilities the National Radiological Protection Board ha to measure particular radioisotopes; if there are any radioisotopes which the board cannot measure but some sites operated by the nuclear industry can measure; and i he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish centre of the National Radiological Protection Board in Glasgow is equipped to measure total alpha, beta and gamma activity in samples and analyses for individual radionuclides, after radiochemical separation if necessary, by alpha and gamma spectrometry. The centre and nuclear sites in Scotland use similar techniques and equipment.

Radiation

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the doses in sieverts as a direct result of the Chernobyl disaster received by (a) the critical population in Scotland, (b) children under the age of 12 years and (c) pregnant women.

Mr. Ancram: Preliminary estimates of the radiation doses received by the population of the United Kingdom from the Chernobyl accident have been published by the National Radiological Protection Board. The Board's assessment, which took into account monitoring information obtained over Scotland, considered doses received by adults and one year old children representative of individual members of the population. To allow for the variation from one area to another in the amount of activity deposited, separate assessments were made for southern and northern areas. Those for northern areas are appropriate to Scotland.

The Board's results show that the representative doses due to the Chernobyl incident to people in northern areas, in the year May 1986 to April 1987, are 0·9 millisieverts* for a 1 year old child and 0·3 millisieverts* for an adult. Doses to children aged between one and 12 years will be less than those to one year olds because the significance of ingestion of radio-activity in milk decreases with age. Doses to adults are representative of those received by pregnant women.

* 1 millisievert = 10^{-3} sieverts.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the annual wholebody dose implied by the figure cited in the answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 227, for the committed dose for the thyroids of Glasgow children; and what are the consequential implications for the excess cancer deaths total among children presently aged under 15 years.

Mr. John MacKay: The annual wholebody dose implied by the figures contained in the answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 227, was 90 microsieverts. All the measurements taken were below this level. Indeed 80 per cent. of the children examined were found to have activity levels below the detection threshold of the apparatus used.

The most probable outcome is that no additional cancer deaths amongst children presently aged under 15 years will have been incurred.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, using figures for the levels of radioactivity to which the Scottish population were exposed as a result of the Chernobyl disaster, he will estimate the number of excess fatal cancers expressed per 10,000 population, expected to occur over the next 35 years amongst the Scottish population so exposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave him on 23 May at column 227.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are any plans to establish further sites for monitoring radioactivity in Scotland operated by the National Radiological Protection Board.

Mr. John MacKay: The National Radiological Protection Board is presently reviewing their monitoring arrangements in the light of the Chernobyl incident.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the fate of the cargoes of those vessels from Europe and the eastern bloc arriving at the British ports listed in the answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 306; what monitoring of radioactivity from these cargoes has been undertaken; and with what results.

Mr. John MacKay: Cargoes arriving at Scottish ports have been the subject of guidance from the Scottish Home and Health Department to environmental health officers. This specified initially that certain food items exported from the USSR and Poland on or after 26 April 1986 should be held for testing. From 13 to 31 May all foodstuffs from the Eastern bloc (excluding East Germany) were to be refused entry, in accordance with EC Regulation No. 1388/86. From 31 May until 30 September food from countries outside the European Community is to be allowed entry subject to a certificate procedure which is being applied to specified food items from all the Eastern bloc countries (including East Germany and Yugoslavia), Austria and Sweden, in accordance with EC Regulation No. 1707/86.

The fate of particular cargoes is not routinely recorded. The food cargoes amongst those listed in the reply of my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury on 22 May were of products harvested before 26 April and fish, which would carry no risk to public health. Environmental health officers have indicated that only one cargo (cement received in Caithness) was tested for radioactivity with a negative result.

Environmental Pollution (Bonnybridge)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in view of recent representations made to him, he will reconsider his decision not to establish an independent public inquiry into environmental pollution and associated human and animal health problems within a radius of 20 miles of Bonnybridge, Stirlingshire.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend considers that the recent representations made to him contained no substantive evidence which would justify reconsidering the earlier decision.

Drumglass Farm, Croy

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 30 October 1985, Official Report, column 544 if any of his officers have carried out an animal morbidity investigation at the Drumglass farm, Croy.

Mr. John MacKay: A preliminary clinical investigation was carried out by my officers in 1984. This preceded the detailed investigations by the East and West Scotland colleges of agriculture referred to in my reply of 30 October 1985.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 30 October 1985, Official Report, column 544, if he will list the animal health matters which are dealt with by his Department.

Mr. John MacKay: Under the Transfer of Functions (Animal Health) Order 1955 my right hon. and learned Friend has specific responsibility in Scotland for matters relating to brucellosis melitensis, epizootic abortion, tuberculosis and warble fly and for animal imports. In addition he is responsible for health matters under the Artificial Insemination of Cattle (Animal Health) (Scotland) Regulations 1985 and has certain welfare powers under the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about the methodology used in compiling the Lenihan report on animal morbidity in the Denny, Bonnybridge area.

Mr. MacKay: I have had no recent representations on this particular subject.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 30 October 1985, Official Report, column 542, if he will provide the number of stock purchased from the dispersal sale at Household farm, Larbert, the numbers of those which suffered from animal health problems, and number of stock remaining, and the numbers of those which died from animal health problems; and if he will name the farms which were the recipients of the sale from Household.

Mr. John MacKay: A total of 196 cattle were purchased at the Household dispersal sale. The 37 purchasers included dealers, where the ultimate destination of the animals is unknown, as well as farmers. Information on the present whereabouts of the cattle and of their state of health is not available.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 25 October 1985, Official Report, column 285, whether he will make available a list of the public and private organisations concerned with animal welfare and wildlife conservation throughout Scotland who co-operated with the Wildlife incident investigation at Agricultural Scientific Services, East Craigs; and if he will publish a report of their investigations into animal mortality since 1973.

Mr. John MacKay: The organisations which have co-operated with the wildlife incident investigation service during the period 1973 to 1985 are set out in the list.

Summaries of the work of the wildlife incident investigation service are published each year in the annual report "Agriculture in Scotland" prepared by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make available the evidence supplied to the Leniham review group by the individuals and organisations detailed in appendix 2 of the report.

Mr. John MacKay: Since the evidence was supplied for the information and use of the review group, which was an independent body, and the group drew on the evidence in preparing its extensive report, which was published, it is not for the Secretary of State to take it on himself to publish that evidence.

Generating Stations (Discharges)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 29 October 1985, Official Report, column 471, what response he has had from his inspectorate about discharges from generating stations.

Mr. Ancram: The inspectorate's investigations are not yet complete.

Waste Incineration

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 29 October 1985, Official Report, column 471, whether he will report on his Department's study of waste incineration operations in Sweden.

Mr. Ancram: The study of waste incineration operations in Sweden is not complete but the information available demonstrates that combustion efficiency of the plants surveyed was high and that the emission to the atmosphere of organic compounds such as dioxins and furans was acceptably low.

Re-Chem

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, pursuant to the answers of 29 October 1985, Official Report, column 471, and 30 October 1985, Official Report, column 545, concerning obtaining information from present and former employees of Re-Chem and the operation of the incinerator at that plant on specific days, he has obtained any further information on these matters.

Mr. Ancram: No.

Epidemiological Investigations

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 30 October 1985, Official Report, column 546, and in view of continued reports of ill health of farmers, farm workers and their families, if he will undertake systematic epidemiological investigations.

Mr. John MacKay: Work is proceeding to implement the recommendations of the Independent Review Group chaired by Professor Lenihan, which examined features of morbidity recorded in the Bonnybridge Denny area. All the further studies which were recommended are now being undertaken. I do not consider that additional epidemiological investigation is called for at this stage.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 29 October 1985, Official Report, column 472, concerning contamination by toxic waste, whether he will seek a copy of the results of the tests for heavy metals.

Mr. Ancram: The results of the tests requested by the farmer have been published in the scientific press and are readily available to all, including the Government.

Human and Animal Health

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) pursuant to the answer of 30 October 1985, Official Report, column 546, he will give an up-to-date report on the further actions he is pursuing in the furtherance of the recommendations arising out of the Lenihan report;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 24 October 1985, Official Report, column 230, when he expects to receive advice on toxicology from the independent committee; and if he will publish the results of the committee's findings in a form accessible and intelligible to the non-scientific public;

(3) when the committee on eye defects commenced its work; how many meetings it has held; what progress has been made; what results it can report; and if those results will be made available to the public in a form accessible and intelligible to the non-scientific public;

(4) pursuant to the answer of 24 October 1985, Official Report, column 230, concerning toxicological assessment, if he will (a) advise when the expert committees will be publishing their assessments and (b) publish the results of their assessments.

Mr. John MacKay: Work is in hand to implement those recommendations of the Lenihan report which require further action.

With regard to toxicological assessment no reports from the relevant committees are yet available. When they have finished their work, the Government will examine their advice and consider what further action is required, bearing in mind the need for well-presented information on this subject.

A working group on microphthalmos first met on 26 April 1985 and three meetings have been held. A study under the direction of the Working Group is currently being carried out by an epidemiologist from the University of Edinburgh to examine the incidence of microphthalmos in the Forth Valley health board area. This study involves careful examination of a wide variety of records such as neo-natal morbidity registers, school health records and health records and is unlikely to be completed before the end of the year. When the working group have received the results of the study they will consider how to make them available in a form understandable to the non-scientific public.

Further soil samples have been taken in the Bonnybridge area, and from a number of other locations in the central belt of Scotland. The results obtained from the analysis of these samples will in due course be considered along with the results of soil sampling being undertaken over many areas of the United Kingdom for anyalysis by techniques developed as a result of current research.

Waste disposal practices in Scotland are being examined to ascertain if any improvements need be introduced in the light of experience gained by the Hazardous Waste Inspectorate and in the light of a review being undertaken by the special waste regulations. A paper has been issued seeking views on the operation of the general nuisance provisions of the Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 23 October 1985, Official Report, columns 176-77, if he will give the details of the hours his officials have spent between 1980 and 1985, inclusive, interviewing (a) farmers in central Scotland who had reported suspicions that their livestock had been affected by environmental pollution and (b) farmers whom his officials considered to be at risk from or affected by environmental pollution.

Mr. John MacKay: Throughout the period, members of the state veterinary service have carried out a number of welfare visits. Interviews relating to environmental pullution were, however, entirely confined to the period 1982-84 covered by my previous answer.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 24 October 1985, Official Report, column 236, about unexplained animal deaths (a) if he will list by postal code within the Central region the areas where the 511 unexplained deaths occurred and (b) if he will also provide an up-to-date report by the same method.

Mr. John MacKay: The 511 sudden unexplained deaths given in my previous answer occurred in the period commencing 1 January 1982 and ending on 30 June 1985. A breakdown of these figures (updated to December 1985) on a parish basis is as set out in the table:

Milk (Direct Sales)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 23 October 1985, Official Report, column 175, he will list the names of the 14 farms selling milk direct to the general public as well as or instead of through the Scottish Milk Marketing Board and the relevant postal code for each farm.

Mr. John MacKay: No. This is commercial information held not by Government but by the Scottish milk marketing board with whom producer-retailers are registered.

Dairy Cattle (Disease)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make available the statistics for cases of fat cow syndrome and ragwort poisoning among dairy cattle from 1979 to 1986 inclusive in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Scotland and (c) the Central region;

(2) if he will make available the cases of death among dairy cattle from fat cow syndrome and ragwort poisoning from 1975 to 1986 inclusive in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Scotland and (c) the Central region.

Mr. John MacKay: Neither fat cow syndrome nor ragwort poisoning is a notifiable ailment. Statistics on such cases are not, therefore, available.

Organic Environmental Contaminants

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) pursuant to the answer of 24 October 1985, Official Report, columns 232-3, if he will give details of the advice of the working party on organic environmental contaminants in food and the action he intends to take;

(2) if he will take steps to lay down guidelines for the maximum allowable content of polychlorinated biphenyls, polychlorinated dibenzodioxins especially 2, 3, 7, 8 tetrachlorodibenzodioxins, and polychlorinated dibenzofurans in milk for human consumption.

Mr. John MacKay: The working party on organic environmental contaminants in food was set up by the steering group on food surveillance on 11 October 1985, and its preliminary work has begun. The need for guidelines on such contaminants, in relation to food in general and milk in particular, will be considered in the light of the advice to be given by the working party and of other research in this field.

Toxic Emissions

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 23 October 1985, Official Report, column 177, concerning toxic emissions, if he will make a statement on the estimated date of completion of the report by the Warren Spring laboratory; and if he will make the information available to the public.

Mr. Ancram: I understand that individual reports on investigations into emission from a number of municipal incinerators are to be published by the Warren Spring laboratories during the course of the next few months.

Soil, Vegetation and Animal Tissue (Analysts)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 24 October 1985, Official Report, columns 232-5, if he will state the exact date when the Strathclyde regional chemist commenced undertaking analyses for polychlorinated biphenyls, polychlorinated terphenyls, polybrominated byplenys, dioxins and furans.

Mr. Ancram: While the Strathclyde regional council's Department of the regional chemist may have undertaken analysis of polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) for some time, I understand that the first samples taken for analysis of dioxins in addition to polychlorinated biphenyls was on 3 April 1984.

Nurses (Geriatric Patients)

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many nurses are in post in each health board area for the nursing of geriatric patients.

Mr. Rifkind: The whole-time equivalent numbers of trained nurses and nursing auxiliaries employed in geriatric hospitals and in long-stay units mainly for geriatric patients at 30 September 1985* are as follows:

Health board	Trained nurses (whole-time equivalent)	Nursing auxiliaries (whole-time equivalent)
Argyll and Clyde	165·6	278·2
Ayrshire and Arran	181·5	238·6

Statistics of nurses in training at these hospitals are not available. Geriatric patients are also nursed in general and geriatric beds in general and teaching hospitals, but the number of nursing staff involved cannot be separately identified.

District Nurses

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many district nurses are available in each health board area to visit elderly and sick people in their own homes.

Mr. Rifkind: The whole-time equivalent number of district nurses available in each health board area in Scotland at 30 September 1985* is as follows:

Number of District Nurses expressed as Whole-time equivalents

Health Board	Number
Argyll and Clyde	163·0
Ayrshire and Arran	97·5

The figures exclude community nurses (655·2 whole-time equivalents) who combine midwifery, district nurse and health visitor duties.

In 1985, 58 per cent. of visits by district nurses were to people aged 75 years and over and 81 per cent. to people aged 65 years and over.

Elderly People (Accommodation)

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many elderly people are presently accommodated in local authority and voluntary old people's homes in each regional council area of Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: Information available in relation to all registered homes (voluntary and private) is as follows:

Teachers (Physical Education Training)

Mr. Roy Jenkins asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment has been made of the relative financial consequences to the Scottish Education Department if the physical education training of secondary teachers in Scotland was to be (a) concentrated in one institution in the east of Scotland, (b) concentrated in one institution in the west of Scotland or (c) continued to be provided both in the east and west of Scotland but with male and female teachers on each site.

Mr. Rifkind: I am at present considering future arrangements for the training of physical education teachers, including relevant educational and financial factors, in the light of (a) the requirement under section 4 of the Further Education Act 1985 to end the separate training of men and women, and (b) the recommendation in the report by the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council (Cmnd. 9676) for wider rationalisation of the teacher training sector. I shall make a further statement in due course.

Doctors (Geriatric Patients)

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many doctors with specialist qualifications are in post in each health board area for the treatment of geriatric patients.

Mr. Rifkind: The number of consultants engaged wholly in geriatric medicine in Scotland as at 30 September 1985 is set out below. (Whole-time equivalent numbers are given in brackets). Geriatric patients are also treated by consultants in many other specialties.

Day Centres for the Elderly

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide local authorities responsible for day centres for the elderly with additional resources to maintain and expand the service.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer to the reply given on 11 July 1985 at column 519.

The number of day centre places provided by local authorities has risen from 1,845 in 1984 to 2,204 in 1985. In addition, places in centres provided by voluntary agencies rose from 2,676 to 3,100. It is for local authorities to determine priorities, but the Government's planning figures for social work services will continue to take the needs of the elderly into account.

Russian Language (Examinations)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils were presented for O grade and higher Russian in each year since 1979 in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested for the years 1979 to 1985 can be found in the Scottish Examination Board's annual reports for these years, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library. Provisional figures obtained from the Board for 1986 are as follows:

Examination	Number of presentations
Russian O (Traditional and alternative)	165
Russian H	62

These figures may include some candidates who were not pupils at school.

Steel (Statistics)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the total output of steel, and (b) the output of various categories of steel from plants in Scotland in the last year for which figures are available and for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have been asked to reply.

The following is the information on (a) crude steel production for the years 1979 to 1985 and (b) output of steel by category for the years 1979 to 1984, in Scotland:

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have been asked to reply.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

77. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes the Government plan to make to the system of rebates presently paid to local authorities for cash paid out in housing benefit.

Mr. Major: Changes are proposed in the arrangements for subsidising local authorities' housing benefit expenditure as part of the proposals for the reform of the housing benefits scheme. Our objectives for the revised subsidy arrangements are to provide more incentives than now for local authorities to monitor and control costs whilst providing a fair level of support for expenditure which they properly incur.

For benefit costs we originally proposed that 20 per cent. of benefit expenditure should be included in the rate support grant system with the remaining costs attracting a direct subsidy. Preliminary work on the effects of this proposal has indicated that it would not meet our objectives. We are therefore considering alternative ways of achieving the desired results and will be putting further proposals to the local authority interests.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to reduce the housing benefit claimed by those who are unemployed and living in rented accommodation.

Mr. Major: We have no plans to reduce housing benefit specifically for unemployed people living in rented accommodation, although we intend to reduce overall expenditure on the scheme in 1988 as part of the social security reforms.

Childhood Dysfunction

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what training general practitioners are given in diagnosing early childhood dysfunction.

Mr. Whitney: All medical students receive paediatric training within guidelines laid down by the General Medical Council. Paediatric experience is listed as a priority in the vocational training for doctors wishing to become general practitioners. In addition, a variety of postgraduate training courses is available to general practitioners on the clinical content of child development.

Abortions

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 140, relating to the number of abortions, to what factors he attributes the trend shown by the relevant figures.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since my earlier reply to my hon. Friend the relevant figures for the final two quarters of 1985 have been published. The completed table is as follows:

Legal abortions to resident women aged under 16, England and Wales
Number and rates per 1,000 women 1984 to 1985

Quarter	1984		1985
	Number	*Rate per 1,000 women	Number	*Rate per 1,000 women
March	1,067	1·43	985	1·32
June	973	1·30	925	1·24
September	1,017	1·36	960	1·29
December	1,048	1·41	1,030	1·38
Total†	4,158	5·58	4,002	5·37

* The rates (per 1,000 women) for the under 16 age group are based on the population of women aged 14-15. The denominator is the mid 1984 estimated resident population figure.
† Includes late notifications, 53 in 1984 and 102 in 1985, not assigned to any quarter.

The slight fall in the rate of abortions in 1985 compared with 1984 is insufficient on its own to indicate a trend.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action has been taken to improve the training of his Department's staff in the recognition and appropriate handling of mentally ill clients.

Mr. Major: The initial and subsequent developmental training of all the Department's Social Security local office staff who deal with the public, is geared to the recognition and appropriate handling of clients with particular problems, including the mentally ill.

To reinforce this message, in April this year, a specially commissioned video training package entitled "Ready, Willing and Able" was issued for use to all local offices. The aim of the material is to produce a heightened awareness of the differing needs of clients with disabilities, and to provide practical advice on improving the service provided. It includes specific coverage of the particular needs of people with mental handicaps. The video film was produced with the valued assistance of several voluntary organisations, including MENCAP, and the film commentary was read by Sir Brian Rix.

Drugs

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the cost of drugs to the National Health Service; and what further steps he has in mind to curb the escalation of such costs.

Mr. Hayhoe: As I stated in my reply to the hon. Member for Ashfield on 21 April at columns 75-76, the cost of drugs to the National Health Service in 1984-85 was £1,473 million. My general aims are to ensure that the National Health Service receives good value for money spent on drugs, through effective and economic prescribing, and that companies in the pharmaceutical industry are fairly reimbursed for the drugs which they supply to the service.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 12 March, Official Report, columns 516-18, relating to the incidence of cancer of the cervix between 1965 and 1982, to what factors he attributes the trend shown by the figures; and what steps are being taken to seek to reverse it.

Mr. Hayhoe: An increase in the number of registrations of carcinoma-in-situ of cervix uteri is to be expected because more women are attending for smear tests. The number of smear tests taken increased from 765,000 to 3 million over the same period. I am advised that the overall fall in registrations of malignant neoplasm of the cervix uteri is likely to be the result of more women having smear tests and treatment while the disease process is in the early stages. This is the aim of the screening programme. The figures for women under the age of 35 are an indication that cancer of the cervix has become somewhat less uncommon in that age group during this period. All health authorities have been required to give priority to improving cervical cancer screening programmes, including implementation of computerised call and recall systems by April 1988.

Benefits (Grimsby)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the number of claimants in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit only, (b) supplementary benefit only, (c) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year at Department of Health and Social Security offices in Grimsby, excluding pensioner claimants and claimants with dependent children;

(2) what is the number of claimant couples with children in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit only, (b) supplementary benefit only, (c) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year in Department of Health and Social Security offices in Grimsby.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not available. These statistics are not kept routinely so that the information requested could be obtained only by a special exercise which would be disproportionately expensive.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) single payments and (b) urgent needs payments, weekly and one-off, paid to claimants who (i) are under pensionable age and are not required to register for work, (ii) persons under pensionable age required to register for work, (iii) persons over pensionable age and (x) the average rate per 1,000 claimants in (i), (ii) and (iii), (y) the average payment made to claimants in (i), (ii) and (iii) and (z) the number of claimants in (i), (ii) and (iii) with dependent children for the latest available year at Department of Health and Social Security offices in Grimsby.

Mr. Major: The following table shows, for the categories of claimants specified, numbers of single payments and urgent needs payments made in the year up to 8 April 1986 by the Grimsby local office.

Comparable information about the number of claimants with dependent children is not available.

Claimants over pensionable age.
Number of payments	17
Average rate per 1,000 claimants	2

The amounts of urgent needs payments are not recorded.

The number of awards of single payments and urgent needs payments for the year ending 8 April 1986 have been set against the count of live cases in action as at 6 May 1986 to arrive at a rate per 1,000 claimants. These are the latest available figures.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of claimants in receipt of (a) sickness benefit, (b) invalidity benefit pension (c) industrial disablement benefit and (d) non-contributory invalidity benefit and higher non-contributory invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance for the latest available year at Department of Health and Social Security offices in Grimsby.

Mr. Major: The numbers of claimants in receipt of sickness benefit, invalidity benefit-pension and severe disablement allowance on 3 June 1986, and in receipt of industrial disablement benefit on 11 February 1986 (the latest dates for which information is available) at the Department's local office in Grimsby were as follows:

	Number
Sickness and invalidity benefit pension	3,988
Severe disablement allowance	1,003
Industrial disablement benefit	1,033

Separate records are not kept of the number of claimants in receipt of sickness benefit and invalidity benefit-pension. Both housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension and non-contributory invalidity pension were replaced by severe disablement allowance from 29 November 1984.

Social Security (Computerisation)

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is able to report the outcome of his recent exercise in inviting tenders for the supply of computer terminals for the computerisation of social security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: A contract for computer terminals and associated equipment has been awarded to British Telecom. I made clear in the White Paper on the "Reform of Social Security" that we are committed to bringing the benefits of new technology to the service of the social security system. The Department's computerisation programme, the Operational Strategy, will help us to process claims and enquiries more efficiently than at present. The equipment contract awarded today to British Telecom is a fundamental part of that programme. The terminals will connect authorised staff in local social security offices to central computers by secure communications links. Claimant confidentiality will be fully maintained and the system will comply with the provisions of the Data Protection Act.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to make regulations on disclosure of information by occupational pension schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: I have today laid regulations on disclosure of information which will come into effect on 1 November this year. The regulations introduce important new rights for members of occupational pension schemes who will be able to receive full details of how their pension fund is invested as well as statements showing the individual pension rights they have built up in a scheme.

In addition, members and their spouses will have access to a scheme's legal documentation and all new members will, on joining a scheme, receive basic information about it rules. Most schemes will have to produce an annual report which will contain its audited accounts and a statement by a qualified actuary showing whether the funding of the scheme is adequate to meet all its pension liabilities. These measures are aimed at improving protection for members of occupational pension schemes and providing them with information on which to make informed choices about future pension provision. We intend to make regulations under the current Social Security Bill which will extend the provisions on disclosure of information to members of personal pension schemes. When we do so, we shall be giving further consideration to the kinds of individual benefit statement which should be available to members of both occupational and personal pension schemes.

Mental Patients

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many patients were released into the community from mental hospitals in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985;

(2) how many patients released into the community from mental hospitals subsequently committed suicide in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985;

Mr. Whitney: I regret that I cannot give the hon. Member all the information he seeks. Information on numbers of patients discharged into the community is not collected centrally in precisely the form requested, and there is no centrally available data on the numbers of people who commit suicide after discharge from hospital.

Statistics of the total number of discharges (including transfers) from mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units are available in the series of DHSS booklets "Mental Health Statistics for England", copies of which are in the Library. However, the statistics show that the great majority of discharges follow length of stay of less than six months, usually for short-term care and treatment or family respite. An indication of the number of people who have been settled in the community after, in effect, living in hospital, is given in the table. Some of these people may require to be readmitted for a time, for example because of changes in their condition.

Discharges from mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units in England after durations of stay of 5 years or more.*

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the incidence of suicide amongst patients released into the community from mental hospitals.

Mr. Whitney: Apart from two enquiries about the incidence of suicide amongst patients discharged from mental hospitals, we have received no representations on this subject.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those forms, pamphlets and leaflets

Rent and Rates (Rebates and Allowances)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Lambeth are now receiving rent and rate rebates and rent allowances and as to how many are certificated claims.

Mr. Major: On the basis of estimates supplied by Lambeth borough council, in connection with their latest housing benefit subsidy claim the number of people receiving rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates is:

	Certificated	Standard
Rent rebates	17,500	4,600
Rent allowance	7,784	3,860
Rate rebates	26,498	9,880

Birth Registration (Wales)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to in which counties of Wales it is possible for parents to register the birth of their children through the medium of Welsh; and in which counties this is not possible because there are no registration officers who understand Welsh.

Mr. Whitney: Bilingual birth registration facilities are available in every county in Wales as there is at least one registration officer who can understand and write Welsh in each of the eight counties.

Leukaemia Patients

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will institute research into the incidence of leukaemia patients who have been recorded as dying from other causes in the years 1979 to 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Not at present. I am advised that it is technically feasible to link data already collected on leukaemia registrations and subsequent causes of death, and consideration would be given to sponsoring such research if a worthwhile proposal was made.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Government statistics concerning deaths from leukaemia are compiled solely from cause of death as stated on death certificates.

Mr. Whitney: No, not solely. Mortality statistics for deaths from leukaemia are compiled from the underlying cause of death as stated on the medical certificate of cause of death (or the coroner's certificate) and from any subsequent information received from the medical practitioner concerned.

Midwifery

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on management structures for midwifery in the light of the report, "Neighbourhood Nursing—A Focus of Care."

Mr. Hayhoe: [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 66]: The report does not suggest any changes to the current management arrangements for midwifery services, although it urges closer collaboration between staff working in the community. The report has been issued for consultation along with the discussion document on primary health care.

Voluntary Organisations (Grants)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many voluntary organisations, funded by his Department, have not yet been informed of the level of their grant allocation for the financial year 1986-87; why this delay in notification has occurred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 68-9]: Hundreds of applications by and grants to voluntary organisations are dealt with each year by the Department. Applications are received and decisions are given throughout the year for a wide variety of purposes. At any time, therefore, some applications will be in the course of being processed, and the position changes continually.

ENERGY

Publications (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those leaflets, pamphlets and forms published by his Department for use in Wales which are printed in Welsh or in a bilingual Welsh-English format.

Mr. Peter Walker: To support its energy efficiency touring exhibitions and displays in Wales, the energy efficiency office has produced the leaflet "Croeso I'r Sioe Deithiol."

ENVIRONMENT

Litter

17. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail his latest proposals for the reduction of the litter problem.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 20 June at column 651.

19. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in respect of the use by local authorities of private contractors for street cleansing and litter collection.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government firmly believe that local authorities should give private contractors the opportunity of tendering for street cleansing, and will introduce legislation to require them to do so as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

Greenfield Sites

20. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to call in planning applications for permission to build on greenfield sites outside cities in which there is vacant, dormant or derelict land which could be used.

Mr. Tracey: No. We consider each case referred to us on its merits but our general approach is to call in cases only if planning issues of more than local importance arise.

Canary Wharf

21. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning applications for developments at Canary wharf are currently awaiting a decision by his Department.

Sir George Young: My Department has one planning appeal before it at the moment, relating to land known as Wood wharf.

25. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to meet the chairman of the London Docklands Development Corporation to discuss the proposed development of Canary wharf.

Sir George Young: The Secretary of State has no firm plans at present for a meeting with the chairman of the LDDC specifically to discuss these proposals. They are, however, the subject of regular liaison meetings between my Department and senior officers of the corporation.

Lead-free Petrol

22. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further incentives he plans to introduce to encourage the use of lead-free petrol.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend, the Minister for the Environment, Countryside and Local Government gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Mr. Carlisle) on 23 June 1986 at column 3.

Marine Nature Reserve

23. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is yet able to announce the creation of the first marine nature reserve.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Nature Conservancy Council is currently consulting interested parties on its detailed proposals for a marine nature reserve at Lundy. I expect to receive formal proposals in about two months. All being well, I hope the first statutory reserve will be in place by October.

Local Authorities (Capital Expenditure Controls)

24. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received in response to the consultation paper, "Review of Local Authority Capital Expenditure Controls in England and Wales."

Mrs. Rumbold: I have received around 370 representations.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

26. Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about the implications of the privatisation of the water authorities for the protection of the water environment in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

73. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning environmental safeguards relating to plans to privatise the water industry.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received concerning the environmental consequences of privatising the water industry.

Mr. John Patten: A number of representations have been received in response to our consultation paper "The Water Environment: The Next Steps". The consultation period is not yet finished and I look forward to receiving further comments which will be carefully considered.

28. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received to the White Paper, "Privatisation of the Water Authorities in England and Wales."

Mr. John Patten: My Department has received 305 letters from organisations and others interested following publication of the White Paper.

44. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the implications of the proposed privatisation of the water authorities for the consumer and employees in the water industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I have today given to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery).

The broad principles for consumer consultation were set out in section 4 of the White Paper, "Privatisation of the Water Authorities in England and Wales" (Cmnd. 9734). I propose to publish a paper setting out in more detail the arrangements we propose. Copies of this will be sent to the organisations most closely concerned and will also be available on request from my Department.

59. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest assessment of the timetable for the privatisation of the water authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsburg) and for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims).

66. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the organisations that have responded to the White Paper, "Privatisation of the Water Authorties in England and Wales."

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I have today given to the hon. Member for Sheffied, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery). It is for those commenting to make it known if they wish that they have done so, and to make their views public.

Domestic Rates

27. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what he expects to be the effect on retired people who are ratepayers of the implementation of the Government's proposals on the reform of the domestic rating system.

Mrs. Rumbold: On average, pensioner households would gain from our proposals. The benefit would be greatest for single pensioners, where 85 per cent. would pay less under a community charge system than under domestic rates.

Local Authorities (Capital Receipts)

29. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the total amount of money held by local authorities in capital receipts.

Mrs. Rumbold: I gave the figures for the end of 1984-85, which are the latest available, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Lawler) on 9 June at column 19.

Stoke Garden Festival

30. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress to date of the Stoke garden festival.

Sir George Young: The National Garden Festival 1986 is being held on the site of the former Shelton steelworks in Stoke-on-Trent. Her Majesty the Queen declared the festival open on 8 May and it closes to the public on 26 October. The site was reclaimed with derelict land grant from my Department. Organisation of the festival is in the hands of a company established for that purpose by my Department, the City of Stoke-on-Trent district council and Staffordshire county council. Capital funding of £12·5 million for the festival has been provided by these bodies, together with £5 million raised as sponsorship from industrial and commercial firms, public and voluntary agencies. Revenue costs are being met by the two local authorities, and the Manpower Services Commission's Community Programme is making a major contribution.

Since the Festival opened, nearly 500,000 visitors have been received, in spite of adverse weather during May and the first half of June. The national garden festival is a tribute to the energy and ingenuity with which north Staffordshire and the midlands generally have responded to the challenge of mounting the United Kingdom's premier visitor attraction for 1986. As the second in the series of national garden festivals which the Government has announced, NGF 86 is well worth a visit, and I commend it to my hon. Friend and all hon. Members.

Nuclear Waste

18. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received concerning the disposal of nuclear waste.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a wide range of representations from hon. Members and others recently. Most have concerned NIREX's proposals to investigate potential sites for the disposal of low-level radioactive waste.

Commonwealth Games, Edinburgh

31. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, whether he will make an official visit to the Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend has no plans for this at present. However, I plan to visit the Games for the opening ceremony on 24 July, and thereafter from 28 July to 2 August. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has the primary responsibility for the Games within the Government.

Homeless Persons

32. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received in the last 12 months about the plight of homeless households living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation; what steps his Department has taken to alleviate this problem; and what action he now proposes to take to reduce the number of homeless households and to enforce reasonable standards in such accommodation.

Sir George Young: Such representations have focused mainly on the use of bed and breakfast accommodation, standards, length of stay, and provision of educational, health and social services. Action on such matters is largly for the local authorities concerned. My Department has, recently been involved in a number of ways, including improving the manner in which local homelessness is reflected in resource allocations to local authorities, advising them on the use of their powers. Grant-aiding relevant voluntary bodies and commissioning research into authorities' operation of the legislation. The possibility of further measures to encourage fuller use of other accommodation, reduce reliance on bed and breakfast, and improve standards in houses in multiple occupation is under constant consideration.

Ancient Monuments

33. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to alter his legal powers to deter damaging intrusions on to the sites of ancient monuments.

Mr. Tracey: Responsibility for safeguarding most public monuments rests with the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to alter his powers under the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979 or under the National Heritage Act 1983. I understand, however, that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is discussing with the police and with other interested parties whether any strengthening of the general law is required to deal with problems caused by travelling convoys which sometimes represent a threat to ancient monuments.

Housing Repairs

34. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now seek resources to effect long-term repairs to the public and private housing stocks.

Sir George Young: I look forward to a greatly increased involvement by the private sector in solving the present problems of disrepair in public housing. The private sector already has the predominant role in dealing with disrepair in private housing. Levels of public expenditure for 1987-88 will be decided and announced in the usual way.

Local Authority Services

35. Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to introduce legislation based on the Green Paper, "Competition in the Provision of Local Authority Services"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 21 May 1986 at column 356, by my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave).

Local Government Finance

36. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Leicestershire county council about his Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received two submissions from Leicestershire county council. I understand that copies were sent to my hon. Friend.

37. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the local authorities and organisations that have responded to the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

53. Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities and organisations that have responded to the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

70. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses have been received by his Department to the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

77. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about the Government's proposals for the reform of local government finance.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I have received over 400 written responses about our proposals for the reform of local finance from local authorities, other organisations, businesses and the general public. The consultation period continues until 31 October. We will publish a full list of respondents after that.

Housing Policy (Mortgages)

38. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Raynsford) of 10 June, Official Report, columns 129-30, if he plans any further initiatives in housing policy in the light of the upward trend in the number of home-owners who have defaulted on mortgage repayments; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Housing policy is kept under review in the light of relevant circumstances.

Thames Water Authority

39. Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the progress of his plans to privatise the Thames water authority.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) and for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims).

Local Authority Land

40. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his latest initiatives to persuade local authorities to dispose of their surplus land.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend is keeping up the pressure on public bodies, including local authorities, to bring idle land back into use or to dispose of it, by means of regular batches of notices under section 99 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. These give notice of his proposals to direct them under section 98 of the Act to take steps to dispose of particular sites. So far 115 such notices have been issued, and, where appropriate, these are followed by directions.

In addition, we have made it simpler for those seeking sites to consult the land register by reproducing the entries on a computer data base that may be interrogated from terminals in London, Birmingham, and Newcastle upon Tyne.

My right hon. Friend has invited the public to draw to his attention unused and underused sites which they believe are owned by public bodies and should be included on the land register. He has also invited them to request him to use his powers to direct the disposal of land that is registered.

Since the land register was started, over 17,000 acres of land owned by local authorities have been brought back into use or sold, and altogether 38,000 acres owned by public bodies have been removed from the register.

Sports Sponsorship (Tobacco Companies)

41. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on Government policy towards the sponsorship of sporting events by tobacco companies.

Mr. Tracey: The Government welcome and encourage commercial sponsorship of sport. It is also concerned to limit the advertising and promotion of cigarettes because of the health risks associated with smoking. The Government continue to believe that the tobacco companies' activities associated with sports sponsorship should be within the framework of a voluntary agreement with the industry.

The current agreement fell due for reconsideration at the end of last year. I am currently negotiating a new agreement with the industry. In doing so, I shall take account of the revised voluntary agreement on cigarette advertising which the sponsorship agreement supports; the advice which I have received from interested bodies; and the concerns which have been expressed to me by members of the public. The progress of negotiations, by agreement with the industry, is confidential.

Residuary Bodies

42. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has held with the chairmen of the residuary bodies concerning the expenditure limits and budgets for these bodies.

Mr. Tracey: Their budgets have been discussed with chairmen of the residuary bodies on various occasions, but the bodies are not subject to rate limitation.

Council Houses (Northern Region)

43. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses are empty in the northern region; and how many have been empty for more than six months.

Sir George Young: In their housing investment programme returns, local authorities in the northern region reported that 11,456 of their dwellings within their own areas were vacant on 1 April 1985; of these 10,725 belonged to the authorities in the northern housing region and 731 to those in Cumbria. Information is not collected on the numbers vacant more than six months, but 2,248 of the dwellings, of which 38 were in Cumbria, had been vacant for more than a year. In April 1985, Washington new town owned 308 dwellings that were vacant.

Dogs

45. Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has carried out into environmental and other problems caused by dogs with reference to the fouling of footpaths, parks and other open spaces; and whether he has plans to introduce legislation providing for a national dog warden scheme.

Mrs. Rumbold: Health and environmental problems associated with fouling by dogs are well known as a result of academic research and other studies; my Department has undertaken no research into the problems. It is for local authorities to decide, in the light of local circumstances, whether dog wardens should be appointed. I understand that some 200 authorities in Great Britain employ wardens. We have no plans to introduce a national dog warden schemes.

RSG Report 1986-87

46. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to publish details of the first supplementary rate support grant report for 1986-87.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 21 May at columns 354-55. As he will know, the Rate Support Grants Bill received its Second Reading in the House on Monday. Otherwise the situation remains as I stated it then.

Council House Sales

47. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations on the sale of non-sheltered council dwellings for the elderly under the right-to-buy provisions.

Sir George Young: Since the present arrangements for excluding non-sheltered elderly persons' dwellings from the right to buy came into force in August 1984, representations have been received from 20 Members of Parliament, 23 local authorities, the Association of District Councils, the Institute of Housing and the National Housing and Town Planning Council.

Newcastle City Council

48. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he refused to grant Newcastle city council disregards for the years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86, as requested by the council in a letter to him dated 24 May 1985.

Mrs. Rumbold: In my letter of 23 May 1986 to the hon. Member, I said that the Secretary of State had considered Newcastle city council's representations for disregards before signing the latest supplementary reports for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 and explained that the Secretary of State did not consider himself to be under any duty to give reasons for his decisions to refuse disregards.

Inner Cities (Development)

49. Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied with the progress of urban development corporations in stimulating development in run down inner city areas; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Yes. The two urban development corporations have together succeeded in attracting over £1 billion in private sector investment commitments to their areas since their creation in 1981. Details of the achievements of the two corporations are set out on pages 161 and 162 of volume II of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1986-87 to 1988-89" (Cmnd. 9702-II) and in the annual reports of the bodies themselves.

Local Authority Housing

50. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied with the action of local authorities to reduce the numbers of empty dwellings in their possession.

Sir George Young: No. The number of empty local authority dwellings has increased in recent years and dwellings are empty for too long between tenancies. The Audit Commission estimates that a reduction in the average re-letting period of 2½ weeks — by better management and the streamlining of re-letting procedures — should be readily achieveable and that an additional 20,000 lettings could be made.

51. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he is taking to assist local authorities to meet the need for new homes and for the improvement of the housing stock.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend will be discussing with the local authority associations shortly in the housing consultative council their views about their role in housing and the requirements for future expenditure.

61. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to help improve the management of large public sector housing estates.

Sir George Young: In addition to the assistance provided by the Department through its housing services advisory unit, its research programme and support for housing management education and training. The urban housing renewal unit and the priority estates project consultants are working with local authorities to introduce more effective estate-based management. The provisions in the Housing and Planning Bill will enable the Department to promote the delegation of housing management to a range of locally-based bodies, increased tenant participation and to provide further support for housing management education training and innovation.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate of the shortfall between the demand and the supply of public rented accommodation to meet both general and special needs, which cannot be met by other means; and if he will give this information for England as a whole and for each regional area of his Department.

Sir George Young: My Department does not make any overall estimates of this kind.

Housing Repair Grant

52. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to reduce the minimum age for a property to qualify for a housing repair grant; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: We have no immediate plans to do so, but we are currently considering age limits and other aspects of the grant system in the light of consultation on the home improvement green paper.

Local Authorities (Capital Receipts)

54. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now review the percentage of the proceeds from the sale of council houses that local authorities are allowed to spend each year.

Sir George Young: The prescribed proportions are reviewed each year as part of the process of arriving at decisions about public expenditure in the following year. The Government are also currently reviewing the capital control system, and decisions about the prescribed proportions for 1987-88 must await the outcome of that wider review.

Land Registers

55. Mr. Derek Conway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many land register directions he has issued in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Under section 98 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 directions to dispose of unused and underused publicly owned land entered on the land register have been made as follows:

	Number of directions
1985	21

My right hon. Friend has this year given the owners of 56 further sites notice under section 99 of the Act of his proposals to direct them to dispose of those sites. Since the register was established in mid-1981, 38,000 acres of land have been removed, for the most part because they have been sold or brought into use by their owners.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

56. Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the Nature Conservancy Council in the notification and renotification of sites of special scientific interest.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that on 31 March 1986, 2,075 SSSIs notified under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 had been renotified under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. A further 844 new sites had been notified under the 1981 Act.

The NCC has substantially completed the renotification of sites in Wales. It expects to achieve substantial completion in England by March 1987 and in Scotland by July 1987.

Urban Housing Renewal Unit

60. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the latest progress made by his urban housing renewal unit.

Sir George Young: The unit has just completed its first year and its progress is described in its first annual report which was published this month. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The report records successful collaboration with local authorities on schemes involving 23 rundown council estates, and I am pleased to announce my right hon. Friend's favourable response to proposals for a further 10 schemes submitted by the local authorities as listed.

I have agreed in principle for additional resources to be made available in 1986-87. The estates which will benefit are as follows:

Authority	Estate	Targeted UHRU HIP resources £	Targeted UHRU UP resources £	Description

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual cost of running the urban housing renewal unit; how many homes were renewed under this scheme in each of the last three years; at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The urban housing renewal unit was set up on 19 June 1985. In the financial year 1985-86 the cost of running it — including consultancies — was £362,187. The forecast cost for 1986-87 is £481,000.

In its first 12 months, the unit has concentrated on visiting over 100 local authorities to offer advice and assistance on over 200 specific estates comprising more than 80,000 homes. Nearly 50 authorities have submitted proposals to the unit in respect of some 135 estates. We have now approved package solutions for 33 estates (including 10 which I have announced today) in 23 local authorities, covering some 21,000 homes and involving £18·7 million of expenditure in 1986-87. Many more schemes are at an advanced stage of consideration.

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report on the visit by the urban housing renewal unit to Cannock Chase; and if approval has been given for funding for the Rawnsley estate.

Sir George Young: Members from the urban housing renewal unit visited Cannock Chase on 6 December last. They were impressed by the work which the Council was doing, in co-operation with the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders, to improve the environment on the Rawnsley estate and the steps which the Council were taking to introduce local housing management. The unit also discussed with the council measures to uplift the Springfield estate in Rugeley.

A decision on the council's application for additional housing investment programme resources for works to the Rawnsley estate will be made shortly.

Housing (Liverpool)

57. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to visit Liverpool to meet city council leaders to discuss the housing programme.

Mr. Ridley: I have no immediate plans to visit Liverpool. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction plans to visit the city on 2 July.

Business Rates

58. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in relation to the Government's proposals to reform the business rating system; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I continue to receive many representations on this aspect of our proposals, in particular from the business community and local authorities. It is too early to draw any conclusions from the views expressed.

Water (Nitrate Pollution)

62. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many reports he has received of nitrate levels in public water supplies exceeding the statutory limit of 50 mg in the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and if there are any indications of the general level of nitrate pollution being reduced.

Mr. John Patten: Reports have been received of 81 public water supplies where nitrate concentrations exceeded 50 mg/litre at some time during 1984. In the last few years there have been some indications of a levelling off in nitrate concentrations in surface waters.

Housing Defects

63. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with progress being made in the approval of reinstatement schemes for houses designated under the Housing Defects Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Yes; I am pleased with the recent progress made by the National House Building Council in approving repair methods. Its subsidiary company, PRC Homes Ltd, has just approved one for Orlit houses; this is in addition to the 14 repair systems already approved, covering the Airey, Cornish Unit, Unity and Woolaway types. PRC Homes Ltd has over 40 more repair systems in the pipeline, and I therefore look forward to further approvals, covering more house types, in the near future.

Housing Improvement Grants

64. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now in a position to publish a document on the response to the Green Paper on "Housing Improvement Grants".

Sir George Young: No. We are giving further consideration to the proposals in the Green Paper, in the light of consultation and will announce our conclusions in due course.

Defective Housing

65. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what increase is to be made in the amount that can be spent on repairs to houses qualifying for grant under the legislation on defective houses; and whether he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My Department is presently consulting the local authority associations and other interested groups on our proposals for revising the expenditure limit for reinstatement works attracting grant under the housing defects legislation. Our proposals are for a four-tier limit, according to likely difficulty of repair, as follows:

Group A—proposed limit £12,000
Cornish Unit with one-storey PRC elements
Tarran
Gregory

Group B—proposed limit £16,000
Cornish Unit with two-storey PRC elements
Airey
Stent
Unity and Butterley
Dorran
Myton
Newland
Stonecrete

Group C—proposed limit £20,000
Reema
Wates
Woolaway Boot
Parkinson
Smith
Underdown
Winget

Group D—proposed limit £24,000
Orlit
Dyke
Schindler and Hawksley SGS
Waller
Wessex

Any other types not listed (local designations) would remain at £14,000.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on his proposals to reduce the eligible cost limit for the repair of Cornish unit 1 houses.

Sir George Young: To date we have received representations from two local authorities concerning the proposed reduction of the housing defects eligible expenditure limit (from £14,000 to £12,000) for the Cornish unit type with one storey PRC elements.

Urban Programme

67. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received about allocations made for the current phase of the traditional urban programme.

Sir George Young: About 200, including representations from Members of Parliament.

Housing Stock

68. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the condition of the housing stock.

Sir George Young: The 1981 English house condition survey showed that out of 18·1 million dwellings 1·1 million were unfit, 0·9 million lacked basic amenities and 1 million required repairs costing more than £7,000. A more up to date picture will be provided by the 1986 survey which starts this September.

Rate Support Grant

69. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the next meeting of the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance will be held to discuss the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 19 June 1986 at column 637.

Green Belt

71. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the established green belts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: We receive many such representations. The Government's policy on proposals for development in green belts remains as set out in the Department's circular 14/84.

European Environment Committee

72. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider the appointment of a representative of the Country Landowners Association to the committee which is to co-ordinate the United Kingdom participation in the European environment.

Mrs. Rumbold: Mr. John Norris, president of the Country Landowners' Association, has been appointed to the United Kingdom's national committee for European Year of the Environment.

North West Regional Water Board

74. Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when he next meets the chairman of the North-West regional water board, he will raise with him the matter of environmental safeguards in the water industry.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of the North West water authority on 20 June. I shall also be meeting him next week when we will be discussing a wide range of matters, which will certainly include environmental concerns.

Carsington Reservoir

75. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he can now indicate the date on which he expects the final report from Mr. Roy Coxon on the future of Carsington reservoir.

Mr. John Patten: Mr. Coxon has substantially completed his report upon the failure during construction of the reservoir embankment at Carsington. I will inform my hon. Friend as soon as the report is available.

Manor Farm, Swalcliffe

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he anticipates being able to come to a decision on proposals for the Manor Farm outbuildings and tithe barn at Swalcliffe.

Mr. Tracey: There are at present no proposals concerning the Manor Farm outbuildings and tithe barn at Swalcliffe before my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Community Refurbishment

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many community refurbishment schemes have received Government support in each of the last three years; at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Since 1982-83, 12 community refurbishment schemes (CRS) have been launched on Merseyside and have benefited from funding under my Department's urban programme and from the Manpower Services Commission, totalling together about £16·5 million so far. Expenditure from 1982-83 to 1985-86 is set out in more detail as follows. It is not possible without disproportionate effort to provide details of the MSC's contribution by financial years. The MSC figures represent costs for the completed schemes or projections to the end of 1986.

On 5 August 1985 my right hon. Friend announced that, following the success of CRS on Merseyside, the Government had decided to extend the initiative to provide for pilot schemes in six other conurbations:

London
The West Midlands
The North East and areas centred on Leeds/Bradford
Manchester
Sheffield

Since then, as one of the initiatives being pursued by the urban housing renewal unit, my right hon. Friend has given approval in principle to urban programme funding for CRS in Calderdale, Coventry, Gateshead, Bradford, Leeds, Hull, Wigan, Blackburn, and Hyndburn. In the current financial year, the level of urban programme support for these schemes from my Department is likely to be in the region at £1·69 million.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total administrative cost since 1979 of planning appeals caused by referrals from the Ministry of Defence because local planning authorities have refused planning permission to the Ministry's planning applications.

Mr. Tracey: I regret that the information requested is not readily available.

Conservation (Compensation)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to amend the legislation governing the conservation of the countryside, with particular reference to compensation payments to landowners, in the light of the recent Lands Tribunal ruling awarding compensation in respect of Iffen Wood against Canterbury district council; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have not yet received the transcript of the Lands Tribunal's decision, but will study its implications urgently when it is available.

Furans and Dioxins

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to the answer of 29 October 1985, Official Report, column 385, if he will report on the conclusions of the Warren Spring laboratory investigations into the content of dioxins and furans in the flue gases from municipal incinerators;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 21 October 1985, Official Report, column 96, concerning stack emissions, if he will give details of the date of publication of the investigations referred to in the answer.

Mrs. Rumbold: Results so far available from tests carried out by Warren Spring laboratory on flue gas emissions from municipal incinerators show that trace amounts of polychlorinated dioxins and polychlorinated dibenzofurans are produced. The levels are below air quality standards currently in use worldwide. A full report will be published later this year.

Polychlorinated Biphenyl Wastes

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 29 October 1985, Official Report, column 386, concerning guidance on polychlorinated biphenyl wastes, when he now expects to publish revised guidance.

Mrs. Rumbold: Work on an extended and updated version of Waste Mangement Paper No. 6 on polychlorinated biphenyl wastes is continuing. Much information is available and proper assessment of it is proving to be a lengthy process. Consultation with interested bodies is also necessary. For these reasons, and because of other commitments, publication of the revised guidance is not now likley before the end of this year.

Pollution

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to conduct a survey which will establish the background soil levels of polychlorinated biphenyls, polychlorinated terphenyls, PCDs and furans.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department is currently considering extension of the present programme of analytical work in order to include PCB determinations in the soil samples which are being examined for dioxins and furans by the University of East Anglia. This information would supplement the background data already available from other sources.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to the answer of 21 October 1985, Official Report, column 96, concerning toxic waste, on what foundation of standards the advice on incineration of polychlorinated biphenyls and other toxic wastes is based.

Mrs. Rumbold: The combustion criteria requirements for the satisfactory destruction of polychlorinated biphenyls are based on work carried out in the United States which originally appeared in "Official Standards Proposal PUB." No. CP-P1-73 and No. TR-PG-73 (section 2, page 8) of the National Electrical Manufacturers Association. They are referred to in the Department of the Environment's waste management paper No. 6 and in the United States Federal Register Vol. 44, No. 106, of 31 May 1979 (PCB Regulations 40 CFR 761.70), and include dwell time 2 secs, temperature 1200°C (±100°C), oxygen excess in stock gas 3 per cent.

As indicated in my answer to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West on 21 October 1985 at column 98 tests on behalf of Her Majesty's Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate showed very high efficiencies of combustion of PCBs in commercially available plants.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to the answer of 21 October 1985, Official Report, column 97, if he will list the areas where the three commercial high temperature incinerators are operating and the names of the companies involved.

Mrs. Rumbold: The three commercially available high temperature incinerators licensed for the disposal of polychlorinated biphenyls in the United Kingdom are located as follows:

Ellesmere Port, Cheshire—operated by Cleanaway Ltd for liquid PCB wastes only.

Pontypool, Gwent — ReChem International Ltd. for solid and liquid PCB wastes.

Fawley, Hampshire — ReChem International Ltd. licensed but not currently operated for combustion of PCBs.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the estimated costs of obtaining the information sought in the hon. Member for Falkirk, West's four questions on polychlorinated biphenyls answered on 21 October, Official Report, columns 94-7.

Mrs. Rumbold: The costs of obtaining the information in response to any four of the hon. Member's questions on polychlorinated biphenyls answered on 21 October 1985 are difficult to estimate with any precision. No individual answer is likely to have cost more than £200.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 21 October 1985, about the background levels of dioxins and furans, Official Report, column 96, if he will state (a) the research establishments conducting work in this area and (b) the estimated date of its completion.

Mrs. Rumbold: A contract was let by my Department in April 1985, to the University of East Anglia, to refine the analytical procedure for the extraction, separation and subsequent quantitative determination of dioxins and furans in soil; and then to analyse a number of soil samples to establish the range of background levels of these compounds in Great Britain. The contract is due for completion in March 1987.

Publications (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those forms, leaflets and pamphlets issued by his Department for use in Wales which are available either in Welsh or in a bilingual Welsh/English format.

Mr. Ridley: I am not aware that my Department currently has any forms, leaflets or pamphlets available in Welsh or in a Welsh/English format.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has responsibility for exercising in Wales many of the functions which I undertake in England, and for deciding in those cases on the languages in which forms, leaflets and pamphlets are provided.

Lower Leigh (Repairs)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will now list the details of work, and their estimated costs, for repair work at Lower Leigh, Churchstow, Kingsbridge, Devon, between 1975 and 1986; and why the public has not been able to visit Lower Leigh during the period in which the work has been carried out;

(2) what work has been carried out on Lower Leigh, Churchstow, Kingsbridge, Devon since 1975; at what cost; and what is the size of the work force;

(3) what is the proposed use of Lower Leigh, Churchstow, Kingsbridge, Devon, after the repair work is completed in 1990; and on what basis £350,000 of public funds has been made available;

(4) if he will list the repair work which is to be carried out by 1990 at Lower Leigh, Churchstow, Kingsbridge, Devon; and if he will make a statement as to the programme of consolidation referred to in his answer of 17 June, Official Report, column 505;

(5) why it is proposed to take 15 years to carry out the repair work at Lower Leigh, Churchstow, Kingsbridge, Devon; and from whose budget the sum involved is to be taken.

Mr. Tracey: In view of the architectural and historical importance of the buildings at Lower Leigh, my Department acquired them in 1975 and embarked on a major programme of repair and restoration. This was to include the construction of a new roof, the repair or replacement of stonework and timbers and generally to put the buildings into a safe and suitable condition for presentation to the public. The buildings cost £5,000 to acquire. The cost of the new roof was £140,000. Work on the stonework and timber will cost about £145,000, with ancillary and presentation costs amounting to £60,000.

The restoration programme is now the responsibility of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission. Most of the major structural work is complete, but it still remains for the fine detail of the stonework and timber to be completed.

The programme has proceeded as resources have permitted from within the Commission's budget for the repair and maintenance of ancient monuments. The Commission is using its own specialist labour to carry out the work.

Although the buildings are not formally open to the public, anyone wishing to see the work in progress is allowed access during normal working hours. When the work is completed the buildings will be opened as a public monument.

Rosehill Estate, Willenhall

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will receive a deputation from the tenants of Rosehill estate, Willenhall, regarding financing in the current financial year of the modernisation by Walsall metropolitan borough council of the estate;

(2) if he will state the percentage of council dwellings on the Rosehill estate, Willenhall, as accepted by his Department as requiring urgent modernisation by the Walsall metropolitan borough council, following the visit by senior officials of his Department to the estate in August 1985; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what has been the latest communication to his Department from Walsall metropolitan borough council regarding the modernisation of the Rosehill estate, Willenhall; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what land and properties on the Rosehill estate, Willenhall, his Department is asking the Walsall metropolitan borough council to sell as part of any scheme for the modernisation of the estate; and what has been the latest response of the authority to such proposals.

Sir George Young: The latest communication from Walsall metropolitan borough council regarding the Rosehill estate, Willenhall was its revised application, dated 23 May, for a further housing investment programme application from the urban housing renewal unit.

As I said in my answer of 9 June at columns 21-2 the Department sets no rigid pre-conditions for schemes to qualify for additional resources from UHRU, although local authorities are encouraged to introduce improved estate-based management and to take full advantage of any opportunities which may exist for obtaining private sector contributions to their schemes.

The council's proposals involve the modernisation of all 294 dwellings on the estate. Officers from the Department were shown a number of individual dwellings when they visited the estate and they considered that those particular dwellings were in need of some modernisation.

Officials of my Department are still discussing Walsall's revised proposals with the council, and I do not see a need to receive a deputation at this time.

Milton Keynes (Winding-up)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any recent correspondence with the Milton Keynes development corporation regarding a wind-up date; when he expects the development corporation to be officially wound up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 24 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes (Mr. Benyon).

Block Grant (Disregards)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report those items for which disregards have been requested for 1985-86 under section 8(4) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982.

Mr. Ridley: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mount Pleasant Airport

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest cost figure for Mount Pleasant airport in the Falklands; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The latest estimated cost of Mount Pleasant airport is £307 million plus £10 million for navigational aids supplied by the MOD. The airport attained full operational status on 1 May 1986 as planned. The Laing-Mowlem-ARC joint venture has performed with tremendous vigour to achieve this target and is to be congratulated.

TRANSPORT

Bridges

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many bridges on trunk roads have weight restrictions; and if any analysis is available for the number of restrictions according to gross vehicle weight.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A programme of assessing older trunk road bridges to BD21/84 will be required in order to take account of the increase in heavy vehicle traffic over the years and developments in bridge design. This is likely to result in some weight restrictions until any strengthening can be completed. A 32 tonne gross weight restriction applies to the bridge carrying the A10 over the railway at Enfield in North London, but no other trunk road bridge in England has a weight restriction at present. The gross weights of vehicles using roads are limited by construction and use regulations.

British Rail

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 17 June, if he will list the sector-wide standards set for British Rail with specific reference to train punctuality; what resources his Department devotes to the monitoring of British Rail's performance against these standards; what action he takes when the level of performance falls significantly short of these standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The sector standards referred to are set by the Railways Board and published in the Board's 1985 plan. It is desirable that the Board should achieve the standards and I have recently discussed with them in general terms what action they are taking. But detailed monitoring of performance against the standards and decisions on corrective actions where necessary is a matter for the Board themselves.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 17 June, what reasons have been supplied to him by British Rail (a) for the standard of performance achieved in relation to the number of class 1 trains arriving on time in the London Midland region and (b) for the disparities in the standard of train punctuality between different regions; and what action he has taken in response.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is primarily a management matter for the Railways Board. My right hon. Friend has not sought from the Railways Board explanations or reasons for the punctuality performance referred to by my hon. Friend. But I understand that the Board have now appointed a Performance Management team for the London Midland Region who for the time being are concentrating on improving the punctuality of the West Coast Main Line services. I understand that the results so far are encouraging.

M4 (Accident)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the fatal accident involving a van and several cars on the M4 on 23 June he will institute a review of the law governing the hiring of vans for carriage of passengers; if he is satisfied with the strength of motorway crash barriers in these circumstances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It would be premature, pending completion of police investigations, to come to conclusions on the causes of the accident or on preventative action for the future. The use of vehicles, whether on hire or otherwise, is already subject to extensive regulation under the Road Traffic Acts. I am generally satisfied with the types of safety fences used on motorways but I shall consider whether the circumstances of this case point to a need for any modifications. As with other aspects of road safety, the Department has a long term programme of research and development designed to yield improvements for the future.

Learner Drivers (Wales)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to permit those who wish to display the sign D for dysgwr in place of L for learner in Wales when learning to drive a motor vehicle.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The distinguishing mark of the novice driver, "L" is prescribed by the Motor Vehicles (Driving Licences) Regulations 1981.

However, provided that the basic requirements of the regulations are complied with, there is nothing to prevent a learner driver in Wales from displaying the letter "D" as well as the mark "L".

Level Crossing Grant

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the amount paid by his Department to British Rail under the level crossing grant for each of the last five years.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million
1981	17·4
1982	18·7
1983	18·9
*1984-85	23·0
1985-86	18·5

*15 months to 31 March 1985.

Figures for 1983 and subsequent years are subject to adjustment following audit.

Drivers' Hours and Rest Period Regulations

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations his Department has received from the Transport and General Workers Union concerning changes in the Drivers' Hours and Rest Period Regulations; what reply has been sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1986]: Since the meeting referred to in the answer given to the right hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Mason) on 6 May, I have received a further letter from the union reiterating its concerns about the proposed changes.

In response to a request from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has agreed to meet a delegation from the union.

The reply given to other representations is as follows:

Most drivers of goods vehicles above 3·5 tonnes have their driving times and rest periods controlled by the EC Regulations. In addition, within Britain, duty times (total working periods) are controlled by the Transport Act 1968.

On 29 September new EC regulations on drivers' hours and tachographs (3820/85 and 3821/85) will come into force. These regulations were agreed in Brussels last November after two years of negotiations. Although they do not fully meet all our objectives, we believe they will benefit both sides of the road haulage industry. Drivers will get more weekly rest (up from 40 to 50 hours), longer breaks (up from half to three-quarters of an hour), and less driving (down from 92 to 90 hours in a fortnight). New flexibility will permit daily driving and rest periods to be varied, subject to later compensation, to suit operational requirements. This facility will help both operators and drivers, who will have a new right to specify where compensatory rest is taken.

With the introduction of new rules on driving time and rest periods, we have had to re-examine the 1968 Act rules on duty times and "spreadover". The industry already felt strongly that to have two overlapping sets of rules complicated its operational planning; under the new regime it will be largely unnecessary. For example, allowing for a normal daily rest of 11 hours and two 45 minute breaks, a driver will have 11¼ hours available for duty, which is only half an hour more than the existing 1968 Act limit of 11 hours. To retain the existing weekly duty limit of 60 hours would prevent the use of the new EC provision which allows weekly rest to be reduced in one week provided it is compensated within the next three weeks. So we are proposing to abolish all the 1968 Act limits on duty hours in so far as they apply to driving subject to the EC rules. (The limit on daily duty will be retained for driving not subject to the EC rules).

The trade unions consider that our proposals will lead to longer working hours, increased driver fatigue and hence increased accidents. It is true that the flexible work patterns allowed by the new rules may make longer working hours possible for some drivers occasionally, but those whose main work is driving will still be subject to effective limits. There is no clearly established connection between driving hours and fatigue. The House of Lords Select Committee in its thorough scrutiny of the EC regulations was unable to establish a firm link. It recommended that drivers should be given the ability to reach home and relax properly rather than being forced to take makeshift rest in their cabs. Abolition of duty limit will give drivers more freedom to do this.

We believe that our proposals are consistent with our policy of reducing unnecessary burdens on industry while having proper regard to road safety. It will be up to trade unions and employers to negotiate together new patterns of work that would allow both drivers and operators to benefit fully from the increased flexibility now available to them.

Draft statutory instruments implementing the changes have been laid and will be subject to affirmative resolution of both houses.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General (1) what estimate he has of the numbers of (a) male and (b) female employees in employment in Great Britain who (i) work for firms with less than 20 employees and (ii) have been working for the same employer for between six months and two years;

(2) what is the most recent estimate of the numbers of (a) male and (b) female employees in employment in Great Britain who work (i) between eight and 11 hours per week and have been working for the same employer for five years' or more, (ii) between 16 and 19 hours per week and have more than two years' service but less than five years' service with the same employer; and what estimate he has of the numbers of female employees in employment in Great Britain aged between 16 and 44 years who (1) work within the hours and service categories defined in (i) and (ii) above and (2) who work for a firm with (A) five or fewer employees and (B) between six and nine employees.

Mr. Lang: The regularly published employees in employment series does not identify (i) number of hours worked per week, (ii) length of service in employment, or (iii) size of firm.

The labour force survey (LFS) provides some relevant information on a different basis. The available information from the preliminary results of the LFS for the spring of 1985 is presented in the following tables.

Table 1
Usual Number of Hours worked per week and length of time in employment

Great Britain Thousands

	Male employees	Female employees
	Aged 16 and over	Aged 16 and over	Aged 16–44
Usually work 8 but less than 12 hours per week and with same employer for 5 years or more	15	163	61
Usually work 16 but less than 20 hours per week and with same employer for at least 2 but less than 5 years	*	116	79

*Less than 10,000.

Table 2
Number of people at workplace and length of time in employment
Great Britain

Thousands

	Employees
	Male	Female
Working at workplace with less than 25 employees	3,036	3,651
Working for same employer for at least 6 months but less than 2 years	1,804	1,988

The LFS does not separately identify employees of firms of different sizes; or employees at workplaces with fewer than 20, fewer than 10, or fewer than six employees.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report the latest unemployment figures for the Leicester, East, Leicester, South and Leicester, West parliamentary constituencies, together, in each case, with the actual and percentage change over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants in the Leicester, East, Leicester, South and Leicester, West parliamentary constituencies on 8 May 1986 and the absolute and percentage change since May 1985. Comparisons over the period and between the constituencies are affected by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986.

	Unemployed claimants	Decrease since May 1985
		Number	per cent.
Leicester, East	5,547	221	4
Leicester, South	7,229	328	4
Leicester, West	6,922	362	5

Closures and Redundancies (North-West)

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if he will list the largest 20 closures or redundancies in the north-west region since 1979, giving in each instance (a) the total jobs lost, (b) the date and (c) the company name.

Mr. Lang: Information given to the Department under the redundancy handling provisions of the Employment Protection Act is given in confidence. The publication of details of individual redundancies would require the prior approval of the employer concerned, and this could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Building Workers

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what is his estimate of the number of unemployed building workers in the north-west.

Mr. Lang: The results of the 1984 labour force survey indicate that in the north-west region in the spring of 1984 there about were 28,000 people without jobs and looking for work who had been employed at some time in the last three years with their last job in the construction industry.

Redundancies

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what has been the rate of redundancies per thousand employees in 1979 and each subsequent year in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the north-west region.

Mr. Lang: The available information, relating to confirmed redundancies, is given in the following table:

Redundancies confirmed as due to occur per thousand employees in employment†*

Year	Great Britain	North West Region
1979	8	15
1980	22	35
1981	25	37
1982	19	28
1983	16	22
1984	11	16
1985	11	15

* Redundancies confirmed by the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur and are based on following up employers' notifications of redundancies involving ten or more workers under the Employment Protection Act 1975. Figures for 1985 are provisional.

† Late mid-year (June) estimates of employees in employment.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many redundancies have occurred in (a) manufacturing and (b) construction in the north-west region in each year since 1979; and what has been the percentage decline in each category.

Mr. Lang: The available information, relating to confirmed redundancies, is given in the following table:

Redundancies confirmed as due to occur in the North West Region*

Year	Manufacturing industries	Percentage change on previous year	Construction industries	Percentage change on previous year
1979	28,993	—	4,661	—
1980	73,900	+155	8,003	+72
1981	70,700	− 4	8,281	+ 3
1982	50,583	− 28	3,703	−55
1983	37,861	− 25	2,941	−21
1984†	26,067	− 31	3,498	+19
1985	23,235	− 11	2,691	−23

* Redundancies confirmed by the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur and are based on following up employers' notifications of redundancies involving 10 or more workers under the Employment Protection Act 1975. Figures for 1985 are provisional.

† Because of changes in the standard industrial classification the series from 1984 onwards differ slightly in composition from earlier years.

Experience of Unemployment

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General by what means he seeks to ensure that first-hand experience of being unemployed is promptly and continuously available within area manpower boards and the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Trippier: Unemployed people are the main beneficiaries of the Manpower Services Commission's programmes and services, and their views are continuously monitored and researched. The results are made available to area manpower boards and more widely, and taken into account in the design and development of the Commission's programmes and services.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, further to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, columns 433-4, he will publish in the Official Report a table showing how much of the expenditure in each case was contributed by (a) central and (b) local government.

Mr. Dunn: Such information is not readily available.

Conductive Education

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received on the possible development of conductive education in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dunn: In July 1985 I had a meeting with Councillor Les Lawrence of Birmingham city council and Dr. Andrew Sutton concerning Dr. Sutton's proposed research project into conductive education. My right hon. Friend the Paymaster General wrote to me following his visit to the Peto institute in Budapest when he was Minister for Health. In the past 12 months, my right hon. Friend and I have answered 10 parliamentary questions and one has been answered in another place. We have received four letters from hon. Members on behalf of their constituents, and nine letters from members of the public.

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what ministerial or other visits have been made from his Department during the past five years to the Institute for Motor Disorders in Budapest.

Mr. Dunn: No such visits have been made.

Sex Education

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department collects about the type of books and other written material used for the purposes of sex education in schools; what role is played by Her Majesty's inspector in relation to such matters; if any complaint has been received by his Department as to the suitability in this context for children aged 10 years and over of the booklet—"Growing-up—A Guide for Children and Parents", published by the Royal Society of Medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Individual schools and local education authorities are responsible for ensuring that the teaching materials which they use are educationally sound. Neither this Department nor Her Majesty's inspectorate collect information about the sex education materials used by schools. My right hon. Friend has received one letter about the recently published book "Growing-up — A Guide for Children and Parents". In deciding whether they wish to make use of this or other books, I would expect teachers to bear in mind the need both for sex education to be offered in a manner which pays due regard to moral considerations and which is supportive of family life, and for any materials used to be responsible, sensitive and appropriate to the maturity of the pupils concerned. My right hon. Friend has already announced his intention shortly to publish a draft circular giving guidance on sex education at school.

Bogus Universities

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information has been sought from his Department by the Council of Europe about the existence of bogus universities in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to outlaw the operation of bogus universities in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The Government deplore the activities of those offering bogus qualifications for sale. Proposals for legislation to curtail such activities from my right hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Prentice) have been studied but there are substantial practical difficulties associated with them, not least in relation to European Community law. The Government therefore see little prospect of introducing early legislation in this area.

The Council of Europe recently sought the Department's comments on its own compilation of unrecognised institutions of higher education in Europe, North America and elsewhere.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will show for each local education authority in England (a) the percentage of all pupils in maintained schools in England educated by that local education authority and (b) the percentage of expenditure on schools in England incurred by that local education authority.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list for each shire education authority the increase in education spending in percentage terms budgeted for 1986-87 over that budgeted for 1985-86.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many grammar schools are provided by education authorities in England and Wales; and where they are located.

Mr. Dunn: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

O and A-level Results

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will initiate an inquiry into the reasons why secondary schoolchildren in England secure, on average, significantly less success in O and A-level examinations by comparison with children in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of secondary schoolchildren in England and Wales left school without any O or A-level passes in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what were the comparable totals in each of the previous five years.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

GCSE

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if it is his policy that all schoolchildren sitting the new GCSE exam will receive a certificate irrespective of performance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The GCSE will be open, in principle, to any pupil or student but not all pupils will be successful. Grades will be awarded, and recorded on certificates, only if the candidate's performance meets the standard required for the grade. Candidates who fail to reach the minimum standard required for grade G will be ungraded. The standards required of successful candidates will be no less exacting, grade for grade, than those required in existing O-level and CSE examinations.

Schools (Security)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for providing new guidance to local education authorities on the security of school buildings against vandalism, burglary and arson; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The security of school buildings and their contents is important. My Department has commissioned a research study on this subject. I expect it to lead to the publicaton of practical guidance before the end of 1987. Meanwhile, a discussion document on crime prevention in schools has been issued today by the Department. It describes crime prevention measures now being adopted. It is also designed to stimulate discussion about the cost-effectiveness of current practice. Copies are being sent to local education authorities and interested national bodies in England.

I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC (Internal Market)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement concerning the meeting of Ministers of the Council of the European Economic Community held on Monday 23 June relating to the establishment of the internal market.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Council, which I attended, took note of the new Presidency programme, details of which I gave in my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, South on 25 June, Official Report, column 178. Among individual measures discussed, the Council agreed in principle, subject to a United Kingdom parliamentary scrutiny reserve, a proposal for a Council directive on direct satellite television broadcasting. The Council agreed a resolution on a better seasonal and geographical distribution of tourism, and made progress on directives on spcific training in general medical practice and on the legal protection of topographies of semi-conductor products. It discussed proposals for directives co-ordinating member states' laws relating to commercial agents, on pharmaceutical products and high technology medicinal products, on technical standards for a number of industrial products including self-propelled industrial trucks and household appliances, on rights of residence and on the first stage of the gradual abolition of controls and formalities applicable to member states' nationals when crossing intra-Community borders. The Council also discussed a communication on Community patents and a Council recommendation on fire safety in hotels, and had an initial exchange of views on a Commission proposal relating to public contracts.

EC (Research Council)

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress was made at the meeting of the Research Council of European Community Ministers on 10 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The EC Research Council met in Luxembourg on 10 June. I represented the United Kingdom. Discussion followed on from the 8 April Research Council (Written Answer, column 527, 18 April) concentrating on the Commission's informal proposal for the Framework for European Community research and development 1987-91. There continued to be general agreement on the need for priority to be given to programmes aimed at promoting European industrial competitiveness. Some member states including the United Kingdom, expressed concern at the high level of finance proposed (10·35 billion ecu (£6·6 billion) over the five-year period) and suggested that the framwork programme should be at most half this size. The same states also stressed the need for more focussed proposals in areas with a genuine Community added value. The Commission's formal proposals will be submitted to Council in mid-July.

The environment and materials programmes were adopted as 'A' points following the closure of the conciliation process with the Europan Parliament.

Steel Workers (Schemes)

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the cost has been for each of the iron and steel European readaptation benefits scheme/employment and income security agreement schemes for each year since their inception in real terms and in comparative terms using 1985 as a base year.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1986, c. 612]: The cash costs of the iron and steel readaptation benefits scheme from its inception are as follows:

	Benefits paid to individuals £ thousands	Administration costs £ thousands*
1974-75	2,103	57
1975-76	1,689	84
1976-77	2,000	169
1977-78	2,693	157
1978-79	4,969	97
1979-80	18,807	422
1980-81	34,236	2,550
1981-82	105,374	3,447
1982-83	102,569	3,224
1983-84	45,758	1,491
1984-85	30,495	782
1985-86	21,330	n.a.

* Not including DTI costs which are not available.
n.a. = Not available.

ISERBS is funded jointly by the United Kingdom Government and the European Coal and Steel Community. The employment and income security agreement scheme is financed and operated by the British Steel Corporation. It is unable to provide details in the form requested by the hon. Member. I shall write to him with the information which the corporation is able to provide.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his most recent estimate of how many people resident in South Africa have British passports with the right of residence in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: Precise details are not available. We estimate that there are approximately 300,000 holders of British passports resident in South Africa with right of abode in the United Kingdom. It is estimated that a further 500,000 could be eligible to a British passport and right of abode.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the nature of the documents and the part he expects Ministers of Her Majesty's Government to play in their drafting which will convey the future common position of the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community when conveying their opinions on proposed legislation to the European Assembly.

Mrs. Chalker: The Council's common position will be determined by the member states in accordance with the relevant treaty article as amended by the Single European Act. The common position will be drafted following discussion in the Council. We shall, as now, play our full part in these discussions and in establishing the common position, which will be conveyed to the European Parliament by means of a Presidency communication containing the text of the common position.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the expected dates, and nature of each meeting he expects to arrange in London, or elsewhere in the United Kingdom, in respect of political co-operation or gymnich meetings, in his capacity as President of the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community between July and December.

Mrs. Chalker: The President of the Council of Ministers of the EC is not responsible for political co-operation. As Foreign Minister of the country holding the Presidency, my right hon. and learned Friend will hold an informal 'Gymnich' meeting of EC Foreign Ministers on 6-7 September at which political co-operation subjects will be discussed, as well as a European political co-operation ministeral meeting on 10 November. The European Council on 5-6 December is also likely to discuss political co-operation subjects.

Single European Act

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out in the Official Report the functions, constitutions and responsibilities of each of the bodies listed in title III, paragraph 10, of the Single European Act.

Mrs. Chalker: The bodies listed in paragraph 10 of title III of the Single European Act have the following functions:

The Presidency in European political co-operation is held by the country which holds the Presidency of the Council in the framework of the European Communities. Member States hold the Presidency for a period of six months in alphabetical rotation. The Presidency has overall responsibility for the management of political co-operation: this includes scheduling, convening, organising and chairing meetings. It is also responsible for initiating action, and for co-ordinating and representing the positions of the Twelve.

The Political Committee is composed of the political directors (senior foreign ministry officials) of the Twelve; a representative of the Commission also attends. It was originally set up in 1970 as a result of the "Luxembourg report". Its functions are to give the necessary impetus to political co-operation activities, to maintain continuity, to prepare Ministers' discussions and to oversee the work of specialist working groups. It meets monthly and may meet more frequently if necessary.

The European correspondants are foreign ministry officials who assist the political directors. The correspondants were first appointed as a result of the 1973 Copenhagen report. They provide a contact point through which the Presidency and other member states channel communication between the individual foreign ministries. They meet as a group before and after meetings of the Political Committee; a Commission official also attends. The European correspondants group is responsible, under the direction of the Political Committee, for monitoring the implementation of political co-operation and for studying general organisational problems.

The working groups consists of experts from the Twelve foreign ministries; the Commission also attend. The existence of the groups dates from the 1970 Luxembourg report. They meet at the direction of the Political Committee. They prepare reports and recommendations for that Committee. Over the last 16 years, their work has covered most parts of the world as well as particular subjects such as consular affairs, CSCE or the United Nations.

The participation of Commission officials in these bodies is on the basis that the Commission is "fully associated with the proceedings of political co-operation" (Single European Act, article 30, paragraph 3*(b)*).

The establishment of the European political co-operation secretariat is subject to ratification by all member states of the Single European Act (Cmnd. 9758). Its role will be to assist the Presidency in the ways described in the decision of Foreign Ministers adopted on the occasion of the Single European Act, a text of which was deposited in the Library of the House on 25 April.

WALES

Appointments

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the names of organisations, bodies and committees, and of the individuals who have been appointed to them by him or jointly with other Ministers.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

NHS (Treatment Costs)

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average cost for treatment per patient in the National Health Service in Wales in 1984-85 and in each of the health authorities.

Mr. Mark Robinson: To average patient costs in the form requested does not allow for meaningful comparisons to be made. I would however refer my hon. Friend to the publications "Welsh Costings Returns" and "Key Statistical Indicators for NHS Management in Wales", copies of which are available in the Library.

Arts

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been allocated to the arts in Wales since 1979-80, in real terms and cash terms at 1985-86 levels.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Government support for the arts in Wales comes from our vote, principally in support of the National Library and the National Museum, and from the Arts Council, which is the primary channel for the support of the performing arts. Resources made available from these sources since 1979-80 have been as follows:

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total amount of money accrued from council house sales in each Welsh authority from 1979-80 to 1985-86 and for Wales as a whole since 1980-81.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The individual authority data requested is given in the following table. The amount of money accrued for Wales as a whole since 1980-81 is £202·2 million.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the rate support grant allocation to Wales in each of the last seven years in cash terms and real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The aggregate amount of rate support grants for Wales has been as follows:

Refuse Disposal

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many people in Wales have been employed in refuse disposal for each of the last seven years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information on refuse disposal staff alone is not collected centrally. However, numbers of staff employed by Welsh local authorities on refuse collection and disposal are given in the following table.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the "Government Response to the Committee on Welsh Affairs' Report on Coastal Sewage Pollution in Wales". A copy of which is in the Library, and in particular to paragraphs 2.2, 2.3 and 5.2 to 5.5 of that publication.

Radiation

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is satisfied with the monitoring of radiation undertaken on behalf of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There is a well-established programme of monitoring of radiation carried out on behalf of the Welsh Office. Nuclear site operators carry out both discharge and environmental monitoring as part of their authorisation. Her Majesty's radiochemical inspectorate carries out check monitoring of the discharges from these sites and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food undertakes a comprehensive programme of monitoring for radioactivity in the marine and terrestrial environments around nuclear installations. There are also sites in Wales monitored by AERE Harwell and the National Radiological Protection Board under their environmental programmes. All of these programmes are constantly being kept under review.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what agencies have conducted radioactive monitoring on behalf of his Department in each year since it assumed responsibility for this function.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Her Majesty's radiochemical inspectorate, the DOE, fisheries radiological inspectorate and the food sciences division, both of MAFF, AERE Harwell, the National Radiological Protection Board, the two CEGB nuclear power stations at Trawsfynydd and Wylfa, and Amersham International, Cardiff, have carried out radioactive monitoring on behalf of the Welsh Office.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of all measurements of radiation taken on behalf of his Department since 2 May giving details of the materials sampled, the location and timing of each sample, and the results of each monitoring.

Mr. Mark Robinson: All the data that were collected following the Chernobyl accident and up to 16 May have already been made available to the public. Arrangements are being made for a compilation to be published by HMSO and a copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the incidence of radiation found in Welsh lamb since the Chernobyl incident; and how frequent and extensive have been monitoring schedules.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The purpose of the intensive testing programme now being undertaken in north Wales is to test the radioactivity levels of lamb still on farms and not yet in the food chain. Altogether, 119 tests were carried out on or before 21 June. A list of the latest results is available in the Library of the House of Commons. Further lists will be published covering the current testing programme.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to introduce more regular and more rigorous monitoring of radiation levels in Welsh livestock; if he will give further details of compensatory provision for specific Welsh farmers for problems caused by unacceptable radiation levels in Welsh sheep; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: More intensive monitoring of radiation levels in Welsh lamb had already been instituted within the area designated in the Statutory Instrument 1986 No. 1027 laid before Parliament on 20 June. This will continue until I am satisfied that it is safe to stop. The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I announced on 20 June that if it should prove to be necessary the Government will be prepared to discuss cases of compensation for severe loss in particular circumstances to specific farmers.

Fat Lambs

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many fat lambs were sold at grading centres in mid and north Wales in May and early June of the current year.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: In the period 28 April to 20 June 1986 inclusive, 95,311 fat lambs were certified and sold at liveweight grading centres in Gwynedd, Clwyd and Montgomery.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of the number of fat lambs which qualified for the standard of the European Community sheepmeat regime at each grading centre in Wales in each week of each year from 1982 to 1985.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department uses the term mental health to include mental handicap; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The terms mental illness and mental handicap are applied to separate and distinctive mental conditions. It is not the Department's usual practice to use the term mental health to cover mental handicap.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of Wales if he will publish the definition of mental handicap which is used for the purpose of the all-Wales strategy for mentally handicapped persons; and on the basis of such definition if he will state how many mentally handicapped people live (a) in institutional care and (b) in the community in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The all-Wales strategy aims to ensure that the needs of people with a mental handicap are met on an individual basis. Consequently there is no all-embracing definition of mental handicap, but the report of the all-Wales working party on services for mentally handicapped people, upon which the strategy was founded, estimated incidence by reference to the numbers of school children reported to be educationally subnormal. On this basis there were thought to be some 40,000 mildly mentally handicapped people and 10,000 severely handicapped people, with needs for special services concentrated on the latter group. At 31 December 1985, there were about 3,000 people in institutional care. Precise figures are not available for the numbers living in the community but county joint planning teams are currently collating information as part of the process of implementing the strategy in their areas.

Local Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has concluded his review of the central funding arrangements for local enterprise agencies in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: From 1 April 1987, new arrangements will be introduced in Wales for central funding of the core administrative costs of local enterprise agencies. The arrangements will provide for up to £25,000 a year to be made available to individual local enterprise agencies. The level of support for individual LEA's, which will gradually decline over a maximum period of five years, will be dependent on a pound for pound matching contribution from the private sector, and on the submission of an acceptable three year business plan and five-year financial strategy.

The new arrangements will be administered by the Welsh Development Agency and the Development Board of Rural Wales (Mid-Wales Development) which will be acting as the agent of the WDA within its own area. To benefit from these arrangements, an agency will have to be approved by the Welsh Office under the terms of section 48 of the Finance Act 1982. In considering funding, the present level of central support and the presence of other agencies in the locality will also be taken into account.

These new arrangements provide a simpler, clearer and more comprehensible system for channelling support to local enterprise agencies in Wales. This scheme is a key part of the development of a network of local advice and support through partnership between the central agencies, local governmental and the private sector which is essential to the development of a thriving small business sector in Wales. The success of this strategy and the success of LEA's depends crucially on the commitment of the private sector. I sincerly hope that the private sector will find these new arrangements an improvement on what was there before and will be encouraged to step up their support of local enterprise agencies in Wales.

TRANSPORT

British Rail

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 17 June, if he will now specify the nature of the information requested from British Rail on a purely ad hoc basis as available.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information has been sought in a wide range of contexts; for example, for briefing and to pursue points raised in ministerial correspondence. Details could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Badgers (Railway Deaths)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has information regarding the number of badgers electrocuted on railway lines; and what measures are being taken to reduce the number of such deaths.

Mr. David Mitchell: I do not have information for the BR network as a whole. I understand that badgers have been killed on the newly electrified Tonbridge-Hastings line where their runs cross the railway. I am pleased to say that, after consultation with the RSPCA, British Rail have cut gaps in the conductor rail to allow badgers to cross safely. I understand the board will consider similar measures elsewhere where lines are to be electrified if the need arises.

PRIME MINISTER

Westlands plc

Q9. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if any special arrangements were made by her office for the treatment of correspondence from the Law Officers in relation to the Westlands affair; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

I have nothing to add to my right hon. Friend's statement on 23 January and her speech in the debate on 27 January.

Bristol

Q46. Mr. Hayward asked the Prime Minister if she intends to pay an official visit to Bristol.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Baginton

Q47. Mr. Pawsey asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to pay an official visit to Baginton, near Kenilworth.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

EC (Agricultural Expenditure)

Q76. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister what reply she has received from the European Economic Community Commission in respect to her representations regarding its failure to submit monthly reports to the Council on trends in agricultural spending; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

The Commission has recently forwarded a report on 1986 expenditure to the Council in pursuance of its undertaking in the budget discipline conclusions. We shall seek to ensure that they continue to make reports in accordance with this undertaking.

Scunthorpe

Q113. Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Scunthorpe.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Fish Products (Import Ban)

Q149. Dr. Godman asked the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to ban the imports of fish products from those countries which fail to comply with international conventions on whaling; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

No. I do not consider that a ban on the importation of fish and fish products would be an appropriate or effective action in these circumstances. I believe our purpose is better served by continuing to use our influence on the whaling nations through active participation in the International Whaling Commission.

NHS and NCB

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister what were the terms of employment of (a) Mr. Victor Paige, when chairman of the National Health Service Board of Management and (b) Sir Ian MacGregor, chairman of the National Coal Board; and what was the total number of employees (i) of the National Health Service and (ii) the National Coal Board and the total annual turnover in each of these organisations at the time of appointment of each of these chairmen.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Paige was appointed chairman of the National Health Service Management Board with the rank of second permanent secretary on a three-year contract beginning 2 January 1985. The total of whole-time equivalent staff employed in the hospital and community health service in England, including agency, locum, and family practitioner committee staff at March 1985, the nearest date for which figures are available, was 812,500. Annual turnover for the hospital and community health service was £9·3 billion in 1984-85.

Information regarding the emoluments of Sir Ian MacGregor, chairman of the National Coal Board, is set out in the National Coal Board report and accounts 1984-85. 246,835 people were employed by the National Coal Board and their wholly owned subsidiaries at the end of September 1983. Annual turnover for the National Coal Board and its subsidiaries for 1983-84 was £4,660 million.

Housing Benefit and Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister if she will state the total number of people who are in receipt of housing benefit or mortgage interest relief; if she will break down the total into (a) rent rebate, (b) rate rebate, (c) rent allowance and (d) mortgage interest relief; and if she will also show the total as a percentage of the population this represents in 1979 and 1985.

The Prime Minister: The information is not readily available in the precise form requested. However, separate figures are available for housing benefit and mortgage interest relief as follows:

	*1979-80		*1985-86
	Numbers (millions)	Percentage of households	Numbers (millions)	Percentage of households
Great Britain
Rent rebate†	2·6	13	3·9	19
Rate rebate	5·4	27	7·3	35
Rent allowance†	0·7	3	1·2	6
United Kingdom
Mortgage interest relief†	‡5·9	29	8·0	38

* Housing benefit information relating to 1979-80 comprises those receiving help under the former DOE rebate schemes and those receiving similar help through supplementary benefit. Housing benefit figures for 1985-86 are provisional.

† Recipients of rent rebates/allowances and recipients of mortgage interest relief may also receive rate rebates.

‡ Mortgage interest relief figures for 1979-80 exclude those for option mortgages which are not available.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 June.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 June.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 June.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend is attending the European Council in The Hague.

South Africa

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if she will make representations to the Government of South Africa to seek to have the Union flag removed from the flag of South Africa; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: This is a matter for the South African Government.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the South African authorities about the number of persons detained under the current emergency powers; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Acting on behalf of the Twelve, the Netherlands Presidency made representations to the South African Government on 13 June about the imposition of the State of Emergency. The Presidency protested at the indiscriminate arrests of church, community and trades union leaders. We have subsequently made bilateral representations to the South African Government about detentions under the provisions of the state of emergency.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

PCW Syndicate and Alexander Howden

Mr. Arnold asked the Attorney-General what have been the identifiable costs to date of the investigations into the affairs of the Peter Cameron Webb syndicate and Alexander Howden referred to in his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 362.

The Attorney-General: The members of the fraud investigation group formed for the purpose of this investigation are, with the exception of counsel and the accountants, full-time salaried officers of the police service or the Department of the Director of Public Prosecutions. It is not possible to apportion their salaries between the work devoted to this investigation and their other responsibilities. So far as other costs are concerned, I can only inform the House as to the position of the Director of Public Prosecutions for whom I have ministerial responsibility. The costs incidental to this enquiry borne by his Department are, with the exception of costs incurred by counsel and his staff on travel abroad, absorbed within the overheads of the Department. The costs incurred on travel abroad amount to £6,000. It is the policy of the Director not to divulge the fees paid to counsel or other experts such as accountants in respect of individual cases.

Crown Courts (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Attorney-General what is the number of higher executive officers in administration of Crown courts in south Wales; how many can speak Welsh; and how many have learnt Welsh through opportunities provided by the Lord Chancellor's Department to attend intensive courses learning the Welsh language.

The Attorney-General: There are 13 higher executive officers currently serving in the Crown court centres in south Wales. Of these two speak Welsh. Neither of these learned to do so through opportunities provided by the Lord Chancellor's Department, but several members of Crown court staff did use such opportunities, and have since moved on to other work.

Mr. John Stalker

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Attorney-General what has been the involvement of the Director of Public Prosecutions in events relating to the suspension of the deputy chief constable of Greater Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I take the question to refer to the decision by the Greater Manchester police authority to request the deputy chief constable to take leave of absence. This was a decision for the authority alone and not for the Director. Neither the Director of Public Prosecutions for England and Wales nor the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland had any involvement in events leading up to that decision. For completeness, I should add that subsequently the Director of Public Prosecutions (England and Wales) has received a preliminary report concerning Kevin Taylor (whose name has been associated with the Deputy Chief Constable) with a view to him advising as to appropriate lines of inquiry. However, that is a separate matter.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Grammar Schools

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of secondary schools in Northern Ireland are grammar schools; and what are the comparable figures for 1979, 1970 and 1960, respectively.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

January	Per cent.
1985	30
1979	30
1970	30
1960	40

Technology Board

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in establishing a board to advise on technological issues in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently appointed Dr. Daniel V. McCaughan to be the first chairman of the newly established Technology Board for Northern Ireland. Appointment of members will proceed during the summer with the intention of holding an introductory meeting of the board in September. Dr. McCaughan is the technical director of Marconi Electronic Devices Ltd. He is a native of Northern Ireland and has excellent experience of high technology industry both in the United Kingdom and United States of America. He has also had previous experience of service on a number of Government advisory bodies.

The Technology Board will report to the Secretary of State on an annual basis and will advise Government Departments in Northern Ireland on the application of science and technology to economic needs and particularly on the contribution technology can make to the growth and development of the manufacturing and service sectors of industry. It will also act as a co-ordinating body on technological issues involving more than one Government Department and will bring together and represent a Northern Ireland view at national level.

Fat Lambs

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the number of fat lambs which qualified for the standards of the European Community sheepmeat regime at each grading centre in Northern Ireland in each week of each year from 1982 to 1985.

Dr. Boyson: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Radiation (Monitoring)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he is satisfied with the monitoring of radiation undertaken on behalf of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I am content that monitoring arrangements are satisfactory and enabled us to advise the public of relevant levels of radiation in Northern Ireland after the Chernobyl accident. However, we are reviewing the arrangements to see whether any improvement is necessary.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what agencies have conducted radioactive monitoring on behalf of his Department in each year since it assumed responsibility for this function.

Mr. Needham: None. However, since October 1985, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has included Northern Ireland in a United Kingdom-wide research programme which will provide information on the levels of radioactivity along the Northern Ireland coastline.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of all measurements of radiation taken on behalf of his Department since 2 May giving details of the materials sampled, the location and timing of each sample, and the results of each monitoring.

Mr. Needham: Details of radiation monitoring in Northern Ireland since the Chernobyl incident have been published in departmental press releases. The latest release was issued by the Department of Agriculture on 24 June, copies of which have been laid in the Library. The results of the continued monitoring of agricultural products will be published as they become available. Environmental radiation levels have reduced to normal.

ENERGY

Coal Industry

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the effect the reduced price for coal sold to the Central Electricity Generating Board will have on the volume and rate of investment proposals for new coal mines by the National Coal Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The NCB's new supply deal with the CEGB emphasises the need for the NCB to be able to produce coal more cheaply; new low-cost mines contribute to meeting this aim. Particular projects are in the first instance a matter for the NCB.

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he is having with the National Coal Board about introducing legislation to affect trade unions within the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have regular discussions with the chairman on a wide range of issues affecting the coal industry. As I said in Buxton on 17 June, it is the Government's hope that proper representation for the Union of Democratic Mineworkers in the various coal industry bodies in which it has a legitimate interest can be obtained through negotiation. But, if legislation proves necessary to achieve this, the Government intend to introduce such legislation at an early opportunity.

Saudi Arabia (Oil)

Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Energy what his Department's estimate is of the number of barrels of oil delivered to date to Shell and BP as agents of the Government under the arrangements agreed with the Saudi Arabian Government for the sale of aircraft to Saudi Arabia by British Aerospace; what is the estimated value of the oil delivered; and what is the estimated amount of oil and the value to be delivered under those arrangements.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by the Minister of State for Defence Procurement on 17 February 1986 to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara).

Thermal Energy

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will update to 31 March 1986 the information on thermal energy generated and spent fuel discharged by each of the Central Electricity Generating Board Magnox reactors in 1985-86 given in reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 4 July 1985, Official Report, column 198.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is as follows:

Station	Thermal output (Gwh)	Fuel discharged (tonnes u)
Bradwell	7,113	62
Berkeley	4,861	19
Hinkley Point A	14,584	123
Trawsfynydd	11,850	101
Dungeness A	11,093	101
Sizewell	9,138	65
Oldbury	12,036	90
Wylfa	25,012	205

Plutonium

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will update to 31 March 1986 the information on the allocation of plutonium produced in the Central Electricity Generating Board and South of Scotland Electricity Board Magnox reactors given in reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 23 July 1985, Official Report, column 475;

(2) in what ways the plutonium with plutonium-240 content less than 15 per cent. produced by Hinkley Point A, Sizewell and Oldbury since 1 April 1969 has been disposed of.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

CEGB (Net Capability)

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the declared net capability of the Central Electricity Generating Board which is located within the area of each of the 12 area boards.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB advises that the figures are as follows:

Area Board (area)	Declared net capability (31 May 1986) MWSO
LEB	345
SEEB	6,023
SEB	4,340
SWEB	2,263
EEC	3,707
EMEB	9,856
MEB	3,354
SWALEB	4,078
MANWEB	6,073
YEB	9,843
NEEB	2,140
NWEB	704
Total	52,726

These figures are the latest available. The total is larger than that given in my answer to the hon. Member on 18 June principally due to additional coal-fired capacity at Drax and AGR capacity at Dungeness coming on stream since 31 March 1985.

Nuclear Power

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was his Department's expenditure on publicity and promotion of nuclear power for each of the last five years.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government wish to ensure that full and reliable information on the nature and uses of civil nuclear power is readily available to the public.

In this context, the Government make funds available for the UKAEA to prepare and publish a range of information material. Expenditure in the current year, which is the first in which payments are made to the UKAEA as a trading fund, is estimated to be £3·09 million. Figures on a comparable trading fund basis for previous years are not readily available. The UKAEA advises me that the current year's expenditure is broadly consistent with the resources available in the previous five years.

Conservation

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the total of spending for the last financial year available funded by his Department or Government agencies on (a) domestic energy conservation and (b) industrial conservation and energy efficiency.

Mr. David Hunt: Expenditure by Government Departments is not broken down in the way in which the hon. Member suggests, and it would cost a disproportionate amount to do so. However, I estimate that, in the financial year 1984-85, the latest period for which comparable figures are available, total Government expenditure on energy efficiency in the domestic and non-domestic sectors was respectively £50 million and £55 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Bail Act 1976

12. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the operation of the Bail Act 1976; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The use of bail is regularly reviewed, and information is published each year in the "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". If my hon. Friend has any proposals to put forward, I shall be glad to consider them.

Metropolitan Police

13. Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to bring the Metropolitan police under the scrutiny of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary.

Mr. Hurd: No. There is increasingly close liaison between the inspectorate and the Metropolitan Police force inspectorate, and I am keen that this should develop further. The necessarily direct relationship between me as police authority for the Metropolis and the Commissioner would be weakened if the force were inspected by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary in the same manner as provincial forces.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

14. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received alleging that the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings are innocent; and what action he proposes to take on these.

15. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he initiated an inquiry into the cases of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

17. Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the inquiry which he ordered into the case of the Birmingham pub bombings to reach a conclusion.

19. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the inquiry he ordered into the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

55. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he as taken, in the light of the current review of the cases of those convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings, regarding the evidence contained in the book "Error of Judgment" by Chris Mullin, a copy of which has been sent to him, alleging that the men who planted the Birmingham pub bombs are in Ireland.

68. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the inquiry which he ordered into the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings has so far taken eight months.

69. Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specific areas, besides the forensic evidence, are being examined by the inquiry which he ordered into the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

70. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to review the case of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any progress has been made in determining who inflicted the serious injuries found on the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings, following the acquittal of 14 prison officers in 1976 on charges of inflicting those injuries.

Mr. Hurd: I have been carefully examining the case in the light of material submitted to me following the World in Action programme last year. This includes material relating to the forensic evidence and allegations that the six men were assaulted in police custody. In addition, I have recently received a copy of Mr. Mullin's book, in which he claims to have identified four men who took part in the bombings. I have asked the police for a report on this aspect. When I have received and considered that report I shall reach a decision as quickly as possible on whether any of the material provides new evidence of a kind which would justify my referring the case to the Court of Appeal.

Prison Population

16. Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he is taking to reduce the prison population.

Mr. Hurd: We shall press ahead with our programme aimed at reducing crime and encouraging all suitable means of dealing with offenders without resort to custody. Our planned Criminal Justice Bill — discussed in the White Paper and consultative documents we published in March — will carry this programme forward.

Radiation

18. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to simplify the terms used to describe radiation doses in his Department's publications and circulars relating to civil defence matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There are a number of internationally agreed units in which radiation quantities are expressed which have recently replaced units used in the past. Absorbed dose is now expressed in Grays which have replaced rads. Recent Home Office publications refer to the new system. Older publications will be amended in due course.

More generally I agree that there is a need to simplify information of this kind and I understand that the National Radiological Protection Board is looking at ways in which the presentation of information on radiation might be clarified.

Civil Defence

20. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to co-ordinate and harmonise the amount of resources devoted to civil protection in different parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We are preparing a planned programme for full implementation of the 1983 civil defence regulations, which will set priorities and a timetable for the achievement of specific objectives. This will provide a framework for the allocation of civil defence resources to encourage a more balanced level of preparedness consistent with our all hazards approach to emergency planning.

59. Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to advise local authorities to revise their emergency plans to extend the area of local evacuation arrangemens in the event of nuclear fallout; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Emergency plans and procedures are being reviewed in the light of the Chernobyl incident.

58. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to issue a report on the civil protection lessons of the impact of the Chernobyl disaster in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No, but the Government are considering the implications carefully.

72. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding the implications of the response to the Chernobyl disaster for the level of civil protection in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Terlezki) on 19 June at column 640.

Police Duties

21. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he proposes to discuss with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and chief constables methods of increasing the amount of police time spent (a) on foot patrol and (b) in the direct investigation of crime.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner's strategy report for 1986, which my right hon. Friend has discussed with him, made clear his determination to increase the number of officers on street duty and the amount of police time spent on the investigation of crime, and set out the initiatives which he is pursuing to this end. As to provincial forces, Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary regularly discuss these matters with chief officers. I expect that the manpower increases which my right hon. Friend announced on 20 May will lead to a steady increase in the number of officers on foot patrol.

Immigration

22. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current annual rate of immigration from the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Waddington: The number of nationals of Bangladesh, India and Pakistan accepted for settlement in the 12 months ending 31 March 1986 was 17,600.

30. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will review the operation of the Immigration Act 1971 and the British Nationality Act 1981.

34. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the operation of the Immigration Act 1971 and the British Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Waddington: The operation of the Immigration Act 1971 and the British Nationality Act 1981 is kept under regular review.

The Immigration Act provides the necessary framework for the firm control over immigration which is essential. The Government are, however, committed to legislation making overstaying a continuous offence, and ending the sexually discriminatory features of section 1(5). The British Nationality Act provides a sound and equitable basis for establishing nationality according to a person's links with this country or its Dependent Territories.

The Government believe that to repeal either or both Acts would be irresponsible and very damaging to community relations.

37. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effect of the recent changes in parliamentary arrangements on the numbers of stops placed by hon. Members.

Mr. Waddington: The new guidelines which have been in operation for less than two months appear to be working satisfactorily but it is too early to form a final judgment.

43. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking the repeal of the Immigration Acts 1971 and 1981 and the British Nationality Act.

Mr. Waddington: From time to time some people call for the outright repeal of these Acts. No central record is kept of such representations. The Government believe that repeal of the Acts would be irresponsible and very damaging to community relations.

44. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons entered the United Kingdom for permanent settlement from the Indian sub-continent in each of the last five years.

Mr. Waddington: Information on the numbers of nationals of Indian sub-continent countries accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom, is published annually in the Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics: United Kingdom" (Table 18 of the Issue for 1984, Cmnd. 9544). Corresponding figures for 1985 will be published next month and will show a total of 17,510 Indian sub-continent nationals accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in 1985.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what change there has been in (a) the proportion of visitors from the Indian sub-continent refused leave to enter the United Kingdom and (b) the proportion of those refused leave to enter who have been detained and refused temporary admission over the past six months.

Mr. Waddington: Information is not available in the precise form requested as the counts of passengers refused leave to enter or detained do not separately identify those seeking entry to the United Kingdom as visitors. However, the latest information which is available covering a six-month period is given below and relates to citizens of countries of the Indian sub-continent (Bangladesh, India and Pakistan). Those removed in a given month may have sought admission and/or been detained in a previous month.

Citizens of countries of the Indian sub-continent

n.a. = Not yet available.
* including those detained and not subsequently refused.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidance has been given to the immigration service in the past six months in granting leave to enter and allowing temporary admission to the United Kingdom;

(2) what change has been made in the past six months in his policy on granting leave to enter the United Kingdom and allowing temporary admission to visitors from the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Waddington: There has been no change in the criteria governing the grant of leave to enter or allowing temporary admission, and therefore no new guidance.

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to give any concessions regarding residence in the United Kingdom to people resident in South Africa who do not already have a right of residence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Those without the right of abode in the United Kingdom are subject to immigration control in accordance with the Immigration Act 1971. The Government have no plans to change that position in relation to people resident in South Africa.

Magistrates Court, Basildon

23. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received for a new magistrates courthouse in Basildon.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None. Essex county council is responsible for providing the new magistrates courthouse, in consultation with the magistrates' courts committee, and we are expecting to hear from it shortly.

Naturalisation

24. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it now takes to process applications for naturalisation.

Mr. Waddington: Applications for naturalisation completed in March this year had taken an average 15 months to process and for adult registration five months.

Burglaries

25. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the number of burglaries in 1985 in the Metropolitan police district which were not cleared up.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The estimated number of offences of burglary recorded by the Metropolitan Police in 1985 but not cleared up was 139,000. As an offence may be recorded and cleared up in different years it is not possible to give an exact figure.

Crime Statistics

26. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average police expenditure required to clear up each crime in England and Wales (a) in 1978 and (b) in 1985, expressed in each case in 1985 prices.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not available.

28. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of the number of crimes in 1985 in each police force area in England and Wales expressed as a rate per 100,000 population.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is given in the following table. It will be published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1985" in the autumn.

31. Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the increase since 1978 in the number of offences of violence against the person in the Metropolitan police district.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a Question by the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) on 24 April at column 183.

33. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the percentage increase in crimes of violence against the person since 1978 in (a) England and Wales, and (b) each of the three police force areas in England and Wales which recorded the highest percentage increase.

Mr. Mellor: Numbers of offences of violence against the person recorded in each police force area are published each year in chapter 2 of the command paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", and more recently for 1985 in a Home Office statistical bulletin (Table 6 of Issue number 4/86). Comparisons over time may be affected by variations in the comprehensiveness of recording of offences and changes in police recording practices; and where numbers of recorded offences are small they are more liable to be affected by irregular variation.

54. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1977 the clear-up rate for all crimes in the Metropolitan police district.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is published annually in the "Report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis" (Table D of Appendix 4i of the report for 1985, Cmnd. 9790).

67. Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest detection rates for (a) serious crime and (b) all reported crime in (i) Derbyshire and, (ii) the United Kingdom as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Clear-up rates for England and Wales in 1985 were published by type of offence in table 5 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 4/86 on 13 March 1986. A comparison with the figures for Derbyshire police force is given in the following table.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police in 1985; clear-up rates Percentages*

Crime Prevention

27. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the Government's crime prevention policy in the light of the recently published crime figures for Thames Valley relating to the first three months of 1986.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None.

Concessionery Televison Licenses

29. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider introducing concessionary television licences for people of retirement age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Concessionary licences are already available for the occupants of accommodation provided specially for retired persons of pensionable age which satisfies the requirements of the Wireless Telegraphy (Broadcasting Licence Charges and Exemption) Regulations 1984. We have no immediate proposals for further changes to the scheme, but it is clearly bound up with the larger question of the arrangements for financing the BBC through the television licence fee which have been examined by the Peacock committee.

Racially Motivated Incidents

32. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects his Department's research and planning unit to conclude its study of the nature and incidence of racially motivated incidents.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The scheduled completion date for a study of the nature and incidence of racially motivated incidents is March 1987. Results will be published as soon as practicable thereafter.

52. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis the incidence of racial attacks in the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner shares our deep concern about the problem of racial attacks; my right hon. Friend has discussed this with him on past occasions and will certainly do so again in the future.

Stop and Search (Crime Pevention)

35. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has any system for recording and monitoring the effectiveness of police stops and searches without warrant in the prevention or detection of crime.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Section 5 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, which came into effect on 1 January 1986, requires Chief Officers of police to publish annually information on the number of searches for stolen or prohibited articles and on the number of arrests which result. It is also planned to publish information in Home Office statistical bulletins, the first of which will be issued later this year.

Dr. Frank Skuse

36. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the early retirement from his job at the Home Office laboratories at Chorley of Dr. Frank Skuse, the forensic scientist who gave evidence against the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a Question from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Miss Maynard) on 20 February 1986 at column 307.

60. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any investigation of Dr. Frank Skuse's handling of specific cases preceded his retirement on 31 October 1985; if any has been initiated subsequently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: A number of Dr. Skuse's cases were reviewed internally at various times before his retirement. Nothing emerged from these reviews which cast doubt on the safety of the convictions in the cases concerned. I am considering the forensic evidence given by Dr. Skuse at the trial of the Birmingham bombers in the context of representations about that case.

Heroin Addiction

38. Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has made any assessment of how much it costs per day for an average heroin addict to finance his addiction; what estimate he has of the number of such addicts, whether registered or not; and what estimate he has made of the effects of drug addiction upon the incidence of crimes of dishonesty and violence.

Mr. Mellor: The cost of heroin to an addict will vary with the circumstances in each case, but some recent research in the Wirral found that of a sample of heroin users referred in 1984-85 to a particular detoxification unit, the majority were at the time of referral using amounts of heroin daily worth £20-£35. Information on the number of drug addicts notified by medical practitioners to the chief medical officer at the Home Office in 1984 is given in Home Office statistical bulletin 23/85. Some research carried out in two urban areas in England in 1981 suggested that the number of notified addicts was about one fifth the number of opioid addicts in the local population at that time; it is likely, however, that the number of opioid misusers varies greatly according to locality and over time. Home Office statistical bulletin 19/85 gave the results of a study of the convictions for "standard list" offences of persons first notified to the Home Office as narcotic drug addicts in England and Wales in 1979-81. It was estimated that no more than 4 per cent. of notifiable offences recorded by the police were likely to have been committed by regular opioid users.

Police Committees

39. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about local authorities establishing police committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have recently received representations from one hon. Member about the police unit of the London strategic policy unit, and from another hon. Member and several members of the public about the monitoring unit set up by Manchester city council. We have in the past received other representations from a number of hon. Members and the public on this subject.

I deplore the activities of these committees and the so-called monitoring groups. They appear to be more interested in trying to drive a wedge between the community and the police than in improving understanding and co-operation. They have no statutory locus in policing matters either within the Metropolitan police district or in the provinces.

Personal Information (Police Records)

40. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals in England and Wales not charged with or convicted of any criminal offence are the subject of information in the possession of the police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not available and could not be compiled except at disproportionate cost.

51. Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has made any study of the value in the detection and prevention of crime of random intelligence collected by the police about individuals not charged with or convicted of any criminal offence.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No study in these terms has been made but the Home Office and the Thames Valley police have conducted a joint project to determine whether improved methods of storing and processing criminal intelligence material would increase its contribution to the detection of crime. A report summarising the evaluation of the project was placed in the Library in June 1983.

Drug Misuse and Abuse

41. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the latest progress of his Department's programme to tackle drug misuse and abuse.

Mr. Mellor: We continue to give a very high priority to our comprehensive strategy for tackling drug misuse, which is co-ordinated by the interdepartmental ministerial group on the misuse of drugs which I chair. Recent developments include the Indian Government's agreement in principle to the posting to that country of two United Kingdom drugs liaison officers; further enforcement successes by Customs and the police; the continued progress of our Drug Trafficking Offences Bill; the launch on 11 June of three new preventive radio advertisements and a new advice and information leaflet for parents; the release on the same day of a further round of independent evaluation results confirming the impact of our anti-heroin advertising campaign; and the further increase to nearly 180 in the number of local treatment and rehabilitation projects assisted under the DHSS central funding initiative.

Homicide

42. Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the proportion of homicide victims for the latest year for which information is available who were (a) children under the age of one, (b) children aged one to five and (c) children aged five to 15 years; and how many in each of the above categories were victims of a homicide by a member of their own family.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is given in the table below. Statistics on the ages of victims of homicide offences are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (in Table 4.6 of the volume for 1984 Cmnd. 9621).

Community Radio

45. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure fair competition between the proposed new community radio stations and the existing independent radio stations, in so far as the respective levels of franchise fees and degrees of programme control are concerned.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The licensing and regulatory framework envisaged for the two-year experiment in community radio reflects the fact that the coverage areas will in general be much smaller than those of independent local radio stations, and that there are important differences in the nature of the service to be provided and the transmission arrangements. The future financial and regulatory framework for all radio services will be addressed in the Green Paper on radio, referred to in my reply to a Question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) on 8 May at column 206.

Young Offenders (Weapons)

46. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of offenders under the age of 18 years convicted of offences involving the use of weapons during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is available only for homicide offences. Twenty persons under 18 were convicted of offences of homicide involving the use of a weapon in England and Wales in 1984. Some additional information on offences involving the use of firearms in 1984, relating to suspects aged under 18, is given in the table; however, these figures relate only to offences cleared up and are known to be incomplete.

Overseas Visitors

47. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest information he has about the percentage of unmarried men and women aged less than 30 years who apply to enter the United Kingdom as visitors and are refused leave to enter.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is not available.

Obscene Publications Act 1959

48. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to seek to amend the Obscene Publications Act 1959.

Mr. Mellor: We have no present plans to do so.

Sentencing Policy

50. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from the Parole Board concerning sentencing policy.

Mr. Mellor: In its annual report for 1985, published recently, the Parole Board noted that concern had been expressed by the judiciary about the operation of section 33 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982 which extended eligibility for parole to prisoners serving shorter sentences. We are looking at this aspect of the parole scheme to see whether improvements can be made.

Firemen

53. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firemen, including retained firemen and senior ranks, are currently employed by local authorities in England; and if he will give corresponding figures for the last five years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is set out in the following table:

Strength at	Whole-time firemen including senior ranks	Retained firemen in 24 hour units
31 December 1985	33,054	11,772
31 December 1984	32,884	11,821
31 December 1983	32,837	11,845
31 December 1982	32,525	11,699
31 December 1981	32,427	11,553
31 December 1980	32,502	11,443

Identity Cards

56. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider the introduction of identity cards for the population in the light of his discussions with Ministers with similar responsibilities in other countries where identity cards have been found useful to law and order.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government have no plans to introduce identity cards.

Police Manpower

57. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of the number of police officers per 100,000 population in each police force area in England and Wales in 1985.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a Question from my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 27 February 1986, at columns 655-58, which set out the ratio of population to police officer for each police force in England and Wales on 31 December 1985.

EC Broadcasting Directive

59. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the BBC and the IBA about the proposed EEC broadcasting directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Department has had many discussions with the BBC and the IBA on the European Commission's proposals on broadcasting since the Green Paper was published in 1984 and we are in close touch with them on the proposed directive. Both broadcasting organisations share the Government's view that a case for Community legislation in this field has not been made out.

Broadcasting (Peacock Report)

61. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet received the Peacock report on the future financing of broadcasting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend received the report on 3 June and he intends to publish it before the summer recess, at which time he will give the Government's initial response to it.

Griess Test

62. Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has conducted any experiments relating to the reliability of the Griess test.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Home Office forensic science service has recently conducted tests to assess the reliability of the Griess test for the detection of nitroglycerine. We are still studying the results.

Women and Children (Crime Victims)

63. Mr. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis the police response to women and children who are victims of violent crime.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We are considering with the Metropolitan police the recommendations made in the report by the women's national commission on violence against women, and also the field trials which are being carried out by the Metropolitan police and the London borough of Bexley on the treatment of child victims of sexual assault.

The Metropolitan police are also to issue a booklet, "Positive Steps", containing advice for women on how to avoid attack.

64. Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is available to his Department on the incidence of crime against children aged under 18 years in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: Information is collected on a regular basis from all police forces in England and Wales on the ages of victims of homicide and on the numbers of certain offences recorded which can only be committed against children, such as "gross indecency with a child". Statistics of these are published annually in chapters 2 and 4 of the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (Cmnd. 9621 for 1984). Estimates of the incidence in 1984 of recorded offences of personal violence against children under 16, based on a special collection of data from a sample of police forces, were published in Home Office Research Study No. 89. "Personal Violence" (Tables 6, 12 and 15).

Prison Kitchens

65. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will invite environmental health officers to inspect prison kitchens.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to his Question of 28 April at column 301.

Trespass

66. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with chief constables about problems caused by the mass occupation of private land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend discussed these problems with chief constables when he visited the summer conference of the Association of Chief Police Officers at Torquay on 9-10 June. As he said on 3 June in reply to a private notice question by my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest (Mr. McNair-Wilson) at columns 733-34, we are discussing with the police and others whether some further strengthening of the law is required and, if so, what form that change should take. We shall announce the outcome of these consultations as soon as possible.

Sussex Police

71. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next proposes to visit the headquarters of the Sussex police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so.

Terrorism

73. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the current level of threats by international terrorist organisations to use nuclear or chemical weapons or materials.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The various forms of attack which international terrorist organisations might employ are kept constantly under review. It would not be in the interests of security to disclose the nature of the assessments made.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the new mother and baby unit built at Holloway prison will come into use.

Mr. Mellor: It is intended to bring the new mother and baby unit at Holloway into use when the wider re-organisation of the establishment which is planned takes effect. The re-organisation will follow the consultations now taking place on the recent staffing review recommendations.

Babies Born in Custody

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many babies have been born to women serving custodial sentences or on remand and how many such babies have died in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The only readily available information relates to cumulative totals at Askham grange, Holloway and Styal since 1 January 1975. This is as follows:

Establishment	Total live births	Total stillbirths	Total infant deaths
Askham Grange	75	2	1*
Holloway	205	0	0
Styal	389	4	0
TOTAL	669	6	1

* Aged 25 days.
Note: Births normally take place in outside hospitals.

Nicholas Webb

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Nicholas Webb was kept in custody for three weeks in May and June at Camberwell magistrates' court when he had been recommended for hopital treatment.

Mr. Mellor: Nicholas Webb appeared at Camberwell green magistrates court on 27 May where he was remanded in custody. A report on his state of mind was requested by the court. He spent one night, 27-28 May, in police custody then was transferred to Brixton where a report was prepared and a further examination by a psychiatrist was recommended. He was further remanded in custody on 3 June. He spent two weeks (2-17 June) in police cells at Camberwell green magistrates court because there were no places available at Brixton prison. He returned to Britxon on 17 June and the psychiatric examination has taken place. Demand for places at Brixton is currently very high because of the repercussions of recent losses of accommodation at Northeye prison.

Crack

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has concerning the use of the cocaine derivative colloquially known as crack; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The smoking of cocaine in its alkaloid form is thought to be a particularly dangerous means of taking the drug, the effects of which can include more rapidly induced psychological dependence. It is not a common means of cocaine misuse in the United Kingdom, but a close watch is being kept on the situation. Our overall strategy against drug misuse includes a number of measures particularly relevant to cocaine, including the allocation of £1 million in support of programmes aimed at reducing cocaine production and trafficking in South America; deployment by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise of additional investigation staff against cocaine smuggling; and the posting of drugs liaison officers to South America and the Caribbean to improve liaison and intelligence.

Community Service

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support he is giving to the probation service in its efforts to devise a national scheme whereby, with the assistance of Manpower Services Commission funding, the long-term unemployed can be invited to assist in the supervision and instruction of those undergoing community service under court orders.

Mr. Mellor: I am not aware of any proposals for a national scheme. I understand that the Hampshire probation service has put forward proposals for a scheme on the Isle of Wight, and is consulting the county council about them.

Convictions (Police Disclosure)

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds he is opposing the request by the Association of District Councils that the police should disclose records of convictions of persons who apply to district councils for licences to drive taxis and private hire cars.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Police records of criminal convictions are treated as confidential and access to them is given only on the grounds of national security, the protection of particularly vulnerable members of society, and the need to ensure complete probity in the administration of the law.

Drug Trafficking Offences Bill

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the proposed time scale for the implementation after enactment of the Drug Trafficking Offences Bill.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Sexual Assaults

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice the Metropolitan police offers to women on how to avoid sexual assaults and how to cope with such offences if they happen; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the Scotland Yard booklet "Positive Steps."

Mr. Giles Shaw: The advice offered is, as my hon. Friend suggests, to be found in the booklet "Positive Steps" published by the Metropolitan Police on 24 June. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Data Protection Act

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 19 June, if he will specify the practical issues still to be considered in relation to the handling of forms in the Welsh language regarding the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Waddington: I understand from the Data Protection Registrar that the main issues concern the amount of supporting material to the registration forms that needs to be translated into Welsh; and the adaptation of the computer system for recording details of registration applications to enable it to handle standard descriptions and free text entries made in Welsh.

Radioactive Fallout

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the role and duties of fire and civil defence authorities in making provision to monitor the effect of radioactive fallout from nuclear power stations; and what specific responsibilities they have for making information on fallout available to the public.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks).

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will detail the actions taken by each fire and civil defence authority over rises in radioactive fallout following the Chernobyl nuclear disaster; and what steps were taken in each case to inform local authorities and the public in their areas of such actions.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There is no central record of actions taken by individual fire and civil defence authorities following the accident at Chernobyl, but their emergency planning units will have been a natural focus for local inquiries. The Government's review of emergency arrangements in the light of Chernobyl will include the role of local authorities.

Industrial Disputes (Police Horses)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has regarding injuries to police horses sustained in connection with policing industrial disputes.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. John Stalker

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Greater Manchester on the circumstances leading to the suspension of the deputy chief constable of Greater Manchester; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. This is being dealt with in accordance with the statutory procedures on police complaints and discipline.

Public Order

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of total Metropolitan police expenditure is spent on public order equipment and training for public order duties.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Laura Evans (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Douglas Hogg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the latest letter from the hon. Member for Grantham regarding Laura Evans.

Mr. Waddington: My hon. Friend wrote to me about this case on 20 May and again on 11 June. I expect to reply shortly.

Prisoners (Recall)

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners released on licence from life sentences have been recalled to prison in each of the last five years; and what were the grounds of recall in each case.

Mr. Mellor: During the period 1981-85, 111 life licensees had their life licences revoked. Of these, 48 had committed a further offence and 21 were in breach of the conditions of their licence. The remaining 42 were recalled because they were regarded as a possible danger to the public. Further details are given in the following table.

Life licences revoked 1981-85
(England and Wales)

Reason for Revocation	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	Total

Total	22	13	13	30	31	*111

* Includes one case where the life licence was revoked by a Court on conviction of a further offence.

Sports Grounds (Safety)

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the outcome of the review on the Fire Precautions Act 1971 and the proposals for implementing the recommendations of the final report of the Popplewell inquiry into crowd safety and control at sports grounds will be published.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I have today published a consultative document "Fire Safety and Safety at Sports Venues." This contains proposals for changes both to the Fire Precautions Act 1971, as a result of an earlier consultative document, and to the provisions for safety in sports venues. The latter proposals give effect to the objectives of the recommendations on crowd safety at sport venues made in the Popplewell inquiry's final report published in January this year, which will supplement the measures taken immediately and those which are to be taken under existing legislation.

The Government attach great importance to maintaining adequate safety standards. We intend to bring forward legislative proposals on the lines set out in this document at the earliest opportunity. The consultative document is being sent to local and fire authorities and to other interested organisations and individuals, and copies have also been placed in the Library.

Further copies can be obtained on request by writing to the Home Office Fire and Emergency Planning Department, room 916, Home Office, 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT.

Drug Offences

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give a breakdown of the number of people arrested for drug related offences in the London borough of Newham for each of the past five years, by age and sex;

(2) if he will list the number of people arrested for drug related offences in the London borough of Newham, by type of drug, for each of the last five years;

(3) if he will state the total number of people arrested for drug related offences in the London borough of Newham in each of the past five years, with the number of convictions obtained.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to the reply, 19 June 1986, c. 511]: The information which is available and which can be provided without incurring disproportionate cost is given in the table:

SOCIAL SERVICES

Exceptional Hardship Exemption

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer on 28 January, Official Report, column 783, he will now place a copy of the guidance document on the exceptional hardship exemption in the Library.

Mr. Newton: Guidance to local office staff about references to headquarters under this provision is contained in circular S13/85, a copy of which is in the Library. For the reasons explained in my reply to the hon. Member on 12 February at columns 488-89, written guidance is not appropriate to the exercise of the power itself.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many mentally ill patients have been in hospital for more than one, three and five years within each regional health authority.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not collected centrally in the precise form requested. Estimated numbers for 1984 of resident patients by duration of stay are contained in table A6 of booklet 3, "Mental illness hospitals and units in England: Resident patients", in the DHSS series "Mental Health Statistics for England 1984", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which regional health authorities have provided bridging funds to assist the build-up of services for the mentally ill outside hospital; and how much has been allocated by each authority for this purpose in each year since 1978.

Mr. Whitney: This is a matter for regional health authorities, and comprehensive information is not held centrally.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the results of his consideration of a revision of DHSS circular 19/74 to local authorities clarifying their responsibilities regarding mental illness.

Mr. Whitney: Our consideration of the need to clarify the guidance given to local authorities on their responsibilities in this area is not yet complete.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the results of the discussions with interested parties regarding the initiation of a public information campaign on community care for the mentally ill.

Mr. Whitney: Our discussions have centred on the needs of mentally handicapped people. A grant has been made towards the campaign for mentally hadicapped people's programme of work to promote the acceptance of more mentally handicapped people in the community. We are also considering what additional help we can give the Royal Society for Mentally Handicapped Children and Adults (MENCAP) towards its work in this field.

In addition, some health authorities have produced their own video-tapes and other audio-visual material to promote understanding of care in the community of mentally ill and mentally handicapped people. Some of this is being used by other authorities. The Mental Health Film Council, which is grant-aided by this Department, provides information on such material.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects that his Department's guidance on hospital accommodation for mentally ill people will be issued.

Mr. Whitney: The preparation of the guidance contained in Health building note, No. 35 — "Accommodation for people with mental illness" is well in-hand and it is intended that it will be published early next year following the final stage of consultation with the National Health Service.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to ensure that mentally ill patients will not be discharged from hospital unless appropriate services are available to them in the outside community.

Mr. Whitney: Our policies recognise the continuing importance of long-stay in-patient facilities for certain mental illness patients, so discharge into the community is considered only when it is in the best interests of the individual patient. It is primarily for those responsible for clinical care to determine when such a patient is ready to leave hospital, but we expect clinicians to satisfy themselves beforehand that there are appropriate support facilities for the patient outside the hospital.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on assistance with mortgage interest payments provided for persons on supplementary benefit, or the equivalent, in EEC and Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Major: We have no detailed comprehensive information about the assistance with mortgage interest payments given to persons receiving social assistance in all European Community and Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries. From the information we do have we understand the following countries provide some direct cash assistance with housing costs to home buyers (and tenants) subject to specified conditions:

Australia
France
Germany
Ireland
New Zealand

and the following countries provide help for tenants only:

Denmark
Netherlands
Sweden.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount of resources committed by his Department to Hyndburn in the form of a housing benefit for the years 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Major: Subsidy payments to Hyndburn borough council for benefits granted under the housing benefits scheme amounted to about £3,890,000 in 1984-85 and £4,360,000 in 1985-86. The figures for 1985-86 is based on the council's estimated expenditure and is subject to revision.

Aspirin (Children)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many papers were sent to the Committee on Safety of Medicines by the Aspirin Foundation and the Proprietary Association of Great Britain in relation to Reye's syndrome; what comments were made on the possible causal link between aspirin and Reye's syndrome; what evidence was provided relating to the alleged causal link; what specific proposals for stopping the use of aspirin by children were made, if any age was recommended below which aspirin should not be given; and if he will place a copy of the papers in the Library.

Mr. Hayhoe: The material given to the Committee on Safety of Medicines by the Aspirin Foundation and the Proprietary Association of Great Britain was provided in confidence. The recommendations of the CSM and the basis on which it reached its view were described in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 10 June at columns 145-46.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library the preliminary communication sent to the Committee on Safety of Medicines by the authors of the report of the British Reye's syndrome surveillance scheme; and when he expects to receive the final report.

Mr. Hayhoe: The provisional findings of the British Reye's syndrome surveillance scheme risk factor study were sent to the Committee on Safety of Medicines in confidence. I understand that the report with the substantive findings will be available later this year and I will arrange for a copy to be put in the Library. Summary reports of the surveillance scheme have been published in the British Medical Journal of 18 February 1984 and 3 August 1985.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 13 June, columns 366-7, in what ways the Committee on Safety of Medicines kept under review the possibility of a link between Reye's syndrome and aspirin between 1982 and 1985; how the responsibility was shared between officials and members; if any initiatives were taken by the committee to seek further evidence or to examine that already available or becoming available; and if the issue was discussed at meetings of the Committee other than those in 1982, April 1985 and March 1986.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Committee on Safety of Medicines, supported by its professional and administrative secretariat, maintained a continuous surveillance of world scientific literature for any new evidence relevant to the question of whether there is a causal link between aspirin and Reye's syndrome. The CSM also kept in touch with other regulatory authorities including the United States Food and Drugs Administration.

In the United Kingdom, the CSM has studied the work of the national childhood encephalopathy study, and has carefully followed the results flowing from the surveillance scheme set up jointly by the British Paediatric Association and the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centres. It has kept in close touch with professional opinion and in particular has sought the views of the British Paediatric Association. A careful watch has been kept on yellow card reports sent to the CSM by medical practitioners.

In addition to the meetings in 1982, April 1985 and March 1986, the CSM discussed the issue in April and May this year.

Birth Registration (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children there are in Wales whose birth has not been registered because their parents have not been allowed to register the birth through the Welsh language, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The state does not refuse to allow registration to be made through the Welsh language. Regulations made under the Welsh Language Act provide for a birth in Wales to be registered in Welsh as well as English where the required particulars are given to the registration officer in both languages and the registration officer can understand and write Welsh.

Single Payments

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (a) how many single payments have been made under regulation 28 of the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulations for each year since November 1981 to the following categories of claimants: (i) pensioners, (ii) unemployed, (iii) sick and disabled, (iv) single parents and (v) others, (b) the cost by year and on average for each category, (c) how many of these payments have been made to the long-term unemployed, (d) how much the Government expect to save by their abolitions and (e) what is the margin of error which should be taken into account in the figures.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state (a) how many single payments have been made under regulation 28 of the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulations for each year since November 1981 to the following categories of claimants: (i) pensioners, (ii) unemployed, (iii) sick and disabled, (iv) single parents and (v) others, (b) what was the cost, by year and on average for each category, (c) how many of these payments have been made to the long-term unemployed, (d) how much Her Majesty's Government expect to save by the abolition and (e) what is the margin of error in the figures.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Members have a reply as soon as possible.

Local Offices (Staffing)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present level of staffing of his Department's offices in Liverpool; and what was the comparable figure for May 1979.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The approved complement for May 1979 and the proposed staff allocation for 1 July 1986 in respect of Liverpool offices are set out in the table. Over the period significant changes have occurred in the composition of the offices, the areas served have in some cases changed and there have also been significant changes in social security work loads. Most importantly the statutory sick pay scheme and the introduction of housing benefit has reduced manpower requirements.

‡ In 1984-85 nine posts were removed from the office following transfer of social security appeal tribunal work to the office of the President of the Tribunal.

In January 1982 18 posts, and in April 1983 two posts, were transferred to Toxteth ILO following boundary changes.

* In April 1983 12 posts were transferred to Toxteth ILO following boundary changes.

Salford Health Authority (Funds)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he has given to the North-West regional health authority as to the proportion of additional funds made available which should be given to the Salford health authority in view of its local and regional responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: None. Regional health authorities are expected to follow the national policy of improving equity of access to services in allocating resources to their districts, but are free within this to recognise local needs and circumstances. Regions' funding strategies are considered during the Department's assessment and approval of their strategic plans, and progress is monitored through their annual short term programmes.

The recent addition to health authority cash limits following the pay awards to review body staff groups is intended to ensure that, taking account also of the benefits from lower general inflation, health authorities are able to meet the costs of these awards without adverse effects on services to patients. It is for the North-Western regional health authority to decide how its £4·4 million additional funding should be distributed among its districts.

Hospitals (Infections)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the cross-infection rate in hospitals is at the latest date for which the information is available; and what it was in each of the previous 10 years.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not available. The 1981 Public Health Laboratory Service prevalence study of hospital acquired infection indicated that some 19·1 per cent. of patients surveyed in hospital were infected. About half of these infections had been acquired before entry to hospital.

NHS (Private Contractors)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health authorities have so far (a) given a warning to, or (b) dismissed private contractors in the Health Service, on grounds of unacceptable performance in the handling of (i) cleaning services, (ii) laundry services, and (iii) catering services.

Mr. Whitney: I regret the information requested at (a) is not held centrally.

We are aware of one contractor which has been dismissed on the grounds of unacceptable performance in the provision of cleaning services. We are not aware of any cases of dismissal of contractors engaged in laundry or catering services.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many beds have been withdrawn from the National Health Service in each year since 1979; and what is the total as a proportion of the number of beds in the National Health Service in 1979.

Mr. Whitney: The available information is given in the table. Over the period the number of in-patient cases treated increased by 14·4 per cent. from 5·4 million to 6·2 million. Figures for 1985 are not yet available.

NHS (General Managers)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of general managers in the National Health Service at regional, district and unit levels were, at their appointment, doctors, administrators from within the National Health Service, administrators from outside the National Health Service, nurses, businessmen, retired military personnel, or from other occupations; and if he will break down the latter group.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons, on the latest available information, are in receipt of mobility allowance; and if he will estimate how many of these persons suffer from a mental handicap.

Mr. Newton: Four hundred and thirty thousand people are currently receiving mobility allowance. As the hon. Member will see from my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South on 16 May at column 589 it is not possible to identify the number suffering from a mental handicap.

Social Workers (Attacks)

Ms. Harriet Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has about the incidence of attacks of violence against social workers by their clients.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 29 April 1986, c. 769]: Recognising the hon. Lady's concern with these matters, I should inform the House and her that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has decided that it would be right to hold a further and wider inquiry into the death of Miss Isabel Schwarz at the hands of a former mental patient in July 1984, in consultation with Bexley health authority, and Bexley and Lewisham social services departments. The inquiry will be into the management of arrangements for the care and aftercare of Miss Sharon Campbell, an ex-Bexley patient who has since her appearance in court in January 1985 been a patient in Broadmoor hospital. My noble Friend has written to the chairmen of the three authorities. Officials will discuss urgently the precise form of the inquiry, and a further announcement will be made as soon as possible. The intention is to investigate services and not to attribute blame to individuals.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish any estimates prepared by his Department of the potential implications for local authorities in their efforts to reduce the number of homeless households placed in bed and breakfast accommodation of the introduction by his Department of a scheme providing local authority tenants eligible for the right to buy with a transferable discount for the purchase of a private property on the open market.

Sir George Young: The idea of giving financial incentives to selected council tenants in areas of high housing stress to move out so as to create vacancies for new tenants deserves serious consideration, and several authorities are operating such schemes. Because of the uncertainties over its effectiveness, both in terms of costs and the extent to which the number of homeless households in bed and breakfast accommodation would be reduced as a direct result, it has not so far proved possible to produce any authoritative estimates of the benefits of such a scheme. For this reason, we will initially be evaluating the operation and effectiveness of the schemes currently being run by the London boroughs of Brent and Bromley, to see to what extent there would be any value in introducing a scheme of this nature more widely.

Urban Programme

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a breakdown of expenditure under the urban programme in each of the last three years (a) on capital account and (b) on revenue account by each of the following: (i) the public sector, (ii) the private sector and (iii) voluntary organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: This information is not available in the form requested. Urban programme expenditure is expenditure by local and health authorities, supported by central government grant. Some of this expenditure takes the form of local authority grants to private firms or voluntary bodies. Additional expenditure by such bodies in support of urban programme projects is not centrally recorded.

For 1985-86, however, it is estimated that urban programme expenditure was as follows:

(£ million)

	Capital	Revenue
Local authorities/health authorities	207	112 of which:
Grants to voluntary bodies	32	43
Projects involving* private sector participation	58	6

* This includes UDG, other grants and direct support to firms; business advice services; local enterprise agencies; business promotion. Certain works benefiting specific firms in Industrial Improvements Areas (IIA's) are included, but not the majority of infrastructure works designed to assist local businesses.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent in each area in each of the last three years under the partner authorities scheme (a) on capital account and (b) on revenue account; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The amount spent under the urban programme in each of the partnership authorities over the last three years is set out in the following tables:

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 (Compensation Payments)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take in the light of the report commissioned for his Department by Lawrence Gould Consultants Ltd. on the system of compensation payments under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have been examining the complex issues raised in this report in great detail. When this examination is completed, we intend to consult on both the report and our preliminary conclusions. The hon. Member will no doubt be glad to note that, contrary to the impression given by ill-informed comment, the consultants found that some 68 per cent. of claims for payment involve less than £500 per annum, and that the average cost for all agreements was £26·8 per annum per hectare.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now withdraw circular 4/83 following the Gould report on compensation payments under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Waldegrave: The question whether any amendment to circular 4/83 is necessary, will be considered in the light of the consultations indicated in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Mr. Watts) on 17 June Official Report, column 502.

Enforcement Orders

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to require planning authorities to execute within a specified period any enforcement order confirmed by one of his Department's inspectors in relation to the demolition of a building or extension erected without planning permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: When an enforcement notice is upheld on appeal, the period for compliance specified in the notice begins to run immediately. If any step required by the notice has not been taken by the end of that period, the person responsible for taking it can be prosecuted under section 89(1) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971; and, in addition, section 91(1) of the 1971 Act enables the local planning authority to take the required steps, and to recover from the landowner any expenses the authority have reasonably incurred. The local planning authority is well placed to decide how and when to use these powers.

County Hall, South Bank

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are currently employed at the old County Hall premises on the South Bank; and what is the purpose of their employment.

Mr. Tracey: Besides the LRB, a number of other organisations currently occupy County Hall, including the Inner London education authority, the London fire and civil defence authority and the London waste regulation authority. We do not have details of their total employment in County Hall.

GLC (Mortgages)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to the answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 424, to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire, in respect of the total sum now outstanding and owed to the Greater London council under mortgage arrangements, if he will indicate what steps have been made to dispose of the former Greater London council mortgage book in whole or in part.

Mr. Tracey: This is a matter for the London residuary body. I understand, however, that it has begun informal discussions with financial institutions. As required by section 7 of the Local Government Act 1986, no mortgage will be disposed of without the consent of the mortgagor.

Commission for the New Towns

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation at an early date to extend the powers of the Parliamentary and Local Government Commissioner to investigate matters relating to the Commission for the New Towns.

Mr. Tracey: The Government have made the commitment to extend the jurisdiction of the parliamentary and local ombudsmen to new town bodies, including the Commission for New Towns (Cmnd. 9563, July 1985). This proposal will be implemented when a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

Southampton Structure Plan

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the revised Southampton structure plan.

Mr. Tracey: The submitted alteration to the south Hampshire structure plan includes proposals for development in Southampton up to 1996. My right hon. Friend intends to publish his proposed modifications to the alteration shortly, together with the report of the panel which conducted the examination in public. There will be an opportunity for objections and representations to be made.

Croxteth Hall and Country Park

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports he has received from the Merseyside residuary body concerning the future of Croxteth hall and country park, Liverpool; if he will extend the period of the Merseyside residuary body's responsibility for Croxteth hall and country park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend will be receiving a report from the Merseyside residuary body soon, and will then make a statement about the future of Croxteth park. In the meantime the property remains the responsibility of the residuary body.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will pay a visit to Croxteth hall and country park, Liverpool, at an early date to examine options for their future.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so, but my noble Friend the Minister for Planning and Regional Affairs hopes to be able to make a visit shortly.

Beaches

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the beaches which are designated as bathing beaches for the purposes of European Community regulations on pollution.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom makes returns to the European Commission in respect of Directive 76/160/EEC concerning the quality of bathing waters for the following bathing waters:

Bournemouth

Bridlington
- North Beach
- South Beach

Christchurch

Margate

Newquay
- Fistral Beach
- Town Beach

Paignton
- Broadsands
- Goodrington
- Paignton

St. Ives
- Porthmear
- Porthminster

Sandown
- Esplanade
- Shanklin Beach

Scarborough
- North Bay
- South Bay

Southend
- Thorpe Bay
- Westcliffe Bay

Swanage

Torquay
- Meadfoot
- Oddicombe
- Torre Abbey

Weston Super Mare

Weymouth

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any information on the level of pollution affecting beaches not designated as bathing beaches.

Mr. Waldegrave: In order to obtain adequate information, the Government initiated the monitoring of over 350 bathing waters as described in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) on 18 December last at columns 223-228. The results will be available in late 1987 and will be published.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what practical steps are being taken to improve the safety and quality of beaches with respect to pollution.

Mr. Waldegrave: Water authorities in the United Kingdom have taken and are taking steps to improve the bacteriological quality of bathing waters. Often this requires the resisting of outfalls or of storm overflows, or the provision of additional treatment of sewage. Normally water authorities construct new or substantially altered outfalls so that the discharges do not bring adjacent bathing waters below the EEC directive's bacteriological standards. Over the last four years some 40 major schemes have been completed at a cost of £150 million and over the next five years some 80 schemes costing over £300 million will be under way or completed.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to designate Blackpool as a bathing beach under the 1976 EEC directive.

Mr. Waldegrave: The question whether to make returns to the European Commission on the qualities of more bathing waters (including Blackpool) is under consideration.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the EEC Commission about the number of British beaches being designated as such under the 1976 EEC directive.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have received no correspondence from the EEC Commission about the number of bathing waters identified by the Government under directive 76/160/EEC. There have been requests from the Commission for information in respect of individual bathing waters which have been the subject of representations to the Commission.

Radiation

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied with the monitoring of radiation undertaken on behalf of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is a well-established programme of monitoring carried out on behalf of my Department. Nuclear site operators, as part of their authorisations, carry out discharge and environmental monitoring. Her Majesty's radiochemical inspectorate carries out check monitoring of these sites as well as an extensive monitoring programme for raw drinking water supplies. The AERE and the National Radiological Protection Board maintain a network of monitoring stations under their environmental programmes. These programmes are being kept under review.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what agencies have conducted radioactive monitoring on behalf of his Department in each year since it assumed responsibility for this function.

Mr. Waldegrave: Her Majesty's radiochemical inspectorate, AERE Harwell, the National Radiological Protection Board, the CEGB power stations and Amersham International have carried out environmental radioactive monitoring on behalf of my Department. MAFF are also responsible for a separate monitoring programme of foodstuffs such as milk, vegetables, meat and fish.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of all measurements of radiation taken on behalf of his Department since 2 May, giving details of the materials sampled, the location and timing of each sample, and the results of each monitoring.

Mr. Waldegrave: Arrangements to publish all the monitoring information provided to the National Radiological Protection Board following the Chernobyl accident and up to the end of May are being made. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the names of the bodies or persons he expects to be sponsoring private functions at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre at Westminster in 1986 and the estimated income derived therefrom;

(2) if he will state the estimated outturn cost of the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre together with the expected gross cost and net cost of its operations during the remainder of 1986;

(3) if he will state the dates, occasions and nature of each event due to take place at pubic expense at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre from its opening until 31 December;

(4) if he will publish the tariff for private use of each main facility at the new Queen Elizabeth II conference centre and the criteria he applies when considering its use by non-public organisations.

Sir George Young: I will answer these questions shortly.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radioactivity

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the instances known to his Department where food has been found to be contaminated to a level of 1,000 becquerels/kilo or more since the Chernobyl disaster, giving the type of food, the location and the level of contamination.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the actions taken in response to the risk of radioactive contamination of food during May and June by his Department and by his counterparts in France, West Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium, Austria, Switzerland, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Poland and Czechoslovakia; and what arrangements were made for international co-ordination of precautions during the Chernobyl emergency;

(2) if he will publish a table showing, in comparable terms, the levels of radioactive contamination of food which are officialy recognised in the United Kingdom as being normal, requiring precautions and dangerous, respectively, together with such comparable information as is available relating to France, West Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium, Austria, Switzerland, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Poland and Czechoslovakia.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he is satisfied with the monitoring of radiation undertaken on behalf of his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what agencies have conducted radioactive monitoring on behalf of his Department in each year since it assumed responsibility for this function;

(3) if he will publish details of all measurements of radiation taken on behalf of his Department since 2 May, giving details of the materials sampled, the location and timing of each sample, and the results of each monitoring.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Sheepmeat (Caesium Levels)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors determined the timing of his decision relating to lamb movements announced on 20 June.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he expects to be in a position to provide criteria for establishing severe loss in particular circumstances for purposes of paying compensation to farmers suffering losses as a result of restrictions on the movement, sale and slaughter of sheep;

(2) what plans he has to compensate farmers who incur losses as a result of the ban imposed on the movement, sale and slaughter of sheep in north Wales and Cumbria; and whether these include (a) compensation for the fact that the guide price will be lower when the animals are finally marketed and (b) compensation for those farmers whose lambs become over-fat as a result of the delay and who therefore lose entitlement to the variable premium;

(3) if he will list the dates on which lambs tested for radioactivity were found to have had doses in excess of 600 becquerels per kilo, the number of animals involved on each date, and the exact reading in each instance;

(4) what information he has as to the likely long-term effects upon ewes in north Wales and Cumbria of exposure to radiation, and in particular how long such ewes are likely to give contaminated milk; whether movement to uncontaminated pasture would have a beneficial effect; and whether there is any risk of genetic mutations in sheep.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Lambs

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food (1) how many fat lambs were sold at grading centres in Cumbria in May and early June of the current year;

(2) if he will publish details of the number of fat lambs which qualified for the standards of the European Community sheepmeat regime at each grading centre in England in each week of each year from 1982 to 1985.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Plastic Waste

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being adopted by Her Majesty's Government to reduce the amount of plastic waste being dumped in British territorial waters.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

River Esk

Mr. Soames asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will be publishing the report of the Yorkshire River Esk inquiry; and for what reason it has been delayed.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

EC Council

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers and the Council of Fisheries Ministers meetings held on 24 and 25 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I attended these meetings together with my right hon. Friend the Minister of State. The main item at the Agriculture Council concerned the partial suspension of negative monetary compensatory amounts in the pig and poultry sectors which had been agreed as a temporary measure and was due to expire on 30 June. For pigmeat, the Council decided to adjust the arrangements so as to incorporate the effect of the suspension in the regulations for calculating MCAs. Thus the benefit to the United Kingdom is maintained. For eggs and poultry, the suspension has been continued for a further three months and the Council will return to the matter at a later meeting.

The Council also considered certain measures designed to harmonise law and practice throughout the Community. It adopted a directive concerning the maximum level of aflatoxin in the raw materials for animal feed, and made progress towards agreeing a directive harmonising national systems for the testing of meat for residues. The Fisheries Council took delivery of the Commission's very important report on the enforcement of the common fisheries policy in the light of the findings of its inspectorate of inspectorates. We welcomed this report, for which we had been pressing since December 1984, as did all the main fishing countries of the Community, despite the various criticisms which it contained of deficiencies in national control measures. The Commission made it clear that it would be following up the outstanding problems identified by its inspectors, including taking infractions proceedings where appropriate. The Commission also undertook to submit early proposals for tightening up the definition of member states' duties and the powers of the inspectors, which was necessary for improving the functioning of the control arrangements.

The Council held a preliminary debate on the Community's future structural policy in the fisheries sector in the light of the Commission's communication on this matter, and the Commission will take account of this in formulating its proposals for the arrangements to follow the current structural measures which expire this year. After an exchange of views on the Commission's proposals for the revision of the regulation on technical conservation measures and for a new regulation defining certain technical characteristics of fishing vessels for the application of Community legislation the Council decided to remit these matters for further technical discussion at official level in preparation for discussions at the next Council meeting in September.

SCOTLAND

Leukaemia (Hunterston)

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the up-to-date figures between 1981 to 1985 of the number of leukaemia cases in the postal code area around Hunterston in those aged 0-24 years will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The study produced by the information services division of the Common Services Agency into the incidence of leukaemia in Scotland in the nought to 24 age group, a copy of which is in the Library, included statistics for 1981 to 1983 for the area around Hunterston. Data for 1984 are expected to be available in the autumn; 1985 figures will not be available this year.

Electricity Costs (Nuclear Generation)

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effects of the use of nuclear generation on electricity costs in the South of Scotland Electricity Board (a) at present and (b) when Torness becomes fully on stream.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that its assessment of the system fuel costs savings in 1985-86 arising from the operation of Hunterston nuclear power stations was £120 million. The board estimates that system fuel costs savings in 1992-93, when it is expected that full output from Torness will first be available, will be £330 million.

Housing Development (Rural Villages)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to encourage housing developments in small rural villages.

Mr. Ancram: It is for the district and islands councils, as the statutory housing authorities, to assess local housing needs and plan developments wherever they consider appropriate, within the resources allocated to them. Similarly it is for the Housing Corporation to decide how its resources are to be distributed geographically, after consultations with all interested parties. I have, however, encouraged the Housing Corporation to pay particular attention to the contribution which the housing association movement can make to meeting the housing needs of rural areas.

Geriatric Patients

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what increase there has been in the number of places available to geriatric patients in hospital day centres in Scotland over the course of the last 12 months to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Rifkind: This information is not centrally available.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what increase there has been in the provision of beds for geriatric patients in each regional area in Scotland in the last 12 months to the latest convenient date;

(2) how many hospital beds are available in each health board area for elderly people in need of specialist care and attention.

Mr. Rifkind: The staffed hospital beds available for elderly patients at 30 September 1984 and September 1985 (the latest available date) were as set out in the table:

Elderly Persons

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will cause to published in the Official Report a table listing the number of men and women over 65 years of age, over 75 years of age and over 80 years of age at 1965, 1975 and the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: The Registrar General's estimates of the populations requested are given in the table.

Young Offenders (Glenochil)

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement detailing the nature of the disturbances which have taken place since 15 June, the number of prisoners involved in each one and how many of them were charged and for what offences, how many were injured, the number of prison officers injured and estimates of the cost of the damage at the Glenochil young offenders institution and detention centre.

Mr. John MacKay: The disturbances which have taken place at the Glenochil complex since 15 June have been confined to the young offenders institution. No underlying cause has emerged for what has been a series of outbreaks of vandalism which started from a fight between two inmates in a dining hall on 15 June which developed into a brief fracas involving staff, and in succeeding days escalated into concerted efforts by a number of inmates to damage their cells and other institution property. The most serious incident occurred on the night of 18-19 June when damage estimated at £16,000 was caused to 70 cells.

On 20 June a member of staff was assaulted by two inmates, and a number of the inmates who had been involved in the disturbance of 18-19 June damaged the cells into which they had been moved. Some further disturbance occurred on 21 and 22 June. At 23 June the total number of cells which had suffered damage was 76.

Behaviour of the kind indulged in by some of the inmates of Glenochil, which finds expression in acts of defiance against authority, is not uncommon in penal establishments, particularly those holding volatile, aggresive young offenders. By 23 June, the situation had settled and the normal regime was in operation in the institution.

The further details requested are as follows:

Incident of 15 June 1986

Thirty two inmates appeared before the governor charged with disobedience and six inmates were charged by the police, two with assault and four with breach of the peace. No inmates were injured but five officers suffered injuries, one of whom received treatment in hospital for lacerations to his head and back. Damage is estimated at £62.

Incident of 18-19 June 1986

Fifty two inmates were charged with internal disciplinary offences ranging from assault, possession of weapons and damage to property. Six inmates received minor injuries, mainly abrasions. No staff were injured.

Incident of 20 June 1986

An assault by two inmates on a member of staff is currently under investigation by the police.

Incident of 21 June 1986

Eleven inmates were charged with damage to property. There were no injuries to inmates or staff. Six cells were damaged.

Radiation

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the most recent data on the contamination of farm and horticultural produce following the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend is arranging for the information to be placed in the Library.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is satisfied with the monitoring of radiation undertaken on behalf of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: A well established programme of monitoring of radiation is carried out on my right hon. and learned Friend's behalf. Nuclear site operators as part of their authorisations carry out discharge and environmental monitoring. Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate carries out check monitoring of the discharges from the sites and their effect on the terrestrial environment. Monitoring of the aquatic environment is carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's directorate of fisheries research on my right hon. and learned Friend's behalf. There are sites in Scotland monitored by AERW, Harwell and the National Radiological Protection Board under their environmental programmes. All these programmes are kept under review.

Following the Chernobyl accident, these ongoing monitoring arrangements were expanded substantially to include a wider range of food products and additional samples over a wider geographical area than normal.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what agencies have conducted radioactive monitoring on behalf of his Department in each year since it assumed responsibility for this function.

Mr. Ancram: The directorate of fisheries research laboratory at Lowestoft of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell, the National Radiological Protection Board, the South of Scotland Electricity Board nuclear power station at Hunterston, the British Nuclear Fuels plc works at Chapelcross and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority nuclear power development establishment at Dounreay have carried out radioactive monitoring on behalf of my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of all measurements of radiation taken on behalf of his Department since 2 May giving details of the materials sampled, the location and timing of each sample, and the result of each monitoring.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Develoment Department has continuously made available to the public the monitoring data it has received since the Chernobyl accident and will continue to do so. Arrangements to publish this data in composite form are being made by the Departments responsible. These publications will be placed in the Library in due course.

Fat Lambs

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of the number of fat lambs which qualified for the standards of the European Community sheepmeat régime at each grading centre in Scotland in each week of each year from 1982 to 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Chapelcross Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all radiological incidents reported to him in relation to Chapelcross nuclear power station reported for each year since 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton) on 11 June. This contained details of incidents at individual Scottish nuclear installations reported to Ministers through Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate under arrangements laid down by the Government of the day in February 1977 and revised in July 1982. Details of incidents are provided in published quarterly reports of the inspectorate which are available in the Library. Two minor incidents involving small amounts of radioactive contamination on roads within Chapelcross were reported to my right hon. and learned Friend in June. The nuclear installations inspectorate is investigating these incidents and will report in due course.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list all directives issued in respect of Chapelcross nuclear power station since 1979;

(2) what has been the annual production of tritium and plutonium at Chapelcross in each year since 1979; and what has been the destination of this production in each case;

(3) what reports he has received since 1979 from the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in respect of Chapelcross nuclear power station; which of these have been published; and what action has been taken to implement recommendations in these reports;

(4) by what means radioactive products are transported to and from Chapelcross nuclear power station; what directives or authorisations have been issued by his Department on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Housing

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many houses for special needs have been built in each of the Scottish new towns in each year since 1979;

(2) how many public sector houses, other than special needs houses, were built in each of the Scottish new towns in each year since 1974.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Nature Conservation Afforestation (Report)

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the report by the Nature Conservancy Council on nature conservation and afforestation in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I am at present studying this report, which was published on Tuesday 24 June 1986, together with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. I welcome the effort which the Nature Conservancy Council has put into the important debate which is taking place at present on forestry and the environment generally, and in particular how the need for increased forestry planting can be met alongside the need to preserve and develop important wildlife habitats as part of our objective of striking a reasonable balance between forestry, other land use interests and nature conservation. The achievement and maintenance of such a balance will require close and continuing co-operation among the various interests.

My right hon. Friends and I are grateful for the comprehensive way in which the NCC has addressed itself to the subject. We shall, of course, consider its contribution, together with papers and reports from other interests concerned, most carefully.

School Meals

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the results of the annual census of school meals in Scotland held in January; what were the corresponding results in 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is as follows:

Notes:

1. The figures in cols (a)-(f) exclude expenditure on running costs and certain other expenditure under the following headings which the Agency does not allocate to districts and regions.
Maintenance—Dilapidations, estate land maintenance, security, land marketing signs, fire and engineering insurance.
Land and Buildings—Plant and equipment, notice boards, owner controlled insurance, gas, water and electricity supplies, feasibility studies and surveys.
Development Grants—Programme for Rural Initiatives and Development, Development of Rural Area Workshops, Better Business Services, Training and Employment Grants Scheme and Craft Grants.
2. Column (j) includes all Agency expenditure.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been spent by the Scottish Development Agency in (a) Fife and (b) Dunfermline district in each year since it was established ; and if he will show these figures as a proportion of total expenditure by the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 9 June 1986, c. 30]. The information, which is only readily available from the financial year 1981-82, is as follows:

	Fife		Dunfermline		Total Expenditure
	£'000	per cent.	£'000	per cent.	£'000
1981-82	2,970	3·53	1,397	1·66	84,136

1985-86	4,093	4·04	2,132	2·10	101,312

Note

The figures exclude expenditure on running costs and certain other expenditure under the following headings which the agency does not allocate to district and regions.

Maintenance—Dilapidations, estate land maintenance, security, land marketing signs, fire and engineering insurance.

Land and Buildings—Plant and equipment, notice boards, owner controlled insurance, gas, water and electricity supplies, feasibility studies and surveys.

Development Grants—Programme for rural initiatives and development, development of rural area workshops, better business services, training and employment grants scheme and craft grants.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Expenditure)

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any change is to be made in the definitions of obligatory and non-obligatory expenditure in the European Economic Community as a result of the Single European Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No change is to be made in the definitions of obligatory and non-obligatory expenditure in the EEC as a result of the Single European Act.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs and Excise officers were in post (a) nationally and (b) in the port of Liverpool each year since 1979; how many Customs and Excise officers were in post (i) nationally and (ii) in the port of Liverpool employed solely on the detection of drugs importation; if he has plans to increase numbers of officers employed by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Asset Sales (Revenue Loss)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the annual loss of revenue to the Exchequer for the years 1986 to 1987 and 1987-88 as a result of the sale of assets since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 25 June 1986, c. 195]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) gave on 28 November 1985, at column 661.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the number of staff in the Treasury assigned to uncover tax evasion and related fraud, in each of the years 1979-80 to 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1986, c. 633]: The number of Inland Revenue staff, measured in staff unit equivalents, assigned to investigation work in each of the years 1979-80 to 1985-86 is:

	Number
31 October
1980	1,659
1981	1,966
1982	2,166
1983	2,495
31 March
1984	2,843
1985	3,161
1986	3,237

The figures for 1983 and later years are not directly comparable with earlier years. Roughly one third of the apparent increase between 1982 and 1983 reflects a refinement of the calculations of staff effort devoted to investigative work in tax districts made possible by improved management information.

In Customs and Excise at 1 April 1986, the number of full-time specialist investigators and support staff engaged on tax and related fraud investigations was 454. Corresponding figures for preceding years could not be produced without disproportionate effort and cost.

There are, in addition, some 6,675 VAT control and Excise visiting staff whose work may from time to time include an element of fraud investigation.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the estimated cost to the Exchequer of tax evasion and related fraud, in the years 1979-80 to 1985-86, in each tax bracket;

(2) if he will publish his assesment of the incidence of tax evasion as a proportion of total numbers of tax payers in the years 1979-81 to 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1986, c. 633]: In relation to the direct taxes it is not possible to estimate the tax lost through undetected tax evasion and related fraud or to assess it as a proportion of the total number of taxpayers.

In respect of VAT I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for City of London and Westminster, South (Mr. Brooke) to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 11 April 1986, at columns 205-6.

The following table shows the number of VAT cases completed by prosecution or compounding in the years 1979-80 to 1985-86 and the number of VAT registered persons in each of those years:

31 March	Cases	Persons (millions)
1980	474	1·33
1981	645	1·34
1982	601	1·38
1983	520	1·40
1984	568	1·43
1985	610	1·46
1986	630	1·48

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average sum involved in tax evasion cases in 1984-85; and in those cases investigated what was the average amount of money recovered.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1986, c. 633]: The average sums involved in tax evasion cases investigated by the Inland Revenue in 1984-85 were:

Tax offices	3,550
Inquiry branch	124,100
Special office	161,200
PAYE audit	3,100

It is not possible, except at disproportionate cost, to state how much of the amounts involved in those cases was ultimately recovered.

Proceedings in 610 value added tax offence cases were completed in the year ended 31 March 1985, with 165 cases having been prosecuted and 445 cases having been settled by compounding. Arrears of VAT totalled £23,349,124 for the 610 cases giving an average of £38,277 per case.

Statistics are not kept in such a way that figures can be given for the amount of these arrears that are collected, but it is estimated that, owing to the compounding of many of these proceedings, a substantial proportion will be recovered.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Inland Revenue staff are based in Leeds; and how many of these are assigned to detecting and investigating tax evasion and related fraud.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1986, c. 633]: There are 735 Inland Revenue staff in the Leeds area. Investigation of tax evasion is part of the normal duties of many of them, and is measured in staff unit equivalents. In the Leeds area it is 47 staff units.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of tax evasion in Leeds have been prosecuted over the past five years; and what was the average amount of money involved.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1986, c. 633]: In the past five years nine persons have been prosecuted in Leeds by the Inland Revenue. The average amount of tax involved was £10,829.

Leeds collection for Customs and Excise now covers a substantial part of the old East and West Riding. Records cover only the four years ended 31 March 1986, but during that period 60 VAT cases in that area were prosecuted, with an averge of £29,413 arrears of tax per case, and 186 VAT cases were settled by compounding, with a mean average of £11,759 per case.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the number of tax evasion and related fraud cases resulting in prosecution in 1984-85 and the number of prosecutions as a proportion of the total number of cases discovered.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1986, c. 633]: The Inland Revenue seeks civil money penalties for tax offences in all but a very small proportion of cases of evasion. Two hundred and thirty two prosecutions were completed in 1984-85.

In the year ended 31 March 1985, 797 cases were reported for VAT offences. In 83 cases during that year it was decided to take no offence action apart from collecting any arrears of tax that may have been outstanding. There were 165 prosecutions during the year and 445 settlements by compounding.

Income Tax Fraud

Mr. Hancock asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many income tax fraud investigators there are for the Portsmouth area; and how many people in the Portsmouth area have been successfully prosecuted in each of the last five years, indicating the total amounts involved for the same period.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1986, c. 468]: Investigation of tax evasion is part of the normal duties of many Inland Revenue staff, and is measured in staff unit equivalents. For the Portsmouth area, it was 22 staff units for the financial year to 31 March 1986. The Inland Revenue seeks civil money penalties for tax offences in all but a very small proportion of cases.

The number of fraud cases in the Portsmouth area which led to criminal prosecutions, and the total amounts involved, in each of the last five years are:

31 March	Number	Amounts £
1982	—	—
1983	1	27,000
1984	—	—
1985	2	47,960

DEFENCE

Fylingdales

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the modernised phased array radar at Fylingdales will be part of the United States ballistic missile early warning system against attack on targets in north America;

(2) if the new radar at Fylingdales will give early warning against ballistic missile attack on Britain and western Europe.

Mr. Stanley: The modernised phased array radar at RAF Fylingdales will perform the same functions as the present system, which is to provide early warning of a strategic ballistic missile attack on either the European or North American members of NATO.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the new radar at Fylingdales will be built by (a) United States companies and (b) British companies, respectively; and if he will indicate the estimated proportion of work which will go to each category.

Mr. Stanley: The modernised radar itself will be constructed by an American company. British companies will carry out all the work to be undertaken in the United Kingdom on the infrastructure for the facility, including the dismantling of the present aerial domes. This work will amount to approximately 15 per cent. of the total. However, as I said in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw) on 22 May at c. 263-64, in addition, arrangements have been made which ensure that a range of British companies will have a significant opportunity to benefit to an extent closely equivalent to the investment undertaken by the Americans at Fylingdales.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence who will be the owner of the new phased array radar installation at Fylingdales.

Mr. Stanley: Ownership of the modernised systems will be shared between the United States and the United Kingdom in accordance with the 1960 memorandum of agreement, but the installation will remain under RAF command and control.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the memorandum of agreement governing the operation of the new phased array radar at Fylingdales.

Mr. Stanley: The memorandum of understanding covering the modernisation programme is still under discussion with the United States authorities. A decision on whether or not to publish the final version will be taken in due course.

RAF (Equipment)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the operational and financial implications for the RAF of the sale of Tornadoes to Oman and Saudi Arabia, and the diverting of these aircraft from the RAF re-equipment programme.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 27]: Every effort is being made to minimise the operational and financial implications for the RAF of these sales. The effects of the Omani sale are, in any case, likely to be very small. However, the diversion of aircraft and equipment in support of the Saudi sale will have some temporary effect on the build up of the Tornado force and, in particular, will lead to a short delay in the build-up of the Tornado GR1 reconnaissance force. As my predecessor announced to the House on 26 February, at column 960, aircraft and weapons diverted to Saudi Arabia will be replaced at no cost to the defence budget, thereby minimising the budgetary impact.

Lightning Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the timing, extent and cost of the life extension programme of the Lightning fighter aircraft.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 27]: The current programme of fatigue enhancement on the Lightning air defence fighter started in mid-1984 and is planned to be completed by early 1987. The programme is necessary to keep the aircraft in service until replaced by the Tornado ADV. These modifications extend the fatigue life of aircraft by strengthening the wing spars. The estimated total cost of the programme is £2 million at 1985-86 outturn prices.

Equipment Budget

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what cuts he will be making in the equipment budget in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 26]: Expenditure on equipment in 1987-88 and 1988-89 will depend on decisions on the allocation of funds and on the overall level of resources available for defence.

Tigerfish HWT Torpedo

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the precise dates of the concept stage, of the feasibility study stage, of the project definition stage and of the full development stage of the Tigerfish HWT torpedo; and if he will list the specific reasons for the delays at each stage.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 26]: The mk 24 evolved from various torpedo programmes, and it is not, therefore, possible to define concept, feasibility and project definition stages. Full development began in 1959 with an in-service date (ISD) of 1967. After development and engineering problems the mk 24 mod 0 torpedo entered service in 1974. This was intended to have an anti-submarine capability only.

In order to provide a combined anti-submarine and anti-surface capability the development of the mk 24 mod 1 torpedo was endorsed in 1968 with an ISD of 1977. The mod 1 entered service in October 1980 the delay being mainly due to technical shortcomings and under estimation of the task.

The consolidation programme was approved in mid 1984; the development phase was completed on time; the first modified torpedoes entered service as planned in 1986.

Communication Systems

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of the upgrading of Royal Naval and Royal Air Force communication systems, including high frequency, low frequency and extra low frequency.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 28]: The upgrading of Royal Naval and Royal Air Force communications is a continuous process and covers a wide variety of systems. Information is not, however, available in the form in which it has been requested, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort.

HMS Opossum

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the coming refit of HMS Opossum will be put out to tender.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 29]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown).

Contracts (Tendering)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the refit of HMS Opossum will be put out to competitive tender.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 29]: No. HMS Opossum forms part of the core programme of work which it is planned will be under way at Devonport dockyard at the time commercial managers take control and some preliminary design effort has already commenced.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if it remains Her Majesty's Government's policy to submit submarine refits to competitive tender.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 29]: It remains our intention to open up the support areas of defence, including naval refitting, to competitive tender. It is necessary, however, to safeguard the capacity of the royal dockyards as strategically vital assets by providing them with a core programme of work, including submarine refits.

Royal Wedding

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total estimated cost to his Department of providing security and ceremonial services at the wedding of His Royal Highness Prince Andrew.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 25 June 1986, c. 167]: The present estimate of the total cost is some £12,000.

Armed Forces (Equipment)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on what future equipment orders he is currently considering for the Royal Air Force;

(2) if he will make a statement on what future equipment orders for the Army he is at present considering;

(3) if he will make a statement on what future equipment orders he is currently considering for the Royal Navy.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 27]: I refer my hon. Friend to the chart on page 28 of volume 1 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986." It is not our practice to reveal details of possible or planned future equipment orders. However, figure 5 shows the main divisions of the procurement programme 1986-87 and serves to illustrate the significant investment in new equipment for the services.

Written Answers to Questions

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Gordon School, Gravesend

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what reply he has sent to a letter sent to him from the parents of children at the Gordon school, Gravesend, Kent, on its closure by Kent county council with the consent of his Department.

Mr. Dunn: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend have received recent correspondence from parents of children at the Gordon school.

Colleges and Universities

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is prepared to receive deputations led by hon. and right hon. Members about the future of individual colleges and universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend and I are always ready to receive deputations led by hon. and right hon. Members about matters within our responsibilities. In general, however, representations about the future of individual colleges and universities would be more usefully addressed in the first instance to the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education or to the University Grants Committee.

Teachers (Minority Groups)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he has made in his discussions on the recommendations in the Swann report that more teachers from minority groups should be recruited.

Mr. Chris Patten: In his statement to the House on 14 March 1985, in column 452, my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Sir K. Joseph) accepted the Swann recommendation that, without positive discrimination and without any reduction in the required level of qualification, an increase should be sought in the proportion of ethnic minority schoolteachers. In July 1985 the Department issued a consultation paper exploring possible ways to achieve this, to which responses have been received from 68 organisations and individuals. We are considering what further measures might now be taken. A representative working group set up by my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East is considering whether acceptable arrangements could be devised for monitoring the ethnic composition of the school teacher force.

Teachers (Departmental Staff)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he has made in the appointment in his Department in an advisory capacity of teachers with a primary or secondary school background.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend has no plans to appoint teachers to his Department in an advisory capacity.

West Midlands (Science Teaching)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which West Midlands education authorities have received grants for science teaching in primary schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: No west midlands local education authority has yet received support through education support grants for science teaching in primary schools. From September 1986, Birmingham, Coventry, Dudley, Solihull, Walsall and Wolverhampton will receive funding under the education support grant programme for work on science and technology teaching in primary schools.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Uganda

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to assist the Uganda Government as far as police training is concerned.

Mr. Raison: An offer to help with police training has been accepted by the Uganda Government and an adviser is currently visiting Kampala to assess the needs.

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid he intends to give to the Uganda Government as far as provision of Land-Rovers is concerned.

Mr. Raison: Forty-two Land Rovers, financed by the British aid programme, are on order for the Uganda police force and 20 for the Uganda electricity board.

Africa

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will detail the aid programmes in sub-Saharan Africa which have British Government support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: In 1985 gross bilateral aid disbursements to sub-Saharan Africa totalled £285 million. The amounts to individual countries are as shown. In addition, substantial British aid funds are channelled through multilateral aid agencies and the European Community to support long-term development and disaster relief in Africa.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid the British Government have provided to north-east Africa in terms of (a) farming, (b) irrigation and (c) hygiene improvement.

Mr. Raison: The Overseas Development Administration is currently involved in the following capital aid and technical co-operation projects in North-East Africa — Egypt, Ethiopia, Somalia, Sudan — in farming, irrigation and hygiene:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of total regional development grants has been paid to firms in the north-west region in 1979 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Most of this information has been published in the various annual reports on the Industrial Development Act. The details are as follows:

(A) Old regional development grants; payments in the North-West

	£ million
1979-80
Amount	58·7
Percentage of Great Britain	17·7
1980-81
Amount	105·7
Percentage of Great Britain	21·5
1981-82
Amount	143·4
Percentage of Great Britain	23·2
1982-83
Amount	97·3
Percentage of Great Britain	14·1
1983-84
Amount	83·0
Percentage of Great Britain	18·9
1984-85
Amount	79·9
Percentage of Great Britain	19·5

	£ million
1985-86
Amount	76·9
Percentage of Great Britain	24·0

Note:
Up to and including 1984-5 the North-West figures do not include Cumbria; for 1984-85 and 1985-86 Cumbria is included in the North-West totals.

(B) New regional development grants; payments in the North-West

	£ million
1985-86
Amount	6·0
Percentage of Great Britain	15·5

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms that have received regional development grants in the north-west in 1979 and each subsequent year have subsequently closed down or announced redundancies; and if he will give an estimate of the number of jobs involved.

Mr. Peter Morrison: These statistics are not monitored for old regional development grant and the cost of extracting them from the Department's records and other sources would be prohibitive. The Department is aware of 10 cases of closure — but fewer than 200 employees involved overall — among firms being paid under the new regional development grant scheme.

Regional Development Programme

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he sent the United Kingdom submission on the regional development programme to the European Commission.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I now expect the United Kingdom's regional development programme to be submitted to the European Commission next month.

Leyland Bus

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the bids received for Leyland Bus by the deadline of 26 June.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As I informed the House on 12 June, BL invited offers for Leyland Bus, on a tender basis, from the Laird Group, Aveling Barford and a Leyland Bus management consortium. Tenders have been received from all three. Details of the tenders are commercially confidential, but my right hon. Friend expects to receive a recommendation from the BL board shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

European Court

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister if she will list the occasions since June 1979 when the United Kingdom has been found guilty in a case before (a) the European Court of Human Rights and (b) the European Court of Justice; and what was the subsequent action taken by the United Kingdom in each case.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend will reply to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

Legal Aid Funding

Mr. Shersby asked the Prime Minister if she will now make a statement on the review of legal aid funding.

The Solicitor-General [pursuant to the reply, 17 June 1986, c. 512]: I have been asked to reply.

Copies of the report have today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament. Further copies may be obtained, priced £5, from the Lord Chancellor's Department.

The Government are grateful to the scrutiny team for the careful and thorough way it has gone about its task and welcomes the report as a useful basis for consideration of improvements in the efficiency of the legal aid scheme. Before decisions are taken on the recommendations, the Government would welcome comments on them. These should be sent to the Lord Chancellor's Department, Room 316, Neville House, Page Street, London, SW1 to arrive by 30 September 1986.

SCOTLAND

Dairy Farms (Rates)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce legislation to make milk pasteurisation and bottling plants on farms part of an industrial process for planning and rating purposes in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The present position as regards planning is that, under class V in schedule 1 to the Town and Country Planning (General Development) (Scotland) Order 1981, the carrying out on agricultural land having an area of more than 0·4 hectares and comprised in an agricultural unit of building or engineering operations requisite for the use of that land for the purposes of agriculture is development permitted without express planning permission. The Government take the view that an agricultural building is permitted development only if its intended use is ancillary to an agricultural activity carried out on the open land in that agricultural unit.

Whether milk pasteurisation and bottling plants on farms are permitted development or require express planning permission will depend on the facts in any individual case and will be a matter for the planning authority in the first instance to determine.

In a consultation paper on amendments to the General Development Order issued by my Department in January 1984 it was proposed that the wording of class V should be revised to make it clear that permitted development rights were allowed for agricultural buildings and engineering operations which are sited on an agricultural unit of 0·4 hectares or more and are needed for the furtherance of an agricultural activity on the unit. My right hon. and learned Friend is considering whether these changes should be included among the further amendments which will be made to the General Development Order, as announced in the White Paper "Building Businesses . . . not Barriers" (Cmnd. 9794, May 1986).

The present position as regards rating is that agricultural lands and buildings as defined in the Valuation and Rating (Scotland) Act 1956 are not entered in the valuation roll. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to change this.

Chernobyl Accident

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the results of the further monitoring of foodstuffs in Scotland likely to be affected as a result of the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a statement on his conclusions about the testing.

Mr. John MacKay: I would refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's statement on 24 June. The results of the latest monitoring are being placed in the Library.

Dunfermline and West Fife Hospital

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he expects to approve the second phase of the Dunfermline and West Fife, hospital; and when he expects its construction to be completed;

(2) what he estimates to be the delays being caused to the Dunfermline and West Fife hospital phase two by the additional studies ordered into the feasibility of expansion at the Victoria hospital in Kirkcaldy; and when he expects those studies to be completed.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall consider Fife health board's proposals for phase II of West Fife district general hospital when the board submits a revised option appraisal study of acute hospital beds needs in the whole of Fife, which will take account of the results of the additional studies into the feasibility of further development at Kirkcaldy. I understand that these studies will be completed shortly. Meanwhile, I cannot say whether or when approval will be given, or when construction will be completed.

Leukaemia

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete his study into the geographical distribution of leukaemia in young persons in Scotland with special reference to the Rosyth area.

Mr. John MacKay: Details of a preliminary report by the information services division of the Common Services Agency of the Scottish Health Service were given in a pursuant reply of 9 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mrs. Currie), at column 33. That report included figures for leukaemia in the Rosyth area. Further analysis is taking place, and I understand that the information services division hopes to complete the study by the autumn.

Sheep Thyroids

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish all the information from the recent routine monitoring of sheep thyroids in Caithness carried out by the isotopes section of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food central laboratory in Weybridge; what are the comparable figures for similar periods in previous years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: As part of the routine surveillance in condition with the Dounreay nuclear establishment, samples of the thyroid glands of sheep slaughtered at Thurso are analysed at the central veterinary laboratories of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Results for recent years were included in a report submitted by Her Majesty's Industrial Pollution Inspectorate as part of its evidence to the public local inquiry into the proposal to locate the European demonstration fast reactor reprocessing plant at Dounreay. That report was entitled: "Environmental monitoring for radioactivity around Dounreay Nuclear Power Development Establishment, 1981-1985; HMIPI Production No. 3, 1986". I am arranging for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the numbers of British fishing vessels engaged in monofilament net fishing in (a) North sea fishing grounds north of the Scottish border and (b) Scottish waters in each of the last three years; and what is his estimate of the value and volume of the catch landed in Scotland from such vessels.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 5 June 1986, c. 605]: No estimates are available for 1983. The estimates for 1984 and 1985 for Scottish vessels are:

	Number of vessels	Weight of catch in tonnes	Value £
1984
(a)*	10	18	10,400
†(b)	30	54	28,000
1985
(a)*	13	9	7,200
†(b)	40	50	25,000

* Reliable information is not available about the number of other British fishing vessles fishing with monofilament nets in North sea fishing grounds north of the Scottish border and outside Scottish inshore waters. However in 1984, four English vessels landed 14 tonnes of demersal fish, valued at £11,000 at Scottish ports, In 1985, two such vessels landed 30 tonnes valued at £20,000. These vessels may have used multifilament rather than monofilament nets.

† There is no record of any landings at Scottish ports in 1984 or 1985 by other British fishing vessels fishing with monofilament nets in Scottish inshore waters.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to establish the office of a commissioner in Wales to deal with questions relating to the use of the Welsh language, and to investigate cases of alleged discrimination against persons asking to use the Welsh language in dealing with public authorities.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy with regard to releasing statements to the press in the Welsh language or bilingually in Welsh and English.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Most departmental press notices are issued in English. However, where the subject relates specifically to the Welsh language, press notices are issued in Welsh as well as in English.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what action he has taken to commission research into the effect of S4C on the use of the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In its response to the second report from the Committee on Welsh Affairs "Report on Broadcasting in the Welsh language", Cmnd. 8469, the Government accepted the Committee's recommendation about the need for cost-effective research.

In 1983 I commissioned the department of social theory and institutions at the University College of North Wales to undertake a feasibility study on the costs and methodology which could be employed in a possible full scale study. The Social Science Research Council was consulted prior to the commencement of the project and a member of the staff at the centre for mass communications research, University of Leicester acted as the Department's adviser during the course of the project.

I have now received the report, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

The complexities of the task were fully recognised by all from the outset, and I have concluded, with the benefit of expert advice, that a further long-term study at an estimated cost of £400,000 as recommended in the report could not be justified.

Radioactivity

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to monitor the radioactivity in beef in north Wales after the heavy rains of 2 May in the wake of the Chernobyl disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Tests carried out in Gwynedd and Clwyd since the Chernobyl incident have shown levels of radioactivity in beef below the internationally recommended action levels. Further tests are being made.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Street Names

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland following the joint statements of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 17 June 1986, what will be the basis of consultation to establish if a local community desires a street name in the Irish language.

Mr. Needham: I am considering how local wishes might be ascertained. If a practical scheme can be devised, legislation will be necessary and would be subject to public consultation in the normal way.

Newry-Warrenpoint Road (Detonator)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the origin of the detonator found in the 1,000 lb terrorist bomb which was defused on 22 June on the Newry-Warrenpoint road near the land frontier with the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Scott: The detonator was manufactured in Canada.

ENERGY

Coal Industry (Mine Developments)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, when he next meets the chairman of the National Coal Board, he will raise with him the board's practice with regard to the speed with which it pursues formal planning applications for new mine developments after the initial announcement of its intention to proceed, and the implications of this for planning blight in the areas affected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the National Coal Board, and I shall ask the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

Council of Energy Ministers

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the meeting of the European Community Council of Energy Ministers which met on 3 June.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1986, c. 653-4]: I am happy to announce the formal adoption of the decision establishing a new regime governing the payment of state aids to the coal industry. I welcome the agreement for a long-term stable European Community framework for the coal industry.

THE ARTS

Export of Works of Art

Mr. Faulds asked the Minister for the Arts whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East on 26 February, Official Report, column 593, he is now able to announce the publication of the report of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art covering the year ended 30 June 1985.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1986, c. 94]: I am now able to announce that the report of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art covering the year ended 30 June 1985 has been published today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many official value added tax forms and explanatory leaflets are published in languages other than English; if he will list these languages; and what arrangements exist for staff to discuss problems with value-added tax officers in these languages.

Mr. Brooke: Customs and Excise publish English and Welsh versions of the three statutory VAT forms. These are the forms for applying for VAT registration, the VAT return form and the final return form which is used when a business ceases to be registered for VAT. No other forms are produced in any language other than English: nor are the explanatory leaflets. However, the local VAT offices in those areas where Welsh is spoken will always provide a Welsh-speaking officer to explain the VAT rules and procedures where necessary.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Commission

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part Her Majesty's Government play in the appointment of representatives of the European Commission in (a) European Community member states and (b) other states; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Decisions about appointments of Commission representatives in member states and in other states are for the Commission.

Polish-German Border

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom recognises the present border between Poland and the German Democratic Republic de jure as well as de facto.

Mr. Eggar: No. Successive British Governments have given de facto but not de jure recognition to the border between Poland and the German Democratic Republic. There has been no change in that position.

Law of the Sea Treaty

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further consideration Her Majesty's Government have given to signing the law of the sea treaty.

Mr. Eggar: The period for signature of the law of the sea convention ended on 9 December 1984. Although it remains possible for us to accede to the convention at any stage, our fundamental objections to the proposed seabed mining regime remain.

Falkland Islands (Penguins)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts are being made by Her Majesty's Government to discover the cause of deaths amongst penguins around the Falkland Islands; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food exceptionally granted licences in April and May under the Importation of Animals Pathogens Order 1980 to allow the Falkland Islands Foundation to import 15 penguin carcases into the United Kingdom. These are currently being examined at the Ministry of Veterinary Investigation Centre in Norwich.

Diplomatic Missions (Parking Fines)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement about his Department's policy on unpaid parking fines incurred by members of diplomatic missions; and whether he will publish up-to-date figures held by his Department about the number of such fines incurred by individual diplomatic missions.

Mr. Eggar: The improvements, mentioned in my replies of 15 November 1985 and 21 February 1986 to my hon. Friend following the stiffer measures which came into effect on 1 May 1985, have continued. Quarterly figures for the 12 month period ending 31 March 1986 are as follows. On the basis of the figures for the most recent quarter, the annual rate of illegal parking offences is now under 30,000 compared with over 108,000 in 1984. These figures represent good progress and demonstrate the Government's determination to honour the commitment in last year's White Paper on diplomatic privileges and immunities to "reduce very substantially the present level of illegal parking by diplomatic vehicles".

They are also welcome evidence of co-operation by most of the Diplomatic Corps.

Certain missions have brought about spectacular reductions in their parking figures. Many others have reduced their figures substantially but some are still too high. Now that missions have had adequate time to make practical arrangements to comply with our regulations we intend to intensify our efforts to persuade those which have not yet fallen into line to do so. The Government remain determined that persistent offenders who do not pay their fines shall be withdrawn or transferred.

TRANSPORT

M1 Hemel Hempstead

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the reason for the closure of the northbound access to the M1 at Hemel Hempstead; and when he expects the access to be re-opened.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The slip road has been closed as part of major renovation works on the M1 northwards from junction 8 to near Redbourn. The hard shoulder is acting at some times as a running lane and at others as part of the contractor's site. It would not be safe to allow vehicles to enter the motorway at this point. We hope to reopen the slip road on Friday 4 July. It will have to be closed again for about a week in early September during the last phase of the works.

M11 (Slip Roads)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is in a position to make a statement on the outcome of his Department's consideration of the contested proposals for north-facing slip roads at an M11 interchange in the Debden estate of Loughton.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have carried out a survey of the traffic implications of adding north-facing slip roads. We are considering the results in the light of the environmental consequences and will make an announcement in due course. If we decide to go ahead with proposals, they will be subject to the normal statutory procedures.

Driving Tests

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what additional delay takes place for applicants for driving tests who indicate that they wish the examinations to take place in languages other than English; how many examiners are now able to hold examinations in languages other than English; which languages they are and how many examiners in Wales are now able to provide examinations in Welsh.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: With the single exception of tests in Wales which applicants may choose to have conducted in Welsh, driving tests in Great Britain are conducted in English only. Applicants for whom this may pose difficulties can be accompanied on test by an interpreter. The Department currently employs six examiners who can conduct tests in Welsh. No separate records are kept of applications for tests in Welsh. Candidates for such tests should not normally have to wait longer than other applicants.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the numbers of days between 1 April and 21 June on which there were interruptions to the Woolwich ferry service resulting from either mechanical or staffing difficulties.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Fifty.

Wheelclamping

Sir Brandon Rhys-Williams asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to extend wheelclamping within central London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. I have received requests from a number of local authorities in central London to adjust the boundaries of the clamping area. I propose to lay orders before Parliament shortly to designate further parts of Kensington and Chelsea and Westminster, part of Camden, and the City of London for wheelclamping. At the same time I propose to lift the time limit on the existing clamping order.

M4 (Safety Barrier)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the height of the central safety barrier on the M4 near junction 8/9.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: While it would be premature, pending completion of police investigations, to come to conclusions about the causes of the accident near junction 8/9 on 23 June, I have no reason at this time to think that the height of the barrier was a material factor.

EMPLOYMENT

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Steen asked the Paymaster General what was the cost of running the Manpower Services Commission in each of the last three years; how many jobs were created as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Of the total Manpower Services Commission expenditure shown, approximately 84 per cent. related to grants and allowances to individuals and organisations; 15 per cent. to running costs; and 1 per cent. to capital expenditure.

Manpower Services Commission Expenditure†

	£ million
1983-84	1,769
1984-85	2,051
1985-86	*2,370

* (provisional)
† These figures include expenditure on behalf of the Department of Employment.

It is not possible to estimate the number of jobs created by the Manpower Services Commission. Although some programmes, such as the enterprise allowance scheme, create jobs directly, others do so only indirectly and figures are not available.

Skillcentres

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many places were available at skillcentres in: (a) the north-west region and (b) Lancashire in (i) 1979 and (ii) the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: 79,000 weeks of training were provided in the north-west region of the Skills Training Agency in 1985-86, 15,500 of them in Lancashire. Figures for 1979 are not available.

Statistics on skillcentre training volumes have, since 1983, been kept in terms of training weeks provided, rather than places available.

Jobcentres

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General, how many jobs were available at jobcentres in (a) the north-west region and (b) the Burnley constituency in (i) May 1979, (ii) June 1983 and (iii) the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: Vacancy figures are not available by parliamentary constituency. However, the following table shows the numbers of unfilled vacancies in the north-west region and at Burnley and Padiham jobcentres, which cover an area closely corresponding to the Burnley constituency.

Vacancies at jobcentres (excluding community programme)

	North West Region	Burnley and Padiham Jobcentres
May 1979	20,134	414
June 1983	14,633	239
May 1986	18,500	256

Manufacturing (North-West)

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many people were employed in manufacturing industries in 1979 and each subsequent year in the north-west region.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

Employees in employment in the manufacturing industries in the north-west region.

March of each year Year	Number

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many people were unemployed for more than one year in 1979 and each subsequent year in (a) the Burnley travel-to-work area and (b) the north-west region.

Mr. Lang: Following is the available information which is in the Library. The figures are affected by the 1983 Budget provisions which mean that certain older men, mainly aged 60 or over, no longer have to sign on to receive benefit, and by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Larger discontinuities occurred in the local area statistics in 1982 and 1983, with the change in the basis of the count, the introduction of ward-based statistics and the revision of boundaries of travel-to-work areas. Therefore the figures are not directly comparable.

Job Creation

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of job creating schemes (a) for the current year and (b) planned for 1987 in the Burnley, Pendle and Hyndburn constituencies.

Mr. Lang: The full range of employment, enterprise and training opportunities described in the "Action for Jobs" booklet is available to people living in Burnley, Pendle and Hyndburn. The only exception is the new career development loans initiative which we are piloting in four areas.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Low Newton Remand Centre

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of persons under 21 years of age were being retained at Low Newton remand centre for periods up to one month, two months, three months, four months, five months, six months, seven months, eight months, nine months and over, on 15 May;

(2) how many persons under the age of 21 years were being retained at Low Newton remand centre on 15 May.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is given in the tables.

Wales (Police Vehicles)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has given the chief constables of the Welsh police forces as to the use of the word "heddlu" as a description on police vehicles.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None.

Prisoners (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make provision for any person being held in a prison or remand centre in Wales, or any person from Wales being held in a prison or remand centre in England when exercising their right to legal advice to be able to receive that advice in the Welsh language if they so desire.

Mr. Mellor: Any person requiring legal advice in prison custody in England and Wales can be provided with details of Welsh-speaking solicitors listed in the appropriate Law Society regional directory of solicitors.

Police (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the guidelines which he has issued to the police forces of Wales concerning the circumstances of their use of the Welsh language.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The code of practice for the detention, treatment and questioning of persons by police officers issued under section 66 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 makes provision for the interviewing by the police of persons who have difficulty understanding English or where the officer cannot speak the person's own language. The codes of practice have been made available in the Welsh language to chief officers of police in Wales.

Probation Service (North Wales)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the policy of his Department in regard to the provision of a probation service in North Wales which reflects the linguistic character of the area.

Mr. Mellor: We are satisfied that the policies and practices of the North Wales probation committee adequately reflect the linguistic character of the area.

Marches (Bans)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of marches that have been banned in England and Wales in relation to Northern Ireland since 1969, detailing where the marches were, who applied for permission to hold them and the grounds on which they were refused.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Under section 3 of the Public Order Act 1936 a banning order may be made only where there is a reasonable apprehension of serious public disorder and the disorder cannot be prevented by the issue of directions. The table gives details of the occasions since 1969 on which marches in connection with Northern Ireland are known to have been caught by such orders.

Date order began	Class or classes, of procession banned	Area(s) concerned	Proposed marches or processions known to have been caught by order	Duration of order
20 November 1974	All public processions connected with the death of James McDade	Solihull Birmingham Coventry	Marches associated with funeral of James McDade	1 month
26 September 1981	All public processions except those of a religious, education, festive or ceremonial character customarily held	Luton	Marches organised by Irish Republican groups and the British Movement	9 days
30 January 1982	All public processions except those of a religious, educationalal, festive or ceremonial character customarily held	Coventry	Marches organised by Irish Republican groups and the National Front	9 days
27 January 1984	All public processions except those of religious, educational, festive or ceremonial character customarily held	Sheffield North-East Derbyshire Bradford Chesterfield Rotherham	Marches organised by Irish Republican groups and the National Front	2 days

Wales (Bilingual Passport Form)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to introduce a fully bilingual passport form for applicants for passports living in Wales.

Mr. Waddington: The low level of demand for bilingual forms would not justify the expense of producing them. Passport offices serving Wales can, however, process forms completed in Welsh.

Immigration

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of those against whom action was commenced as illegal immigrants in (a) 1983, (b) 1984, (c) 1985 and (d) the first quarter of 1986 had signed statements admitting that they had entered the United Kingdom illegally by deception;

(2) how many of those against whom action was commenced as illegal immigrants in (a) 1983, (b) 1984, (c) 1985 and (d) the first quarter of 1986 had also overstayed a leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom;

(3) how many of those against whom action was commenced as illegal immigrants in (a) 1983, (b) 1984, (c) 1985 and (d) the first quarter of 1986 were detected as a result of each of the following (i) denunciatory letters, (ii) the INDECS system or manually held information from landing cards, (iii) routine checks on the Immigration Service Intelligence Unit, (iv) applications for variation of leave, (v) joint police-immigration service inquiries into alleged breaches of immigration control and (vi) joint police-immigration service inquiries into alleged criminal offences;

(4) how many of those against whom action was commenced as illegal immigrants in (a) 1983, (b) 1984, (c) 1985 and (d) the first quarter of 1986 had been in the United Kingdom for: (i) less than one year, (ii) between one and five years and (iii) over five years.

Mr. Waddington: The information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those against whom action was commenced as illegal entrants in (a) 1985 and (b) the first quarter of 1986 absconded from temporary admission.

Mr. Waddington: In 1985, 21 persons absconded having previously been served with notice that they were illegal entrants. The figure for the first quarter of 1986 was nil.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those against whom action was commenced as illegal entrants in (a) 1983, (b) 1984, (c) 1985 and (d) the first quarter of 1986 were alleged to have (i) entered clandestinely, (ii) entered in breach of a deportation order and (iii) exercised deception on entry, respectively.

Mr. Waddington: An entry may be unlawful for more than one reason. For example, a person may enter in breach of a deportation order by avoiding the controls or by presenting a forged passport making the definition of these categories unreliable for precise statistical purposes. The available information, however, indicates a breakdown along the following lines:

	1984	1985	1986*
(i) Clandestine entry	104	73	14
(ii) Entry in breach of a deportation order	61	67	17
(iii) Entry by deception	617	812	352

* First quarter only.

Corresponding information is not available for 1983.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown by nationality of (a) people against whom action was commenced as illegal entrants in each of the following years; 1983, 1984, 1985 and the first quarter of 1986, (b) those detained in custody as a result of such action in those years and (c) those removed as illegal entrants or who subsequently departed voluntarily in those years.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is not readily available for 1983. Information of the number of different nationalities involved for the other years specified is as follows. The information on detention relates to sole Immigration Act detention at any time including brief detention in order to effect removal after a period of temporary release.

In 1984 action was initiated [illegible] illegal entry against the nationals of 76 countries. Of these, the nationals of 48 countries were detained solely under powers given in the Immigration Act 1971 and the nationals of 59 countries were either removed or made a voluntary departure. The corresponding figures for 1985 were 80, 61 and 71, respectively, and for the first quarter of 1986, 52, 40 and 49.

Wormwood Scrubs

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been spent on the renewal and refurbishment of kitchens in Wormwood Scrubs prison; when each new and refurbished kitchen will be brought into use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The major redevelopment of Wormwood Scrubs prison will include a new building linking the four existing wings of the prison and including a kitchen. Subject to the necessary financial and planning procedures, it is hoped that work on this new building will begin in 1988 and be completed in 1991. The total cost of the building is estimated at £21·8 million, of which the cost of the kitchen is estimated at £1·5 million. Meanwhile, it is essential to undertake a minimum of upgrading and refurbishment in the existing kitchen in order to keep it functioning until the new building is complete. Tenders will be issued shortly for this work which will take about six months to complete at an estimated cost of £154,000. As part of the earlier redevelopment scheme begun in 1982 a building then intended to be used as a kitchen was built at a cost of about £1 million. That building will now be used as a workshop.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on rat infestation at Wormwood Scrubs prison and upon steps being taken to combat it.

Mr. Mellor: The presence of rats in Wormwood Scrubs prison has been reported on two recent occasions. In May and June 1986; both incidents were dealt with promptly by pest control contractors. Any further sightings will be dealt with at once.

Young Prisoners (Violence)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there have been any Home Office or Prison Department investigations into inmate violence at any youth custody or detention centre regime; and if he will publish the findings.

Mr. Mellor: A number of surveys and investigations for management purposes have been carried out in young offender establishments in recent years covering a variety of matters, including inmate violence. We have no plans to publish any reports on this subject. Statistics relating to disciplinary proceedings against inmates for violence against officers, inmates or other persons are published in the annual volume "Prison Statistics England and Wales".

Probation and Community Service

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest year for which figures are available, what was the total expenditure on probation and commu. ty service in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: Precise information is not available in the form requested, but an estimate of total expenditure for 1983-84 on administering probation orders and community service orders is £34 million and £13 million, respectively, out of total expenditure on the probation service of £156 million.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the latest year for which figures are available, what was the total expenditure on alternatives to custody excluding probation and community service in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: It is difficult to isolate expenditure on alternatives to custody other than those which are the responsibility of the probation service. Available figures show that the cost of attendance centres in the financial year 1984-85 was around £1·1 million and the Government are giving £18 million for the development of intermediate treatment.

Prisons (Visits)

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the criteria applied in deciding whether particular prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Gartree receive open or closed visits respectively; and how these criteria have been applied in the particular cases of (a) Mr. Hugh Callaghan and (b) other convicted Irish Republican Army prisoners at the same establishments respectively;

(2) what are the criteria applied in deciding whether particular prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Frankland receive open or closed visits, respectively; and how these criteria have been applied in the particular cases of (a) Mr. Gerry Hunter and (b) other convicted Irish Republican Army prisoners at the same establishment respectively;

(3) what are the criteria applied in deciding whether particular prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Long Lartin receive open or closed visits, respectively; and how these criteria have been applied in the particular cases of (a) Mr. John Walker and (b) other convicted Irish Republican Army prisoners at the same establishment, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: All prisoners at Gartree and Frankland receive open visits unless with a view to securing discipline and good order or the prevention of crime or in the interests of any persons, the governor decides that closed visiting conditions are necessary, providing a barrier between the inmate and his visitors and thereby preventing physical contact.

There are no facilities for closed visits at Long Lartin at present and all prisoners there receive open visits.

Hippie Convoy

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 643, if he will specify for each of the offences committed by members of the hippie convoy the penalty imposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information which is readily available was set out in the answer referred to. If there is a particular case of concern to my hon. Friend, perhaps he would let me know.

ENVIRONMENT

Right to Repair Scheme (Bradford)

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people in Bradford have taken advantage of the right to repair scheme.

Sir George Young: The right to repair scheme began on 1 January 1986. Bradford city council has reported that it received no applications to use the scheme in the first quarter of its operation.

Defective Housing (Grants)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to give any guidance to local authorities on the definition of "financial hardship" for grants in respect of defective houses which fall within the scope of part XVI of the Housing Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My Department's circular 28/84 issued in 1984, offered authorities broad guidance, but it is for individual local authorities to decide their criteria for determining financial hardship cases under the housing defects legislation. We are monitoring authorities' practices, and will consider whether any further advice is needed.

British Waterways Board

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will list the level of subsidy provided to the British Waterways Board for each of the last five years for which records are available;

(2) whether he will give details of the expenditure of the British Waterways Board for each of the last five financial years for which records are available.

Mr. John Patten: Audited accounts for the British Waterways Board are included in its annual reports, which are laid before Parliament. The following table shows for each of the last five years the board's expenditure on waterways operation and maintenance and grant aid from the Department for this purpose:

£ million

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984-85*
Gross expenditure on waterways operation and maintenance	30·9	32·1	37·4	41·7	52·3
DOE grant aid	23·5	27·3	34·6	38·8	49·7

* 15-month period to provide for translation of accounts to financial year basis.

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list for each of the last five years for which records are available the levels of rental charged by the British Waterways Board for the use of waterways throughout Great Britain.

Mr. John Patten: Charging policies by the British Waterways Board are a matter for its day-to-day management and records are not held in the Department. The main charges for use of the waterways relate to licensing of boats. The board reviews and publicises these charges each year.

Warren Spring Laboratory (Contracts)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total value of the contracts which have been gained by the Warren Spring laboratory from his Department for its work carried out on acid rain and oil pollution.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department of the Environment has two contracts with the Warren Spring laboratory for monitoring and other work on air pollution. The contracts are varied annually. In 1985-86, some £1,230,000 of the contract sums was spent on work directly related to the acid rain problem. I understand that the Department of Transport lets a contract annually to the laboratory for work on marine oil pollution and that expenditure on the contract in 1985-86 amounted to £801,000.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Douglas Hogg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify precisely the criteria used to define the nature and quality of the low-level nuclear waste now disposed of at Drigg in Cumbria; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Disposals of radioactive waste in the United Kingdom are authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. BNFL is authorised under sections 6(1) and 6(3) of that Act to dispose of solid radioactive waste, including sludges, at Drigg, by the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

The conditions of the authorisation requires that low-level waste for disposal at Drigg meets the following criteria:

a. that the dose-rate at the surface of substantially unshielded waste containing radionuclides emitting one or both of the following, that is to say, beta particles or gamma radiations does not exceed 7.5 milligrays per hour in air;

b. that in all the matter (whether or not consisting wholly of the waste) buried on the stie in any one day;

i. the alpha activity on the average does not exceed 740 megabecquerels per cubic metre; and

ii. the beta activity of beta emitting radionuclides which do not emit gamma radiation on the average does not exceed 2.2 gigabecquerels per cubic metre.

In order to secure compliance with the authorisation, and ensure safe working practices, BNFL, with the agreement of the authorising Departments, imposes its own more restrictive conditions on consignments of waste for disposal at Drigg.

Birlsbury Wood

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was paid to the owners of Birlsbury Wood on the borders of Hampshire and Dorset under the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for not clearing the woodland; under which sections of the Act; and how much has been paid in total in similar payments made under the financial guidelines of this Act in the past 12 months.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall answer this question shortly.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the names of merchant bankers, stockbrokers, public relations officers and accountants engaged by each water authority on the privatisation of the authority and the amount paid to each to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: This is a matter for the individual water authorities.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the names of the merchant bankers, stockbrokers, accountants and corporate lawyers he will engage to meet preliminary expenses in the sale of shares in water authorities; and how much he expects to pay each one.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have appointed J. Henry Schroder Wagg and Co. as its merchant bankers and Touche Ross and Co. as their general accountancy advisers in connection with water authority privatisation. Stockbroking and legal advisers have not yet been appointed. It is too early to say what the costs of these advisers, which are based on a time input, will be.

London Wildlife Trust

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the London Wildlife Trust to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 30 June until Friday 4 July.

Conference Centre, Westminster

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the tariff for private use of each main facility at the new Westminster conference centre and the criteria he applies when considering its use by non-public organisations.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986]: The daily accommodation charges for the main conference rooms at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre are as follows:

Churchill Auditorium	3,000
Fleming Room	3,000
Whittle Room	1,800
Henry Moore Room	300
Rutherford Room	300
Fleet Room	300

Bookings on fully commercial terms will be considered from any non-Governmental organisation, body or person for functions appropriate to the conference centre. The overall aim will be to maximise the income to the centre so as to minimise any net cost to the taxpayer.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the dates, occasions and nature of each event due to take place at public expense at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre from its opening until 31 December.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986]: The overwhelming Government use of the conference centre during the remainder of 1986 is concerned with the United Kingdom's Presidency of the European Community. This will involve a series of meetings at both official and ministerial level culminating in a meeting of the European Council of Ministers on 5-6 December.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the estimated outturn cost of the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre together with the expected gross cost and net cost of its operations during the remainder of 1986.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986]: The estimated cost of the construction and fitting out of the superstructure including the fitting out of the extension to the parliamentary telephone exchange, contractors' claims paid to date, inflation, variation of price payments and furnishing is £55·7 million.

The estimated total operating cost for the six-month period to the end of December 1986 is £3·6 million and the net cost is £2·75 million.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of the bodies or persons he expects to be sponsoring private functions at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre at Westminster in 1986 and the estimated income derived therefrom.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986]: Facilities at the conference centre are being made available for private functions on fully commercial terms. It would be contrary to accepted commercial practice to disclose such terms, or the names of the people or ogranisations with whom they have been agreed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Equine Census

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the last equine census took place; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: No such census is conducted by my Department. However, information was sought in the 1983 agriculture census on the numbers of horses kept on farms. The results were as follows:

	England	United Kingdom
Horses used for agriculture or horticultural purposes	4,440	6,420
Other horses and ponies kept on farms	124,000	160,000

These figures did not include horses kept in specialised establishments such as racing stables and riding schools.

Radiation

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the statistics relating to the testing of foodstuffs since the Chernobyl incident.

Mr. Jopling: I have placed in the Library of the House the results of monitoring of foodstuffs published by my Department on 20 June

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the instances known to his Department where food has been found to be contaminated to a level of 1,000 becquerels/kilo or more since the Chernobyl disaster, giving the type of food, the location and the level of contamination.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, Thursday 26 June 1986]: I refer the hon. Member to the data published by my Department on 20 June, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing, in comparable terms, the levels of radioactive contamination of food which are officially recognised in the United Kingdom as being normal, requiring precautions and dangerous, respectively, together with such comparable information as is available relating to France, West Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium, Austria, Switzerland, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Poland and Czechoslovakia.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, Thursday 26 June 1986]: Control of exposure to radiation in the United Kingdom is exercised on the basis of recommendations published by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP).

Generalised Derived Limits (GDLs) are published by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) for a range of radionuclides in a variety of foodstuffs, and these are designed to ensure that prolonged exposure will not result in the ICRP done limits being exceeded. Different considerations apply in an emergency and the NRPB have also published guidance on derived emergency reference levels which take into account the transient nature of the contamination; the levels are therefore higher then the GDLs. We have not been officially notified of the levels operating in the other countries referred to, but most if not all also subscribe to the recommendations of the ICRP, interpreting them according to their own particular circumstances.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish details of all measurements of radiation taken on behalf of his Department since 2 May giving details of the materials sampled, the location and timing of each sample, and the results of each monitoring.

Mrs Fenner [pursuant to her reply, Thursday 26 June 1986]: The data published by my Department on 20 June (a copy of which is in the Library of the House) contain the results of monitoring for radioactive contamination by my Department since the beginning of May. Results of further monitoring will be published regularly.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the dates on which lambs tested for radioactivity were found to have had doses in excess of 600 becquerels per kilo, the number of animals involved on each date, and the exact reading in each instance.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 26 June 1986]: I refer the hon. Member to the monitoring data published by my Department on 20 June, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Entry and Search Powers

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many officials for whom he has responsibility currently have the power to enter and search premises, subject to statutory conditions; and, in each case, if he will indicate the statutory authority under which power is exercised.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1986, c 335]: The power to enter and search premises arises under the legislation shown below. In each case except one the list also shows the number of officials for whom I have responsibility who are authorised to exercise that power.

(a) Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967.
54 Sea Fisheries Inspectorate Officers. (section 16(1)).

(b) Fisheries Act 1981.
23 British Sea-Fishery Officers. (section 25(2) which inserted a new sub-section (2A) into section 15 of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967).

(c) Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.
23 British Sea-Fishery Officers. (Part I, section 4 and Part II, section 11 together with Schedule 2, paragraph 4).
4 Fisheries Scientists. (Part II, section 11 together with Schedule 2, paragraph 4).
Investigating and Enforcement Officers who may be needed for short periods when an emergency order is in force or being considered; the actual number varies considerably at any one time. (Part I, section 4 together with Schedule 2, paragraph 4).
Of the 54 Sea Fisheries Inspectorate Officers mentioned at (a), 23 are appointed British Sea-Fishery Officers and, as such, have the power to enter and search under (b) and (c).
The British Sea-Fishery Officers mentioned at (b) and (c) also have powers under section 8(3) of the Sea Fisheries Act 1968 (as amended by section 26(2) of the Fisheries Act 1981) and under section 27(2) and (3) of the Fisheries Act 1981 to enter and search which are limited to boats.
The powers under (c) do not extend to dwellings without a specific warrant from a magistrate.

Sheep (Movement)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors determined the timing of his decision relating to lamb movements announced on 20 June.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986]: The Ministry and the Welsh Office undertook a comprehensive programme of monitoring of foodstuffs following the accident at Chernobyl. High levels of radiocaesium were found in the middle of May only in young lambs not due to be coming onto the market until the autumn. However, results obtained last week showed that some lambs with higher levels of radiocaesium were coming onto the market now. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I therefore took action on 20 June to prevent the marketing of animals in two areas in North Wales and Cumbria, respectively.

Radiation (Livestock Losses)

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he expects to be in a position to provide criteria for establishing severe loss in particular circumstances for purposes of paying compensation to farmers suffering losses as a result of restrictions on the movement, sale and slaughter of sheep;

(2) what plans he has to compensate farmers who incur losses as a result of the ban imposed on the movement, sale and slaughter of sheep in North Wales and Cumbria; and whether these include (a) compensation for the fact that the Guide Price will be lower when the animals are finally marketed and (b) compensation for those farmers whose lambs become over-fat as a result of the delay and who therefore lose entitlement to the variable premium.

Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of compensation available for farmers who lose livestock due to dangerous levels of radiation.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986]: In my statement on 20 June I said that, while the measures I announced to protect consumers were in the general interest of the British sheep industry, the Government would if necessary be prepared to discuss cases of compensation for severe loss in particular circumstances to specific farmers. It is, however, too early to assess the extent of any losses and thus to consider the question of compensation.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Retardation and Autism

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what advice is given to general practitioners, hospital doctors and school doctors as to the extent and character of links between retardation and autism;

(2) what information he has as to the guidelines used by the teaching hospitals for training doctors on the detection and diagnosis of autism.

Mr. Hayhoe: The content of medical education and training is the responsibility of the professional bodies concerned. Keeping abreast of medical literature is a matter for doctors themselves. The advice on people with autism issued* by my Department is addressed to regional and district health authorities and is that such people should be identified and provision made for meeting their particular needs; that a range of services will be needed, taking account of the severity of features which are characteristic of autism, and also of the severity, or absence, of intellectual impairment, and other features; that authorities' plans should include provision for regular in-service education and training for staff to provide basic knowledge about this group, as well as about mentally handicapped people with other special needs; and that these are among the issues to which regions and districts need to address themselves in their strategic and operational plans, and which will need to be considered in the regional review process.

Contraception

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients under the age of 16 years attended National Health Service clinics for contraceptive treatment in 1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: In 1984, 17,400 girls and 500 boys aged under 16 were seen in family planning clinics in England. Information for 1985 is not yet available.

Census (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will, in preparing for the 1991 census, include questions concerning the ability to speak Welsh for persons resident in England;

(2) if he will make it his policy to include a question as to how many of the people in Wales understand, as opposed to speak or write, the Welsh language in the 1991 census; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: No decisions have yet been taken concerning the questions to be included in the 1991 census, but in the course of the next two years the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys will be consulting users of census statistics and all requests will be carefully considered.

Departmental Publications (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 13 June to the hon. Member for Caernarfon, Official Report, column 365, he will state what constitutes economic viability in the context of decisions on whether to print bilingual Welsh/English forms, leaflets, posters and other printed matter produced by his Department in Wales.

Mr. Major: The decision on the economic viability of translating Department of Health and Social Security forms, leaflets and posters into the Welsh language depends on the frequency of demand. If the Department receives or anticipates, regular requests for a particular item it would, as a general rule, consider this as justifying the expense of translation, reproduction and distribution to local offices. This judgment is made by local and regional management.

Home Helps

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of home helps per 1,000 of the population over 65 years of age in each year from 1979 to 1986; and what percentage change that represents.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information is given in the table.

Table. Estimated number of home helps per thousand population aged 65 and over, 1979-85, and the percentage change. England

Year	Number of home helps per thousand population aged 65 and over
1979	6·40
1980	6·60
1981	6·55
1982	6·66
1983	6·99
1984	7·19
1985	7·16
Percentage change 1979-85	+11·8

Notes

(1) The numbers of home helps have been expressed as whole-time equivalents and relate to the position at 30 September each year.

(2) Estimated population at 30 June this year.

(3) The figures for 1985 are provisional, and the latest available.

(4) The figures relate to the population aged 65 and over rather than to those over 65 as they are more readily available and conform to usual practice.

New Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, of the hospitals built or brought into operation since 1979 (a) how many of these were planned prior to 1979 and (b) how many are for sole use by National Health Service patients.

Mr. Hayhoe: Information held centrally shows that 45 hospital schemes each costing over £5 million have been completed since May 1979. Approval in principle was given to 39 of these schemes before that date. All but three of the hospitals of which these schemes form part are authorised to treat private patients.

NHS (Private Patients)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current arrangements for crediting funds received for the treatment of private patients within the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: Health authorities retain in full the income they receive from private patients.

EC Nationals (Social Security)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the social security entitlements of European Economic Community visitors to the United Kingdom looking for work.

Mr. Major: European Community (EC) nationals looking for work in the United Kingdom may, if they have been receiving unemployment benefit in another EC country, continue to receive that benefit for up to 13 weeks here, subject to certain conditions laid down in EC rules. They may also claim means-tested social assistance benefits, such as supplementary benefit, under the same conditions as United Kingdom nationals. However, in these circumstances they may be asked to leave the United Kingdom on the ground that they have become a charge on public funds.

Dr. Issac Brave (Nursing Homes)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many former patients of Rainhill hospital, St. Helens, have been transferred to nursing homes owned or formerly owned by Dr. Issac Brave in 1986 to date, 1985, 1984 and 1983.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Alvada Kooken

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many outside visits Alvada Kooken of Broadmoor hospital has had in each year of her detention.

Mr. Hayhoe: Miss Kooken has been detained in Broadmoor hospital since 29 November 1979. She made no outside visits other than to court and to collect her belongings until 1982. Since then she has had two visits in 1982, two in 1983, three in 1984, one in 1985 and one this year.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what category patient is Alvada Kooken, who escaped on 23 June whilst on outside visit from Broadmoor hospital.

Mr. Hayhoe: Miss Kooken is detained in Broadmoor hospital under sections 47 and 49 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services who authorised that Alvada Kooken, a patient of Broadmoor hospital, should be allowed to have £35 whilst on an outside trip.

Mr. Hayhoe: Arrangements for outings and the cash to be made available to a particular patient during an outing are considered initially at clinical team level, and are subject to approval by senior management.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the abscondment whilst on day release from Broadmoor of Alvada Kooken, and what steps are being taken to secure her recapture.

Mr. Hayhoe: On 23 June, a group of 16 patients from Broadmoor hospital went on an outing to Southsea. They were escorted by six nurses. During a shopping expedition, Miss Kooken absconded from the party. The police were notified and given full details of those people considered to be at risk. As my hon. Friend will know, Miss Kooken was taken into police custody from a London hotel early on Wednesday 25 June and was returned to Broadmoor hospital on the same day.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many previous occasions Alvada Kooken has been allowed out of Broadmoor on day trips; how many of the current total number of patients have been allowed out in such circumstances during the last five years; what criteria are used in determining whether patients should enjoy this facility; what degree of supervision is applied in such cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Broadmoor Hospital

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will suspend outside visits from Broadmoor hospital until an investigation on the escape of Alvada Kooken in Southsea, Portsmouth, on 23 June is completed.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand that no further group outings from Broadmoor hospital are planned at present, and that arrangements for any future outings will take account of any lessons learned from Miss Kooken's absconding. It is not proposed to insist on any restrictions on other outside visits each of which is carefully considered before approval.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will institute an urgent review of outside visits by patients of Broadmoor hospital following the escape of Alvada Kooken.

Mr. Hayhoe: Special hospital leave and outing arrangements have been reviewed on a number of occasions in recent years; and they are automatically reconsidered when there is an incident of some sort from which lessons might be learnt. The hospital has been asked for an urgent report on the regrettable incident.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were in the party including Alvada Kooken, from Broadmoor hospital, who visited Southsea on 23 June.

Mr. Hayhoe: There were 16 patients, accompanied by six nurses and a driver.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital officials accompanied the group from Broadmoor hospital on its visit to Southsea on 23 June.

Mr. Hayhoe: Six nurses from the hospital accompanied the group.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients of Broadmoor have escaped whilst on outside visits in the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients of Broadmoor have absconded whilst on day release or some other form of approved temporary absence during the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Apart from Miss Kooken, one.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what procedures are followed when it is discovered that a patient of Broadmoor has absconded whilst on day release or some other form of approved temporary absence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: In the case of a patient absconding while on escorted leave from the hospital, standing instructions require escorts to notify the local police immediately and to stand by to give any assistance or information the police might require. The hospital is also informed of the situation and, in the case of group outings, the remainder of the party is returned under escort to the hospital.

NHS Training Authority

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the role of and the budget provided for the National Health Service training authority.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 3 June 1986, c. 545-46]: I regret that my earlier reply contained an error. The figure for the authorities' budget for 1986-87 should read £5·734 million, not £4·734 million.

DEFENCE

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis the contract for the refit of the royal yacht Britannia will be awarded.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on 23 June, at column 28, to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Miss Fookes).

Arms Exports

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the estimate for the expected value of total arms export sales from Britain in 1986; and what is the expected proportion of these which go to Third world countries.

Mr. Lee: It is not practicable to make annual forecast estimates of defence sales either in whole or in part.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the figures for the total value of Britain's arms exports for the last calendar year for which figures are available and for each year since 1979; and if he will state the value of export sales to Third world countries in those years.

Mr. Lee: The information is as follows:

Total values of British exports of Identified Defence Equipment

	£ million
1980	537
1981	613
1982	904
1983	919
1984	825
1985	813

Total values of Exports to Third World Countries since 1979

	£ million
1980	53
1981	46
1982	30
1983	842
1984	443
1985	52

(Based on the World Bank's annual compilations of the world's 45 poorest countries, excluding dependencies and states with a population of less than 100,000).

Dr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what steps he has taken pursuant to his inquiry into the interrogation and subsequent fate of British prisoners of war by German Army Group E, and further concerning the alleged involvement of Kurt Waldheim therein;

(2) when he expects to complete his inquiry into the interrogation and subsequent fate of British prisoners of war by German Army Group E and further concerning the alleged involvement of Kurt Waldheim therein;

(3) whether he will publish in full the result of his inquiry into the interrogation and subsequent fate of British prisoners of war by German Army Group E, and further concerning the alleged involvement of Kurt Waldheim therein; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer I gave him him on 3 June at column 427.

Frigate Sales (Pakistan)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he or one of the other Ministers in his Department next intends to visit Pakistan to discuss the possible sale of frigates to that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement is considering an early ministerial visit to Pakistan. As I said in reply to the hon. Member's question of 13 June details of the negotiations on these ships must at present remain confidential.

ENVIRONMENT

Faslane Bay

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now in a position to make a statement about dredging in Faslane bay and the means by which he intends to dispose of the waste, and in particular that part of it which is contaminated with asbestos.

Sir George Young: On behalf of the Ministry of Defence, the Property Services Agency is today letting a contract to dredge an area of Faslane bay in the vicinity of the proposed shiplift and finger jetty to enable submarines to dock there. The work entails the dredging of some 65,000 cubic metres of silt and transporting it by barge to the recognised underwater dumping ground in the Firth of Clyde between Cloch point and Strone point. Work is expected to start on site within the next few weeks.

Although this is essentially a straightforward dredging operation, there is known to be asbestos on the sea bed in Faslane bay arising from the former civil shipbreaking activities there. The quantity of asbestos is estimated to be only a small proportion of the dredged material by weight overall.

The Property Services Agency, employing specialist consultants Balfours, has taken great care to specify environmental constraints on dredging and disposal activities that will ensure the minimum of disturbance to the marine environment.

Even though the asbestos levels are low, it has been decided in view of public concern about asbestos that the selected contractor will be licensed under the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983 and may only employ workers properly trained in the correct working and hygiene procedures. The Health and Safety Executive has been fully informed of the proposed working method and is satisfied that no risk to the health of those undertaking the work is involved. Masters of vessels engaged in the work will be provided with details of the correct requirements. Throughout the operation and for a period thereafter, there will be careful monitoring around the area of dredging and the dumping ground and in selected locations around the estuary. This will be carried out by specialist consultants on behalf of the Property Services Agency. Monitoring stations will be set up to measure levels of turbidity, suspended solids and dissolved oxygen as well as asbestos content. Stringent monitoring levels will be set. The Clyde river purification board will also carry out its routine monitoring of turbidity, suspended solids and dissolved oxygen around the dredging area.

In resolving the best approach, the Property Services Agency has discussed in detail with the appropriate authorities the proposed working method and the most suitable method of disposal. From these discussions it is clear that the site between Cloch point and Strone point is the best solution on environmental and economic grounds. It is a regularly used dumping ground; it is well charted and known to fishermen as such. The material from the dredging operation will be discharged through opening the bottom of each vessel within a restricted area in a mean water depth of 59 m and marine scientists from the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland are satisfied that if, as planned, the dumping is properly controlled, material will not spread beyond the designated area. Depositing the dredged material elsewhere in the Gareloch was ruled out because of the risk of adversely affecting the oxygen regime; the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland ruled out "The Hole" off Rosneath point for fishery reasons and Birch point off Arran because of the important fishery grounds around the periphery of the dump site and to prevent interference with DAFS monitoring in the area.

Although a Government Department does not require a dredging licence, the Property Services Agency has obtained one from the Clyde port authority. In addition, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, which would normally license deposits in the sea under Part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, the Clyde river purification board and the Marine Directorate of the Department of Transport have confirmed that the agency's proposals are acceptable to them. Local fishing interests have also been consulted and have confirmed that they have no objections.

None of the asbestos contaminated material bagged and stored on site last year at the Clyde submarine base, nor any onshore material, will be deposited under water. Entirely separate arrangements have been made to deal with that material, as announced last year, and work is already under way.

ENVIRONMENT

Widdicombe Committee

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to ensure that all submissions to the Widdicombe committee are made available to the public.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Widdicombe report explains that the written evidence submitted to the Inquiry has been placed on deposit at the Public Record Office where it is open to public inspection, with the exception of those submissions which were expressly made to the committee in confidence. In addition, several of the main submissions have been separately published by the authors themselves.

Hampshire Club, Winchester

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an indication as to the likely date when the decision in respect of planning appeal number APP/A5270/A85/31065 (The Hampshire club, Winchester) heard on Wednesday 16 October 1985 is to be announced.

Mr. Tracey: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 25 June informing him of the latest position on the appeal concerning the Hampshire club, Winchester.

Satman

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire of 30 April, Official Report, column 408, what further discussions he has had with the London residuary body about £76 million granted by the Greater London council to the firm Satman for housing repairs in the London boroughs.

Sir George Young: The London residuary body has kept my Department informed of its actions in the matter. On the basis of its own legal advice, it has decided to seek judicial review of the GLC's decision in relation to part of the payment amounting to some £39 million.

River Thames

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what conditions he expects to impose on any private company in respect of the ownership, maintenance and operation of the locks and weirs of the River Thames.

Mr. John Patten: Navigation responsibilities, including duties relating to the ownership, maintenance and operation of locks and weirs in the Thames, are subject to the requirements of various local statutes. I intend that all existing obligations of Thames WA should be transferred to the successor PLC.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the names of statutory bodies, organisations and persons he has consulted in respect of his plans to transfer the ownership of the River Thames to a private limited company;

(2) what consultations he has had with each London borough, respectively, concerning the future discharge of statutory duties on the tidal reaches of the River Thames currently exercised by the Thames water authority.

(3) what consultations he has had with the council of the London borough of Richmond on Thames concerning his plans to transfer the ownership and management of the River Thames to a private limited company;

(4) what consultations he has had or expects to have with the council of the Royal borough of Kingston on Thames concerning his plan to transfer the ownership of the River Thames to a private limited company;

(5) what consultations he has had or expects to have with the corporation of the city of London in respect of future discharge of statutory responsibilities in the tidal reaches of the river Thames, currently the responsibility of the Thames Water Authority;

(6) what consultations he has had or expects to have with the county councils of Surrey, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire and Gloucestershire, respectively, concerning the future ownership, control and management of the river Thames;

(7) what consultations he has had or expects to have with the boroughs of Elmbridge, Runnymede, Windsor and Maidenhead, Reading, and Oxford, respectively, concerning his plans to transfer the ownership and management of the river Thames to a private limited company;

(8) what consultations he has had or expects to have with the district councils of Spelthorne, Wokingham, Beaconsfield, Wycombe, South Oxfordshire, Newbury West, Oxfordshire, the Vale of Whitehorse, and Thamesdown, respectively, concerning transfer of the ownership and management of the river Thames to a private limited company.

Mr. John Patten: The possibility of transferring the water authorities to the private sector was presented in our discussion paper issued last year. The Government's proposals were subsequently set out in the White Paper "Privatisation of the Water Authorities in England and Wales" (Cmnd. 9734) issued in February 1986. We have received comments from a wide variety of organisations and individuals, but it is for the originators of these comments to decide if they wish to make their views public. We have not initiated, and do not plan, consultation specifically on the future of the Thames water authority.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in respect of the statement made in respect of foreign capital and water services, 23 June, Official Report, column 37, he will state the nature of the safeguards he expects to seek to include in future legislation relating to such investment.

Mr. John Patten: I do not expect that it will be necessary to insert safeguards in future legislation. PLC status will enable the Government to retain a golden share which may regulate the size of particular shareholdings. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission will also have a significant role to play in safeguarding the public.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, pursuant to the answers to the hon. Member for Bimingham, Perry Barr, (Mr. Rooker) Official Report, 17 June, columns 505-6, those factors which led to the Z score of 3·71 for Coventry; if he will give the figures for previous years for which data are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The indicators and method used by my Department in its analysis of urban deprivation are set out in "Census Information Note No 2: Urban Deprivation" produced by the inner cities directorate. This publication is in the House of Commons Library.

The indicators used in the combined index of deprivation (basic Z-Score), which are all taken from the 1981 census, are:

i. per cent. unemployed persons
ii. per cent. overcrowded households
iii. per cent single parent families
iv. per cent. households lacking exclusive use of basic amenities
v. per cent. pensioners living alone
vi. per cent residents living in households where the head of household was born in New Commonwealth or Pakistan.

The position of any authority on each of these indicators in relation to the national average will determine the contribution of each to the basic Z-score. In Coventry indicators (i), (ii), (iii) and (vi) were the main contributors to the overall Z-score. In each case Coventry was in the top 50 of the English local authorities.

As indicated in the previous answer the "Housing" Z-score is not a measure of housing need, but an indicator of multiple deprivation (the basic Z-score) in which housing factors (indicators (ii) and (iv)) are given an additional weighting.

There are no comparable figures for previous years. However, in 1971 Coventry only ranked in the top 50 authorities on indicators (ii) and (vi).

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many gipsy sites in England and Wales have partial designation; and in which counties they are.

Mr. Tracey: Designation under section 12 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 refers to local authority areas. A list of designated areas in England was included in my recent reply to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley), Official Report 18 June 1986 columns 549-550.

A list of gipsy sites in England is in the Library. Questions on gipsy matters in Wales are for the Secretary of State for Wales.

Rates

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to use his powers under part II of the Rates Act 1984 in respect of rate limitation for the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend will be announcing his proposals for selective rate limitation in 1987-88 before the summer recess. As the hon. Member is aware, a proposal to introduce general rate limitation would require consultation with the local authority associations and be subject to the approval of both Houses of Parliament.

Lime Street Chambers, Liverpool

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department first received a letter from the solicitor of Liverpool city council concerning a planning appeal in relation to advertising panels on Lime street chambers; when a reply was sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The Department received a letter dated 14 March from the Council, following a communication from the Department about an appeal against a discontinuance notice issued by the council. A substantive reply has not been sent; but the council has been told by telephone that the Department is considering the legal issues, and a reply will be sent shortly.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the action he proposes to take on the representations from Liverpool city council for the removal of advertisment panels at Lime street chambers, details of which have been sent to him by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside.

Mr. Tracey: The Department is considering the legal issue of whether the council's power to issue a discontinuance notice in respect of advertisement panels at Lime street chambers was properly exercised, and therefore whether there is a valid appeal against the notice. A reply will be sent to the council shortly.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters his Department has received from the Liverpool city council's solicitor concerning a planning appeal in relation to advertisement panels on Lime street chambers.

Mr. Tracey: One letter, dated 14 March, followed by two reminders.

Correspondence

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how long on average it takes his Department to reply to letters from local authorities.

Mr. Ridley: This information is not available.

Birlsbury Wood

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was paid to the owners of Birlsbury Wood on the borders of Hampshire and Dorset under the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for not clearing the woodland; under which sections of the Act; and how much has been paid in total in similar payments made under the financial guidelines of this Act in the past 12 months.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her reply, 27 June 1986, c. 348-9]: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that during 1985-86 it paid a total of £1,967,715 in respect of management agreements made under section 15 of the Countryside Act 1968. Approximately £300,000 of this total related to woodland agreements.

Block Grant (Disregards)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report those items for which disregards have been requested for 1985-86 under section 8(4) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 25 June 1986, c. 239]: I am writing to the hon. Member.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Community Radio

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement about the community radio experiment.

Mr. Hurd: Last year my predecessor invited applications for 21 experimental community radio licences, explaining that in selecting the successful applicants he would have the benefit of advice from a panel of advisers under the chairmanship of Mr. Stephen O'Brien. I am most grateful to him and his colleagues for their careful work in sifting the large number of applications which were made.

It had been hoped to start this two-year experiment several months ago. But various difficulties arose and anxieties were expressed about its exact form. There would have been no regulatory body, and yet the public would have expected certain minimum standards of objectivity and decency to be maintained. Even in an experiment in partial deregulation, some minimum would still be necessary, particularly when existing local radio stations are subject to the rules in the BBC charter and the 1981

Broadcasting Act. Home Office Ministers would in practice have been held directly responsible for the content of what was broadcast during the experiment. Their only method of control would have been to insert conditions in the licence, and their only sanction the withdrawal of the licence if the conditions had been breached—a sanction which might well have seemed arbitrary and open to challenge.

As we sought a satisfactory answer to this problem, it became clear that the whole question needed to be looked at in the light of other problems and proposals now affecting radio. The Indpendent Broadcasting Authority wishes to proceed with an independent national radio. Some ILR stations are concerned about their commercial future under the existing system. Professor Peacock's committee has included some proposals on radio in his report to be published later this week.

The Government have therefore decided to give up the idea of an immediate experiment in community radio, the exact form of which was still causing difficulty, and to look again at community radio among the matters to be covered in the forthcoming Green Paper on radio. As the timing has worked out, an experiment in community radio would have delayed the time when the whole future of radio could be coherently considered. The Green Paper will undertake that consideration.

I am conscious of the disappointment which this statement will cause to some, and of the effort which many people have incurred. I would like to express my regret in particular to all those who made applications and to the advisory panel which considered them. Their efforts have shown that there is enthusiastic and constructive support for community radio and I hope that we shall be able to devise suitable arrangements for it to take its part in our radio system.

Community Programme

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the results of the trial runs of the comprehensive community programme in Wandsworth, the Wirral, Bradford and Gateshead; and what was the total cost involved.

Mr. Waddington: I understand that only two pilot projects under the comprehensive community programme were actually started—in Bradford and Gateshead—and that they became 'mainstream' projects under the urban programme when responsibility for urban deprivation was transferred from the Home Office to the Department of the Environment in June 1977. I regret that I have no information about the results of either of these projects and that it is not now possible to estimate their total cost.

Civil Defence

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the provisions for civil defence in Swindon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 make it a duty of county councils to make provision for civil defence in their areas. We are examining the civil defence plans prepared by Wiltshire county council under these regulations along with those of other county councils. We will report to the House in due course.

Gillingham Police Station (Firearms)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the recent disappearance of a handgun and ammunition from Gillingham police station and the consequent inquiry.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable of Kent constabulary that a routine check of firearms stored at Gillingham police station at the end of April revealed that a firearm and some ammunition were unaccounted for. The chief constable has ordered a full investigation of the matter as well as a review of force procedures for the storage and security of firearms. The chief constable will in due course forward a report to Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary who is aware of the incident and who will keep us informed.

Liverpool Prison (Shower Facilities)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how long there has been a dispute about shower facilities at Liverpool prison; if he has any plans to increase manning levels at the prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The use of the showers on K wing, which was refurbished in 1982-83, involves the wider issue of the provision of association at Liverpool prison. We have no plans at present to increase manning levels there but it is expected that manning will be reviewed in the general follow-up to the recent study of shift and complementing systems.

News International, Wapping

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests have taken place at Wapping in connection with the printing dispute from 16 June to date.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Ninety six up to midnight on 29 June.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to be able to provide a substantive reply to the question tabled by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, for priority written answer on 16 June relating to the police operation at Wapping;

(2) what has been to date (a) the cost to public funds of the public operation outside Mr. Rupert Murdoch's establishment at Wapping, (b) the proportion of total Metropolitan police manpower engaged in these operations, (c) the proportion of total Metropolitan police time taken up by these operations, (d) the effect of these operations on other Metropolitan police operations and (e) which anti-crime activities have specifically been affected.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1986, c. 409]: I understand from the Commissioner that the additional costs of policing the News International dispute at Wapping up to 14 June are estimated to be about £1 million. The number of officers deployed varies from day to day and hour to hour according to the operational requirement; the maximum number of officers deployed on any one occasion has been 1870. Over 570,000 police man hours have been spent in connection with the dispute.

As to the effect on other Metropolitan police operations, I would refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) on 8 May at column 207.

Plastic Baton Rounds

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will withdraw Home Office circular No. 40-1986 (Plastic Baton Rounds/CS: Central Facilities); what action he is taking in response to a letter dated 19 June from the clerk to the Northumbria police authority concerning that circular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The letter referred to is being considered and a reply will be sent as soon as possible.

Civil Defence

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether the police, the armed forces and other statutory bodies, including public utilities, will be asked to participate in the regional defence exercises in November;

(2) whether the regional emergency committees will be participating in the civil defence exercises taking place in November;

(3) whether the emergency communications network will be activated during the regional defence exercises;

(4) what regional civil defence exercises are planned for November in the current year; what are the exact dates of these; and what is the purpose of each;

(5) whether the county councils will be asked to activitate their emergency plans during the regional civil defence exercises in November;

(6) whether the pilot study on the co-ordination of regional emergency planning being carried out in the north-west will be tested during the regional civil defence exercise in the region;

(7) whether the regional civil defence exercises are intended as a pilot for a future national civil defence exercise;

(8) what will be the scenario for the regional civil defence exercises in November.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Exercises are being planned in region 6 (south-east England) to take place from 24 to 26 November, and in region 10 (north-west England) on 27 and 28 November. The scenarios for both will cover a period of international tension prior to the onset of hostilities and in region 10 conventional war.

The region 6 exercise will test the plans of the local authorities at county and in some cases at district level. The region 10 exercise will test the regional emergency committee arrangements; local authorities can participate if they wish. Final details on participation have not yet been settled, but in addition to the local authorities, it is hoped that all civil organisations with responsibilities in a war crisis will take part.

The emergency communication network will not be used in region 10. No decision has yet been reached in region 6.

The purpose of the pilot study in No. 10 region is to examine the requirement for co-ordination of regional home defence planning and how it might be met. The exercise may therefore inform the study, but the question of testing it does not arise.

There are no present plans for a national civil defence exercise.

Wormwood Scrubs Prison

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what use the existing purpose-built replacement hospital block at Wormwood Scrubs prison is currently being put; how much has been spent on its construction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: There is as yet no purpose-built replacement hospital block at Wormwood Scrubs prison, and the hospital is at present operating in temporary accommodation in B wing. As part of the original redevelopment plan for the prison, the old hospital building was to have been refurbished and improved. When that redevelopment scheme was abandoned in 1983, £762,000 had been spent on the provision of a new roof and limited structural alterations, but to have brought it up to an acceptable standard to meet health and safety and fire requirements would have involved much additional work and cost, which it was decided could not be justified.

A very small part of the old hospital building is being used for storage, and part of its mechanical services are operational to provide a feeder service to the nearby visits building. It is otherwise not in use. At a later stage, however, it will play an essential part in the redevelopment programme by providing temporary accommodation for a number of individual units, including the farms and gardens unit, clothing exchange stores and works department, when their existing buildings have been demolished to make way for permanent replacement facilities.

As part of the redevelopment we propose to provide a permanent hospital and operating theatre within a new building linking the four existing wings of the prison. Subject to the necessary financial and planning procedures, it is hoped that work on this new building will begin in 1988 and be completed in 1991.

Police Cadets (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to accept a request from the West Yorkshire police authority for him to sanction the continued employment of 33 police cadets, appointed in the financial year 1985-86, and to permit the direct recruitment of a further 54 police cadets, of whom 15 would be financed by the Manpower Services Commission through the YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend has now approved the inclusion of 87 police cadets in the establishment scheme on the understanding that the actual intake will not exceed 10 per cent. of the force's annual recruitment.

Police Motorcycles (Noise)

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made as to whether current police motor cycles in use with the Metropolitan Police will be able to pass the noise during acceleration tests included in the most recent EEC directives on motor cycle noise.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the Metropolitan police have not carried out any assessment of motor cycles currently in use because there is no requirement under existing or proposed EC directives for the operator as opposed to the manufacturer to do so.

South Africa (British Nationals)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to withdraw British nationality from United Kingdom citizens who serve in the South African defence force or police.

Mr. Waddington: No.

South Africa (Draft Resisters and Conscientious Objectors)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to offer asylum to draft resisters and conscientious objectors from South Africa.

Mr. Waddington: All applications for asylum are carefully considered on their individual merits in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 convention relating to the status of refugees. Unwillingness to perform military service is not generally regarded as of itself justifying refugee recognition.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be giving a substantive reply to the letter of 21 April sent by the hon. Member for Walsall, North regarding a constituent in Short Heath, Willenhall.

Mr. Waddington: My office has recently informed the hon. Member that arrangements have been made for his constituent to be seen by an immigration officer on 2 July. I will write to him after that meeting.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be in a position to reply to the letter of 24 April from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, acknowledged by his Department in May, concerning Mr. Vilis Grinvalds of School House, Ravensdale road, Wyken, Coventry.

Mr. Waddington: I wrote to the hon. Member on 26 June.

Hippie Convoy

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to provide a substantive reply to the question tabled by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, for priority written answer on 16 June relating to the cost of breaking up the hippie convoy.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable of Hampshire than an accurate assessment of the costs of police operations relating to the convoy on 9 June should be available next week. I will then be able to let the right hon. Member have a substantive reply to his question of 16 June.

Criminal Damage, Merseyside

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Merseyside on the recent rise in the incidence of urban criminal damage and thefts from motor vehicles on Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the chief constable that changes in recording practices are largely responsible for the apparent rise in criminal damage offences on Merseyside. The rise in thefts from motor vehicles is not readily explicable; but the incidence of particular types of offence can vary considerably from year to year. Comparable figures for the whole of England and Wales are not yet available.

Birmingham (Riot Damage)

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much compensation has been (a) claimed and (b) paid in respect of damages from riot in the Handsworth and Lozells areas of Birmingham; how many such claims were received; and how many remain outstanding.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The West Midlands police authority is the relevant compensation authority for outstanding claims under the Riot (Damages) Act 1886 arising from the Handsworth disorders in September 1985. The Home Office is not involved in the processing of claims.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Ministerial Visit

21. Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to pay an official visit to the Duchy.

Mr. Tebbit: On 23 September this year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Books (Canadian Tariff)

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what action Her Majesty's Government have taken in response to the decision of the Canadian Government to impose a 10 per cent. tariff on imports of British books;

(2) if he plans to ask the European Community to take any action in response to the Canadian Government's imposition of a 10 per cent. tariff on British books;

(3) what is the estimated loss to British exports resulting from the recent Canadian tariffs on imports of books from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Canadian Government have imposed a 10 per cent. tariff on imports of English language books. The loss to United Kingdom exports, which was some £22 million in 1985, will depend upon the extent to which the 10 per cent. tariff can be absorbed by United Kingdom exports; but is clearly a matter of concern. Her Majesty's Government have therefore raised the issue with the European Commission and has made bilateral representations to the Canadian authorities.

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Her Majesty's Government have made any representations to the Canadian Government on the possibility of Canada acceding to the Florence agreement prohibiting tariffs on the import of books.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. However the question of the recent imposition of a 10 per cent. tariff on English language books has been taken up bilaterally with the Canadian Government.

Takeovers and Mergers

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on takeovers and mergers; and what recent representations he has received about this policy.

Mr. Howard: Our policy on takeovers and mergers is that references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission should be made primarily on competition grounds. I believe that this policy has in general operated effectively. However, it has attracted attention in recent months as a result of the high level of merger activity; and my right hon. Friend announced on 5 June a review of law and policy on mergers and restrictive trade practices.

My right hon. Friend and I receive regular representations on aspects of mergers policy. We are inviting representations in the context of the review, in the first instance no later than the end of July.

Investment

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, using 1979 prices, he will publish in the Official Report the figures for investment in (a) manufacturing industry and (b) service industries for each year since 1978 to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is not available in terms of 1979 prices. The latest figures for investment, at 1980 prices, were published on pages 603 to 605 of British business on 27 June 1986.

Television Sets (China)

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is now in a position to announce his Department's response to the recent official request by the overseas trade authorities of the People's Republic of China to open a quota for imported television sets from China to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: A proposal to open an import quota for Chinese television sets has been submitted to the European Commission. An announcement will be made when the Community has reached a decision.

Jaguar

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what request his Department has made to BL for the repayment of open market borrowings with some of the receipts from the sale of Jaguar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Leyland Bus

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what part of the spares business is proposed to be sold off with Leyland Bus.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In order to achieve BL's aim of keeping the parts business intact, the company has proposed to sell to any eventual purchaser of Leyland Bus a significant minority equity interest in a separate Leyland parts company.

Land Rover

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the latest position on the future of Land Rover.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The position on Land Rover remains as outlined to the House in my right hon. Friend's statement on 24 April.

Brymbo Steelworks

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has taken to date and what action he proposes to take to secure investment at Brymbo steelworks.

Mr. Peter Morrison: When the formation of United Engineering Steels (the owners of Brymbo Steelworks) was announced, the Government stated that they had approved the provision of funds for BSC to subscribe £55 million for preference shares and loans stock in the new company, on the understanding that the company would undertake further investments. Decisions on the location of new investment projects at UES plants are of course matters for the UES board.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Schemes

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 23 June, Official Report, column 14, if he will say why he did not provide a substantive reply to the first part of the hon. Member's question on the same basis as the answer given to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) the same day, Official Report, column 15; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General what arrangements apply to disabled young people refusing an offer of a place on YTS with regard to their existing benefit payments or future claims for benefit.

Mr. Lang: Under the Social Security Act 1975, YTS has been designated as approved training, and any young person who unreasonably refuses such training may lose unemployment benefit for up to six weeks; supplementary benefit may also be reduced for this reason.

Entitlement to benefit is decided by independent adjudicating authorities set up under the Social Security Act. They take into account the individual circumstances of each case, including a person's physical or mental ability to undertake the training offered, in deciding whether a refusal is unreasonable.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General how many disabled young people presently take part in YTS in Britain.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I regret this information is not available at the moment. The Manpower Services Commission's computerised management information system, from which YTS statistics are obtained, is currently being re-programmed and improved to meet the needs of two-year YTS. As a result of this work information about the participation of young disabled people on YTS will not be available until the end of this Summer.

I shall write to the hon. Member with this information as soon as it becomes available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General what figures he has to show the number of young people applying to take part in YTS each year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I regret that I am unable to answer the question, as the Manpower Services Commission does not record numbers of young people applying for YTS.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General what figures he has to show the number of disabled young people refusing the offer of a place in YTS in each of the last three years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General (1) if he has evidence to indicate whether the level of payments under YTS are a disincentive to disabled young people in receipt of social security benefits for their disablement;

(2) if he has any plans to vary the fixed rate of training allowance paid to YTS trainees to meet individual cases of need.

Mr. Lang: There is no evidence of any significant disincentive effect from the present system of allowances and we have no plans at present for any change. A balance has to be struck between a level of allowance sufficient to attract young people to YTS and the need to use as much as possible of the money available for the actual provision of training. I am satisfied that, in general, trainees' needs are being met adequately through the existing system of allowances, together with the provision for payments of supplementary benefit where this is appropriate.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General (1) why figures showing numbers of young people taking part in YTS are not published in the latest issue of Employment Gazette;

(2) if he will ensure that figures showing numbers of young people taking part in YTS are published for the latest available date in every issue of Employment Gazette.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I regret that the necessary information was not available in the time for the regular article containing YTS statistics to appear in the June edition of the Employment Gazette. However, figures showing the number of young people in training on YTS at the end of May will appear in the next edition of the Employment Gazette, to be published on 3 July, and the latest available figures will be published in future editions.

Disabled 16 and 17-year-olds

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General what is the population of disabled economically active 16 and 17-year-olds in Britain.

Mr. Ian Lang: Information is not available in the exact for requested.

Preliminary labour force survey results for the spring of 1985 estimate that there were about 47,000 economically active 16 and 17-year-olds in Great Britain who were limited in the kind of paid work they could do by a health problem or disability.

ENERGY

Radiation

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy in what form stocks of potassium iodide tablets, potassium iodate tablets and aqueous iodine Lugol's solution, are held; and what are the doses in which each of these forms are to be administered to adults and children in the event of excessive radiation exposure.

Mr. Goodlad: Stocks are held by operators mainly in the form of potassium iodate tablets and would be administered on their instruction in accordance with medical advice.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish details of the system by which stocks of iodine will be administered to the population in the event of an emergency; and whether it is proposed that such administration will be prior to or after people have been exposed to excessive levels of radioiodines.

Mr. Goodlad: The system is set out in the Health and Safetyh Executive's booklet "Emergency Plans for Civil Nuclear Installations".

Coal (Output)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the current output per manshift in British Coal.

Mr. David Hunt: The deep mine overall revenue output per man shift for British Coal in the week ending 7 June was 3·23 tonnes, the highest weekly figure achieved so far.

Coal Industry (Funding)

Mr. Ron Davis asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman of the National Coal Board regarding the funding of the industry.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the National Coal Board regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry, including its funding. The NCB's recovery during 1985-86 put the board on a firmer foundation at the start of 1986-87, although lower oil prices have increased the competitive pressure on the industry. The NCB's external financing limit for 1986-87 has been set at £730 million, and its capital approval for that year at £650 million.

British Gas

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a further revised draft of the proposed authorisation to be given to British Gas under the Gas Bill.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have today arranged for copies of the further revised draft authorisation, together with the draft of the directions to be given under clause 63 of the Bill, to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses, the Printed Paper Office and the Vote Office.

Plutonium

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, in what ways the plutonium with plutonium-240 content less than 15 per cent. produced by Hinkley Point A, Sizewell and Oldbury since 1 April 1969 has been disposed of.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to the reply, 26 June 1986, c. 269-70]: It is the practice to co-process all fuel discharged from the generating board's Magnox reactors. The resulting plutonium is retained in the civil cycle.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

South Africa (Products)

Mr. Hancock asked the Lord Privy Seal if any product of South Africa is on sale in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Biffen: I understand that there are no South African products on sale in the Refreshment Department of the House of Commons.

Summer Recess

Mr. Deakins asked the Lord Privy Seal on how many occasions since 1970 the House has adjourned for the summer recess (a) before 23 July, (b) between 23 and 26 July, (c) between 27 and 31 July and (d) in August.

Mr. John Biffen: Since 1970, the House has adjourned on one occasion before 23 July; on three occasions between 23 and 26 July; on five occasions between 27 and 31 July; and on seven occasions in August.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sri Lanka

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current amount of overseas aid for Sri Lanka; if he will indicate what percentage has been allocated for military equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: Expenditure for Sri Lanka from the overseas aid programme during the current financial year is expected to be about £5 million. None of this has been allocated for military equipment; aid programme resources are not made available for this purpose.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, further to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, columns 433-4, he will publish in the Official Report particulars showing which items of expenditure account for the difference between the United Kingdom and each of the other countries concerned at the secondary level, including salaries, school books and equipment, and maintenance of buildings.

Mr. Dunn: The available information is shown in the following table based on my pursuant answer of 12 June, at column 278. No breakdown by level is available for the United States of America. The proportion of administrative and other educational expenditure unallocated to educational levels varies between the countries concerned affecting these comparisons.

Expenditure[1] per pupil at 1983 values (£)[2], second level[3], by area of expenditure

	Year	Total	Teacher emoluments	School books, teaching materials	Scholarships and Welfare Services	Administration and Unclassified[9]
France	1980	1,300	960	[4]—	200	130
Japan[5]	1982	1,120	680	100	50	290
Germany, Federal Republic of[6]	1982	1,320	1,040	[7] n.a.	60	220
United Kingdom[8]	1983	1,210	800	60	70	290

n.a. = Not available.

[1] Current expenditure only, rounded to nearest £10.

[2] No specific inflator for education expenditure is available. Hence, as a proxy, expenditure per pupil in foreign currencies were converted to pound sterling at 1983 values by adjusting to 1983 levels via OECD consumer price indices and then applying OECD purchasing power parity factors. These allow for exchange rates and differences in the cost of living between countries. Public sector costs, including subsidies to private education, (covering costs such as teachers' salaries) have been divided by all pupils, (except for Japan—see footnote).

[3] Equates broadly with secondary school education and non-advanced further education.

[4] Parents provide textbooks in some types of school.

[5] Excludes public subsidies and pupil numbers in private sector secondary schools. Tuition fees are charged for post-compulsory education.

[6] Including expenditure but excluding students in part-time vocational education (some 1·8 million for all levels).

[7] Not included in the unit cost.

[8] Rates based on full-time equivalent pupil/student numbers. Excludes privte sector schools and colleges.

[9] Includes expenditure on maintenance and operation of buildings and equipment.

Playing Fields

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the criteria for the extent of provision of playing fields at sixth form or tertiary colleges.

Mr. Dunn: The statutory requirements for the provisions of playing fields at sixth form colleges are set out in regulation 6 and schedule 3 of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 (S.I. 909). The regulations do not apply to tertiary colleges but my Department's building bulletin 28 "Playing Fields and Hard Surface Areas" (a copy of which is in the Library of the House) contains advice relevant to provision for the 16 to 19 age group.

Teachers' Salaries

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on differentiated salaries to facilitate the recruitment in secondary, further and higher education on staff with scarce and marketable skills.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government believe that salary structures should be such as to attract, retain and motivate teachers, including those who have scarce and marketable skills. Structure reform talks are currently taking place in the schools, further education and university sectors. The Government have made clear their view that one outcome of those talks should be sufficent flexibility for employers to attract and retain staff whose skills are in short supply.

Teachers (Computer Training)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking to promote training for teachers in computer skills.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend will be supporting through the in-service teacher training grants scheme from September this year 90 per cent. of the replacement costs of teachers attending approved courses on teaching computing and microelectronics and training in the uses of microelectronics across the curriculum. A wide range of other in-service training courses in computing is supported by our system for pooling local authority training costs. In addition we are providing £3 million this financial year to fund the microelectronics education support unit, which will assist with the training of teachers, provide a central resource of information and develop curriculum materials across the whole area of new technology in schools. This work builds upon the highly successful microelectronics education programme.

Primary Schools (North Devon)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the information available to him on the replacement building programme for primary schools in north Devon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Our knowledge of local education authorities' building programmes is derived from their annual bids for capital allocations. In their bid for 1986-87, Devon LEA included the following references to primary schools in North Devon:

Start year	Name of school	Project	Bid 1986-87 £
1984-85*	Bradworthy County Primary		2,000
1985-86*	Barnstaple Newport County Primary		270,000
1986-87	Dolton CE Aided Primary	Small upgrading scheme (minor work)	24,000
1987-88	Chulmleigh County Primary	Replace and enlarge	—
1988-89	Abbotsham CE Aided Primary	Replace and enlarge	—

* These are projects already underway (committed expenditure).

Illiteracy

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of illiterate people in the United Kingdom; and what steps he is taking to seek to eliminate illiteracy.

Mr. Walden: The national child development study survey of 1981 found that 10 per cent. of the 23 year olds asked said they had had reading problems since leaving school which had made things difficult for them in everyday life.

The Government's policy for raising standards of literacy in schools are set out in the White Paper "Better Schools", published last year. The Department of Education and Science and the Welsh Office jointly fund the adult literacy and basic skills unit to help develop educational provision to overcome illiteracy amongst adults. Grant has been raised from £360,000 in 1979-80 to £2,170,000 in 1986-87; a sixfold increase.

Policies to combat literacy problems in Scotland and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Commonwealth Education Ministers (Conference)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals Her Majesty's Government are preparing to put forward at the Commonwealth Education Ministers conference in 1987.

Mr. Chris Patten: On the basis of ideas discussed at a meeting of Commonwealth Education Ministers in Sofia in October 1985, in which my hon. Friend the Member for the City of London and Westminster, South (Mr. Brooke) participated, the Commonwealth Secretariat hopes shortly to propose the theme for the 1987 conference in Nairobi. My right hon. Friend will then consider how best to make a positive and constructive contribution to the discussion of the theme in Nairobi and to any opportunities for useful, practical co-operation between Commonwealth countries which could arise from it.

School Books and Equipment

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list per capita spending in primary and in secondary schools on (a) books and (b) equipment at outturn and at real prices in each of the last five years.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

Expenditure per pupil on books and equipment—England

	Primary schools				Secondary schools
	Books		Equipment		Books		Equipment
	Cash	Real terms*	Cash	Real terms*	Cash	Real terms*	Cash	Real terms*

Universities (Funding)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the change in the funding of universities in cash and constant 1985-86 prices between 1980-81 and 1986-87, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, for redundancy and for early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant, changes in local authority rates and additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Between 1980-81 and 1986-87 public funding of universities has increased by 28·8 per cent. in cash terms, which is a fall of 6·3 per cent. in constant 1985-86 prices (using the GDP deflator). Excluding the funding elements selectively listed by the hon. Member, there was an increase over the same period of 13·1 per cent. in cash terms equivalent to a reduction of 17·8 per cent. in 1985-86 prices. Such exclusions are unrealistic; payment of items such as local authority rates and compensation for redundancies and early retirement are part and parcel of the cost of running large institutions. Since 1980-81, universities' income from private sources has increased substantially.

SCOTLAND

Visitors (North America)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Scottish tourist board about the number of visitors from North America expected in the current summer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State met the Chairman of the Scottish Tourist Board at the opening of the British Travel Centre on 13 June. Later that day, he joined the Chairman at a special welcome for North American visitors at the Scottish Tourist Board office at 19 Cockspur street, London. The theme for the day was "Go for Scotland, America."

There was evidence of some downturn in visitors from North America in April and May. The indications are that the situation is beginning to return to normal and that the North American trade is picking up again. There are a number of special factors this year which are having an impact. Firstly, 1984 and 1985 were exceptionally good years with considerable growth in the number of Americans visiting the United Kingdom. It would have been unrealistic to expect this rapid growth to have continued indefinitely. Exchange rates are not this year as favourable for the North American visitor, gasoline prices have fallen in America and their home market is being aggressively marketed with many competitive packages on offer. Also, we cannot ignore the special attraction this year of EXPO '86 in Vancouver.

The British Tourist Authority and the Scottish Tourist Board have stepped up their marketing activities. Last year the Scottish Tourist Board launched a new scheme—AMNET—to promote Scotland and Scottish tourist products through the United States travel trade. The aim is to increase awareness of Scotland as a holiday destination and to build up a network of United States travel firms handling Scottish holidays. It is expected that this scheme will increase visits to Scotland but it is too early to assess its impact.

Radioactivity

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what improvements he proposes in the arrangements for regular monitoring of all levels of radioactivity throughout Scotland, in the light of the recent Chernobyl incident and representations from local inhabitants and others in south-west Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The regular monitoring of radioactivity in the environment in Scotland is already kept under review. The need for any extension to these arrangements, in the light of the Chernobyl incident and representations about monitoring in general, is currently being considered by my Department in conjunction with other agencies involved in this field, such as the National Radiological Protection Board.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are made by his Department for monitoring radioactivity among livestock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: A wide-ranging programme of testing of both grazing animals and animals in slaughterhouses has been put in hand and will be continued for as long as is necessary. The results of tests on animals in slaughterhouses have given rise to no cause for concern. Results are being published as and when they become available.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the letter of 2 June to him from the Director of the Clyde river purification board on monitoring of radioactivity in the Clyde area and his reply; if he will give the information on which he based his statement that the board had undertaken monitoring of radioactivity in the Clyde estuary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I have arranged for copies of the letter of 2 June from the Director of the Clyde river purification board and the Scottish Development Department's reply of 19 June to be placed in the Library.

The Scottish Development Department's letter did not state that the Clyde river purification board was undertaking monitoring of radioactivity but clarified earlier correspondence which appears to have led to this erroneous interpretation. The correct position is that long term research work on radioactivity in the Clyde estuary being undertaken by the department of chemistry of Glasgow university involved the analysis of water samples taken by the Clyde river purification board.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what indications were obtained from spectographic and other analysis of the radioactivity in lambs, and elsewhere in South West Scotland of the source or sources.

Mr. John MacKay: The ratio of the two caesium isotopes (Cs-134 and Cs-137) found in current tests on lambs is characteristic of Chernobyl fallout.

Incontinence Aids

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients in Scotland receive incontinence aids, including pads and pants, on prescription; what he estimates to be the annual cost of this service; and what estimate he has made of the cost if the service were provided through the health centres and district nurses.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. and learned Member as soon as possible.

Ambulances

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department holds any information on the age and mileage of dual purpose ambulances in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish Home and Health Department does not hold this information.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make available the review of his Department's arrangements for dealing with environmental topics in Scotland; if he will outline the specific remits and areas of interest of the newly-established rural, environment and countryside division and of the environmental protection unit; and what are the annual budgets and numbers of staff at the disposal of each.

Mr. Ancram: The organisational arrangements within the Scottish Development Department for discharging its responsibilities relating to the environment are kept under continuous review to ensure that appropriate action can be taken to meet current needs.

The main responsibilities of the rural environment and nature conservation division of the Department are to carry forward the Government's policies in relation to environmental conservation in the countryside; to discharge the Secretary of State's sponsorship responsibilities for the Countryside Commission for Scotland; and to liaise with the Nature Conservancy Council and the Forestry Commission on countryside and conservation issues. It has a budget of £380,000 in 1986-87 and a staff of 15.

The main responsibilities of the environmental protection division are to deal with policy and legislation on the maintenance and improvement of the aquatic, aerial and land enforcement, and on the supply of water and sewerage services. It has a budget of about £300,000 in 1986-87 and a staff of 14. In addition, the civil engineering and water services unit and Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate provide technical advice and services on environmental matters and supply the staff for the hazardous waste inspectorate in Scotland. The number of staff directly involved in the provision of these services is 10, with a budget of approximately £305,000 in 1986-87.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been lost, and how many have been created, in the Cumbernauld and Kilsyth constituency since May 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Comprehensive information on jobs created and jobs lost is not available. There were 3,419 redundancies affecting 10 or more employees notified to the Cumbernauld and Kilsyth jobcentres in the period since 1 May 1979: the area covered by these jobcentres is slightly larger than the constituency. In the period 1 May 1979 to 31 May 1986, 1,230 new jobs and 860 safeguarded jobs were associated with offers of regional selective assistance to businesses in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth constituency. In the period to 31 May 1986, 940 jobs were associated with offers of the new regional development grant. It should be noted that some projects receive both types of assistance.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of people employed in Scotland in the microelectronics industry in each of the past five years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information in respect of the electronics industry in Scotland is set out in the table below. These estimates are based on information from the Regional Data System. Although estimates from RDS normally reflect the latest known classification of plants, these estimates are derived from a special exercise carried out by the Industry Department for Scotland in which plants have been given the classification appropriate to each year.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what numbers of people were employed in the shipbuilding and ship repair industry in Scotland in each year since 1974.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The estimated numbers of persons employed in the shipbuilding and ship repair industry (activity heading 3610 of the 1980 standard industrial classification) in Scotland for the years 1979 to 1983, the latest at present available, are set out below. Prior to 1979, only figures for the shipbuilding and marine engineering industry (minimum list heading 370 of the 1968 standard industrial classification) are available.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland were employed by the British Steel Corporation in each year since 1974.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland were employed by the National Coal Board in each year since 1974.

Mr. Allan Stewart: It is estimated that the numbers of people in Scotland employed by the National Coal Board in each year since 1974 are as follows:

Year Ending March	Thousands
1974	28·8
1975	29·2
1976	28·2
1977	27·5

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the net change in the number of employees in employment in Scotland in (a) manufacturing industry and (b) service industries in each year since 1980.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The estimated net changes in thousands, as compared with the previous year, in employees in employment in manufacturing and services are set out in the table for June of each year since 1980.

Net Change

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table to show the average monthly count of persons registered as unemployed in Scotland, in each year since 1974 who were (a) school leavers and (b) aged 19 years and under;

(2) what is the number of people in Scotland, at the latest date, who have not been in full-time employment since leaving school; and how many of them are school leavers from (a) 1986, (b) 1985, (c) 1984 and (d) 1983 or before;

(3) if he will publish a table showing the average monthly count of persons registered as unemployed in Scotland for each year since 1974; and if he will give the percentage unemployment figure for each year.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of wholly oil-related jobs in Scotland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Total employment in firms in Scotland identified by the Manpower Services Commission as being wholly related to North sea oil and gas activity is estimated to have been around 63,700 in December 1985. This is the most recent estimate available. The estimates for June of the years 1981 to 1985 are as follows:

June	Thousands
1981	49·6
1982	58·3
1983	63·3
1984	64·0
1985	63·8

A74 (Improvement)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the current programme of improvement to the A74 to be completed.

Mr. Ancram: The 1986 programme of carriageway reconstruction and resurfacing work on the A74 is expected to be completed by mid-July. The M74 Draffan to Millbank extension is planned to be completed in the spring of 1987.

NHS Staff

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff and practitioners in terms of whole-time equivalents there were in the National Health Service in Scotland at 30 September in each year since 1978.

Mr. Rifkind: The number of NHS staff expressed as whole-time equivalents and the number of general medical and dental practitioners at 30 September is shown below:

Year	NHS Staff (whole-time equivalents)	Practitioners (numbers)
1978	114,025·4	4,384
1979	115,983·5	4,425

Housing Action Areas

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many housing action areas for improvement were approved during 1974 to 1985 (a) within the statutory 28 days, (b) in more than 28 days but within 84 days and (c) in more than 84 days; how many were approved in 1986 (i) within the statutory 28 days, (ii) in more than 28 days but less than 84 days and (iii) in more than 84 days; and how many are now outstanding (1) 28 days or less, (2) more than 28 days and (3) more than 84 days, respectively.

Mr. Ancram: The function exercised by my right hon. and learned Friend in regard to housing action area draft resolutions is to consider whether or not he should direct the local authority concerned to rescind their resolution. He may at his discretion notify the local authority that he requires a longer period than 28 days from his acknowledgement of the draft resolution in which to do so. From 1974 to 1985 the Secretary of State considered 1,167 draft housing action area resolutions for improvement or for demolition and improvement, of which he directed nine to be rescinded. The other information requested is as follows:

Housing Action Area Resolutions considered

	1974-1985	1986
Within statutory 28 days	1,158	1
More than 28 days but less than 84 days	4	5
More than 84 days	5	4
TOTAL	1,167	10

Numbers outstanding in 1986

Less than 28 days—8; more than 28 days—28 of which more than 84 days—19.

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of all housing action areas for improvement now awaiting his approval, showing the local authority which submitted them, and the date on which they were submitted.

Mr. Ancram: The names of the draft housing action area resolutions for improvement on which my right hon. and learned Friend has yet to come to a decision are given below together with the dates on which they were received by the Scottish Development Department:

Bracken

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the area of land covered by bracken in Scotland.

Mr. John Mackay: The area of land in Scotland at present covered by bracken is estimated to be around 200,000 hectares.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the probable area of land covered by bracken in Scotland, at present rates of encroachment, by the year 2000.

Mr. John Mackay: The rate at which bracken spreads is variable: encroachment of heathlands and moorland is negligible while the rate rises to approximately 3 per cent. on underused grassland. The overall rate of encroachment is further affected by factors such as livestock numbers and the level of afforestation. It is not therefore possible to give a realistic figure for the year 2000.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many grants were paid for the purpose of bracken control in Scotland; and what was their total value in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Mackay: The information is set out in the table below:

Calendar Year	Number of Claims	Total Grant £
1981	*22	79,495
1982	*62	85,232
1983	200	124,175
1984	185	106,248
1985	179	118,704

• Figures for the number of claims under the Farm and Horticultural Development Scheme/Agricultural and Horticultural Development Scheme are not available.

Industrial Production

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the index of industrial production in Scotland in each of the past 10 years, using 1980 as a base.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information on the production industries component of the index of industrial production and construction is set out below. No figures for 1986 are yet available.

Index of Output (1980 = 100) for the Production Industries in Scotland

	Index
1976	105·3
1977	105·1
1978	105·8
1978	106·5
1980	100·0

1983	97·7
1984	101·2

Skoal Bandits

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has replied to the letter sent to him from Hamilton-East Kilbride local health council of 30 May regarding the petition presented to his office on 6 May calling for a ban on the production and promotion of Skoal Bandits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: A reply was sent on 27 June. In this area it is preferable to proceed by way of voluntary agreement rather than by introducing legal prohibitions. The situation is, however, being kept under constant review.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now reply to the letter from the hon. Member for East Lothian of 21 May concerning the date for the commissioning of Torness power station.

Mr. Allan Stewart: A reply has been sent to the hon. Member today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to secure a mandate for the conference on disarmament in Geneva to negotiate a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 25 June, at column 165.

South Africa

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government on the effect on British citizens of the South African Citizen Amendment Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The South African Citizenship Amendment Act 1984 provided for the automatic extension of South African citizenship to all immigrants between the ages of 15 and 25 who had been in South Africa for five years. This did not affect, and could not have affected, a British citizen's status as such. No representations were made.

Nuclear Arms Limitation

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to Mr. Gorbachev's latest nuclear arms limitation proposal.

Mr. Eggar: The nuclear and space talks at Geneva are confidential bilateral negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union. But as my right hon. and learned Friend said on 18 June, there are elements in the latest Soviet proposals which deserve exploration. As President Reagan also said in his Glassboro speech on 19 June, it appears that the Soviet Union has begun to make a serious effort.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affars what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards United States proposals, at the conferece on disarmament in Geneva, for mandatory short notice inspections as a necessary verification procedure for a chemical weapons ban.

Mr. Eggar: We believe that the proposed chemical weapons convention will need two levels of verification. This would comprise first a mandatory system of inspection at certain declared sites: including verification of declaration and destruction of stocks and production facilities; and verification of non-production of chemical weapons in the civil chemical industry. Second, there would need to be a strigent challenge inspection regime as a deterrent against cheating at other sites. The United States proposals provide a valuable standard for the stringency that will be required for a challenge inspection regime.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Government of India on the issue of aid for military equipment for the Government of Sir Lanka; what has been the nature of his reply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have received no representations from the Government of India about the use of British aid funds for the purchase of military equipment by the Government of Sir Lanka. Nor would we expect to. British aid is not used for the supply of military equipment to Sri Lanka, nor is there any credit arrangement between our two Governments for arms purchases.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present five meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for July.

The Economic and Finance Council is expected to meet on 7 July to consider the second quarterly review of the economic situation in the Community and to discuss the budgetary situation of 1986.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 14/15 July. Among subjects likely to be discussed are the sale of reduced-price butter to persons receiving social assistance; the mandate on ACP sugar; registration of vineyards; supplementary trade mechanisms; Portuguese wine structures; imitation dairy products; and French overseas sugar. The Fisheries Council is not expected to meet in July.

At its meeting on 16/17 July the Budget Council will discuss the 1987 preliminary draft budget. It may also need to deal with the unfinished business of the 1986 Budget.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 21/22 July. The Council is likely to review the current state of its trade relations with the United States and with Japan. The Council will also discuss EC/Turkey, in preparation for the EC/Turkey Association Council in September, and EC/GCC relations. The Council may, in addition, discuss the Mediterranean policy of the enlarged Community, to agree a revised mandate for trade negotiations and, if necessary, EC/Yugoslavia to agree an EC position prior to the meeting of the EC/Yugoslavia Co-operation Council in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 24 July. The Council will discuss a number of items from the presidency action programme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress to date in fulfilling the aims of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. Tom King: We have made significant progress in a number of areas, although it would be unrealistic to expect to achieve all the aims of the agreement rapidly. I welcome in particular progress in enhancing cross-border security co-operation. Work is also continuing on both the policy aspects of extradition and on the search for measures to enhance public confidence in the administration of justice in Northern Ireland. In addition, I have told the Irish Government that the United Kingdom Government intend to take legislative action to apply the provisions which govern the franchise for parliamentary elections throughout the United Kingdom to local government and Assembly elections in Northern Ireland. I have indicated a number of specific areas for possible future development of the Irish language, and agreed to explore further with the Irish Government the best way of improving the road link between Newry and Dundalk. The joint statements issued after each meeting of the intergovernmental conference record in more detail the matters discussed with the Irish Government.

Political Leaders (Exchanges)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what exchanges he has had with Northern Ireland political leaders since Unionist right hon. and hon. Members were last received by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Tom King: I have discussed a range of matters with the leaders of the Social Democratic and Labour party and the Alliance party since 25 February 1986. I regret that the leaders of the Ulster Unionist and Democratic Unionist parties still decline offers of dialogue with the Government.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Thames Barrier

Mr. Spearing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what conditions he plans to impose on any private corporation to which he transfers ownership and responsibility for operation of the Thames barrier.

Mrs. Fenner: Following the presentation of the White Paper on the privatisation of the water authorities in England and Wales (Cmnd. 9734) detailed arrangements for land drainage and flood protection are under consideration.

Bracken

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate he has of the probable area of land covered by bracken in England, at present rates of encroachment, by the year 2000;

(2) if he will provide details of the grants presently available for bracken control in Britain; and if he will provide figures to show the number of such grants, and their total value, paid in each of the last five years;

(3) what estimate he has of land covered by bracken in England.

(4) what information is held by his Department concerning the treatment of bracken by the various means available; and if he will give figures to show the area of bracken so treated by each method for each of the last five years.

Mrs. Fenner: Official statistics are not collected on the area of bracken. Estimates put forward by research organisations suggest that about 40,400 hectares in England are infested with bracken. The rate of encroachment is presently estimated to be something over 1 per cent. per annum. I cannot give a meaningful estimate of the likely area in the year 2000. Bracken is usually controlled by mechanical and chemical means, by husbandry practices and by burning. I have no information on the extent to which each of these methods is in use. Grants are available for bracken control under the agriculture improvement scheme. The rates are 30 per cent. in the less favoured areas and 15 per cent. elsewhere. The number and value of grant payments is not separately distinguishable from those for operations concerning heather. The available information is as follows:

Grants for bracken and heather control

West Wood

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when an application was received from Center Parcs Ltd. for the purchase of a substantial part of Lyminge forest, known as West wood; and how his Department proposes to deal with this application.

Mrs. Fenner: The Forestry Commission, which manages West wood, was first approached by Center Parcs only in March of this year about its possible sale as a holiday village development. The decision whether to sell rests with the Forestry Commissioners, who are still considering the matter.

Radioactivity

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is satisfied with the monitoring of radiation undertaken on behalf of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 26 June 1986, c. 307]: My Department set in train a comprehensive monitoring programme of foodstuffs following the accident at Chernobyl. This programme will continue for as long as necessary to ensure that food which may have been affected as a result of the accident does not go for human consumption above the agreed action level. My Department also conducts routine monitoring of foodstuffs in pursuance of its responsibilities under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Lambs

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fat lambs were sold at grading centres in Cumbria in May and early June of the current year.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 308]: In the period 28 April to 20 June 1986 inclusive, 46,457 fat lambs were certified and sold at liveweight grading centres in Cumbria.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish details of the number of fat lambs which qualified for the standards of the European Community sheepmeat régime at each grading centre in England in each week of each year from 1982 to 1985.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 308]: The information is not readily available and would be disproportionately costly to provide.

Plastic Waste

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being adopted by Her Majesty's Government to reduce the amount of plastic waste being dumped in British territorial waters.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 308]: In accordance with the provisions of the London and Oslo dumping conventions, the sea disposal of persistent plastics which may interfere materially with fishing, navigation or other legitimate uses of the sea is prohibited by means of the licensing system operated under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

River Esk

Mr. Soames asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will be publishing the report of the Yorkshire River Esk inquiry; and for what reason it has been delayed.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 308]: I am still awaiting the inspector's report following this inquiry, which has been unavoidably delayed because of his continuing ill health.

WALES

Milk Quota Scheme

17. Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state his latest assessment of the operation of the milk quota scheme in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: All producers have now been allocated their quota entitlements and are fully aware of the operation of the supplementary levy. We have made additional quota available to many producers suffering specific difficulties and for over half of the milk producers in Wales the effects of quotas have been virtually eliminated through reallocations of quota to small producers.

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage reduction in milk production in Wales and in South Glamorgan, respectively, from the introduction of the milk quota scheme to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Sales of milk off farms in Wales in the past three years are as follows:

Year ending	Million Litres
March 1984	1,780·3
March 1985	*1,646·7
March 1986 (provisional)	†1,656·3

* (−7·5 per cent.).
† (+0·5 per cent.).

I regret that separate figures for South Glamorgan are not available.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been provided for Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin for each year since 1980-81 by his Department.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Year	£
1980-81	117,000
1981-82	259,000
1982-83	278,000

Year	£
1983-84	292,000
1984-85	310,350
1985-86	329,400
1986-87	360,800

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent on the teaching of Welsh as a subject in primary and secondary schools in Wales in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information is not collected centrally on the expenditure incurred in the teaching of individual subjects.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many O-level and A-level examination subjects can now be taken through the Welsh language in Wales; and how this compares with the number 10 and 20 years previously.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am informed that examination papers in all subjects offered by the WJEC at GCE O and A-level have been available in the Welsh language on demand since 1958.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration is given to Welsh language education in provision of capital expenditure allocations to county councils for 1986-87.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The education services component of capital allocations is, with the agreement of the local authority associations, distributed on the basis of a simple formula which takes account of pupil numbers and sparsity.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many of all secondary school children in Wales at September 1985 were being taught Welsh as a first language and as a second language and how many were not taught Welsh at all; and what are the corresponding figures for the years 1980 to 1984.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Provisional figures for September 1985 are given in the following table.

Number of pupils taught Welsh at maintained secondary schools

	Forms I-V	Form VI	Total
Pupils taught Welsh as a first language	20,938	928	21,866
Pupils taught Welsh as a second language	81,751	610	82,361
Pupils not taught Welsh at all	93,883	21,404	115,287

Corresponding figures for the years 1980-84 are given in tables 5.11 and 5.12 of "Statistics of Education in Wales" (Volumes 6-10), copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the provision and results of Welsh, English and foreign language teaching in Welsh secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is the Government's policy to raise the standard of all children's achievements across the whole ability range and in all areas of the curriculum. To this end HMI has published discussion papers on the teaching of both Welsh and English, "Welsh from 5-16" and "English from 5-16" in the "Curriculum Matters" series. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Education and Science have recently published a draft statement of policy concerning foreign languages in schools. Much good work in all of these subjects is being done in Welsh schools and it is our aim that evidence of good practice should be brought to the attention of all schools.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if any steps have been taken in the current year to encourage the parents of young children in Wales to consider giving their children a bilingual education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is the Government's policy that education through the medium of Welsh should be available to all children whose parents wish it, within the constraints of available resources. It is for parents to express a preference for bilingual education for their children. A number of LEAs and others have publicised the availability and scope of bilingual education.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest estimates of numbers and percentages of children of school age attending Welsh medium schools or Welsh units.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information in the form requested is not available. However, the number of primary school pupils in classes where Welsh was the sole or main medium of instruction in September 1985 is provisionally estimates as 29,400, representing nearly 12 per cent. of all full-time and part-time pupils. The number of pupils in secondary schools which use Welsh as a medium for teaching in five or more subjects in September 1985 totalled 28,400, representing almost 13 per cent. of the total secondary school population.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list circulars which have been issued by his Department over the past 20 years to local education authorities in Wales dealing with the teaching of the Welsh language or the provision of education through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Since 1966 the following circulars dealing with the teaching of Welsh or teaching through the medium of Welsh have been issued to local education authorities in Wales:

Number	Subject
1/69	St. David's Day: The National Language Unit.
2/69	Report of the Central Advisory Council for Education (Wales) 'Primary Education in Wales'. Welsh in the Curriculum.
44/81	The School Curriculum and Welsh in Schools.
59/83	The Curriculum and Welsh in Schools.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to those secondary schools in Wales where it is now possible for pupils to undertake most or all of their education through the medium of the Welsh language and as to how many pupils at these schools currently receive all or a large part of their secondary education through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The latest available information for maintained secondary schools relates to September 1985 and is as follows:

Number of subjects taught through the medium of Welsh	Number of schools	Number of pupils on roll
5 or more subjects	41	28,400
3 or 4 subjects	6	5,700
1 or 2 subjects	6	5,600

Information on the number of pupils taught through the medium of Welsh is available in respect of individual subjects and the latest figures, which relate to 1984, are published in table 5.09 of "Statistics of Education in Wales, No. 10, 1983," a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers in Wales are qualified to teach French, German and Welsh, respectively.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The secondary school staffing survey indicated that in 1984 over 1,200 full-time and part-time teachers recorded a qualification in French, 400 in German. Nearly 1,000 have recorded a qualification in Welsh as a first language and some 500 as a second language.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin concerning the proposal to establish a Welsh language education development body.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Prior to the decision to invite the Welsh Joint Education Committee to undertake a co-ordinating role in Welsh language education, representatives of Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin attended a meeting with the then Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth (Sir J. Stradling Thomas), in company with other Welsh language organisations.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a detailed breakdown of the grants for Welsh language education allotted in each year since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following tables.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps have been taken to give in-service training to Welsh speaking teachers to enable them to teach through the medium of Welsh; and what is his policy as to the encouragement of Welsh-speaking teachers to receive in-service training.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Under the Department's in-service training specific grant scheme, introduced in 1983, grant of 90 per cent. is available to local education authorities to meet the cost of releasing teachers to attend courses to improve their ability to teach through the medium of the Welsh language. Support has also been provided under section 21 of the Education Act 1980. The Department is at present engaged in discussions with the local education authorities to establish what further steps are needed to provide in-service training for Welsh-speaking teachers to equip them to teach through the medium of Welsh.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what are his latest estimates of the number of primary, junior and secondary school children classified as fluent Welsh speakers in each of the Welsh counties; and what are the corresponding figures for the previous five years;

(2) what information he has about the number of primary school children in Wales coming from homes whose language is not Welsh, who speak Welsh with fluency in September 1985, and the respective figures for the years 1980 to 1984, for each county in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Available information relates only to children at maintained primary schools and the provisional figures for September 1985 are given in the following table:

Number of pupils assessed as being fluent in Welsh

	First* language	Second† language	Total
Clywd	1,401	2,367	3,768
Dyfed	4,783	4,032	8,815

* Pupils whose home language is Welsh.

† Pupils whose home language is not Welsh.

Corresponding figures for the previous five years are given in table 5.02 of "Statistics of Education in Wales" (Volumes 6-10), copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made of the linguistic effects of the establishment of bilingual classes in English medium schools and Welsh medium primary schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No such assessment has been undertaken.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each local education authority in Wales the number of candidates and the passes at O and A-level in French, German and Welsh over the past three years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information for individual local authorities is not available centrally.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if any assessment has been made of the likely growth in demand for Welsh-medium education over the next years in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Provision of Welsh-medium education is the responsibility of the individual local education authorities. This provision is subject to a process of constant reassessment.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied that there is sufficient co-ordination between the various sectors of education in Wales with regard to the provision of Welsh-medium instruction.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is because my right hon. Friend believes there to be room for improvement that he has invited the Welsh Joint Education Committee to undertake a co-ordinating role in Welsh language education. One of the tasks it will perform will be to co-ordinate and inform the activities of other bodies.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the establishment of a Welsh language education development body in Wales; and how many of those were in favour of its establishment and how many opposed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In addition to the 27 representative bodies formally consulted by our Department, of which five were in favour of the proposal to establish such a body, some 1,500 unsolicited representations were also received, in the form of pre-printed postcards circulated by Cymdeithas Yr Iaith Gymraeg, in favour of the proposal. Some unsolicited representations from individuals opposed to such a development have also been received.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will discuss with the Welsh local education authorities the provision of Welsh-medium teaching in secondary schools not designated as bilingual in areas with a substantial proportion of Welsh speakers.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans to hold such discussions. It is for individual authorities to determine appropriate levels of provision in their own area.

Foreign Language Teaching

Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department proposes to further the teaching of foreign language in schools and colleges in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: On Monday 16 June 1986 my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Education and Science published a draft statement of policy on foreign languages in the school curriculum. It sets out a programme of action which is in our view essential to raise standards.

The draft policy statement has been sent for comment to a wide range of organisations in education and in industry and commerce. We intend to issue it substantively before the end of the year. Copies of the draft statement have been placed in the Library.

Bilingual Education

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether there are any proposals by his Department to develop and increase the provision of bilingual schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is for individual authorities to determine the nature of provision in their own area. The Government's policy is that education through the medium of Welsh should be available, within the constraints of available resources, to all children whose parents are desirous of it.

National Trust Commons

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales in how many cases he has given his consent to an application to fence National Trust commons in Wales pursuant to section 23 of the National Trust Act 1971, in the last five years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None.

District Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the expenditure of the district health authorities in Wales was taken up in administrative costs in the last year for which figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: For the years for which figures are available the overall management costs proportions of total expenditure by district health authorities in Wales were as follows:

	Per cent.
1979-80	4·88
1980-81	4·66
1981-82	4·46
1982-83	4·23
1983-84	4·10
1984-85	3·98

Note These figures relate to expenditure on district headquarters administration as well as the salaries of other administrators and managers (above a specified grade) employed within the hospital and community health services. They do not, however, include the costs of certain other administrative activities such as the wages and salaries of medical records clerks and medical secretaries, since these are not regarded as management costs and are thus not disaggregated in the accounts.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the expenditure of the district health authorities in Wales was taken up by wages in the last year for which figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: For the years for which figures are available the information requested is as follows:

	Wages and salaries charged to revenue as percentage of total revenue expenditure	*Total wages and salaries as percentage of total expenditure
1979-80	76·2	73·3
1980-81	78·0	75·6
1981-82	76·0	73·2
1982-83	75·0	72·2
1983-84	75·2	72·6
1984-85	75·8	72·0

* Inclusive of district health authorities' capital expenditure.

Radioactivity

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied that no radioactive fallout was discharged from either Wylfa or Trawsfynydd nuclear power stations on north Wales in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Low-level radioactive waste discharges from the nuclear sites in Wales are carefully controlled under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. There have, however, been two uncontrolled discharges of radioactivity from the Welsh nuclear power stations to the atmosphere in the current year: at Wylfa on 10 February and at Trawsfynydd on 21 February. Both incidents, which were widely reported at the time, had no significant effect on local produce and presented no hazard to the public or to animal and plant life.

Ambulances (Tourists)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for each district health authority the additional allocation made for the ambulance service to convey tourists to hospital; and if he will supply these statistics for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Mark Robinson: No specific allocations are made to health authorities for ambulance services. Health authorities determine the level of provision for ambulance services within their overall discretionary revenue and capital allocations on the basis of their own assessments of local circumstances and priorities. However, in recogniton of the significant extra demands placed upon accident and emergency services in the summer months, allocations of £20,000 were built in to the revenue funding of Clwyd, Gwynedd and the former Dyfed health authorities in 1976-77 on a recurring basis. This provision has since been enhanced by the varying percentages of discretionary growth which the respective authorities have received and by allowances for inflation over the past 10 years; but no further allocations specifically in respect of tourism have been made since then.

The scale of this provision and its distribution was reviewed by the former steering committee on resources allocation in Wales in 1981 and it was agreed that no changes should be made. It will be reviewed again by the steering group's successor body, the resources allocation working group, during the coming months.

I should also point out that, in using the RAWG revenue formula to assess the relative funding needs of health authorities in Wales and hence to determine the distribution of resources made available by my right hon. Friend for further progress towards equalisation, account is taken of cross-boundary flows of patients and thus the impact which tourists and other visitors make upon all hospital and ambulance services in Wales.

Opencast Coal Mining

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report, for the period 1958 until the most recently available date, a list of the opencast coal sites in Wales that have been the subject of public inquiry, indicating (a) the date that inquiry commenced, (b) the date the inquiry was completed, (c) the date that the inspector reported, (d) whether or not the inspector's recommendations were accepted and (e) what the decision was.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information in the form requested by the hon. Gentleman is available from 1962 for NCB sites in respect of which inquiries have been held into applications for authorisation under section 2 of the Opencast Coal Act 1958, and from 1979 in respect of private sites where appeals have been made to the Secretary of State under the provisions of section 36 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. Earlier records are not available. Information is given in the following table.

Health Visitors

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds on the visits health visitors make to families following childbirth; and if he will specify the level of statistical disaggregation.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information is collected from DHA's annually on the numbers of first home visits and on the total number of home visits made to children born during that year.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the health visitor to population ratio for (a) Wales and (b) each district health authority in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information for September 1985 is given in the following table:

Number of health visitors per 10,000 population*

	Number
Clwyd	1·83
East Dyfed	2·29
Pembrokeshire	1·83
Gwent	1·79
Gwynedd	2·31
Mid Glamorgan	2·04
Powys	2·87
South Glamorgan	2·36
West Glamorgan	2·09
Wales	2·09

* Whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds on the percentage of health visitors' time spent on (a) clinical, (b) non-clinical duties and (c) travelling.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not available centrally.

Livestock Compensation Scheme

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to base any compensation scheme for loss of income as a result of the order controlling the movement of sheep and lambs, on schemes implemented for infectious diseases such as foot and mouth epidemics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The present circumstances are not comparable with those that arise in cases of infectious disease, where slaughter is the effective means of control. The Government have said that if it should prove to be necessary they will be prepared to discuss cases of compensation for severe loss in particular circumstances to specific farmers.

Sheepmeat

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest information concerning the recent fall in lamb prices in Wales and the consequences for farmers in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The average market prices of lambs sold in markets in Wales in recent weeks are as follows:

Week commencing:	Price
9 June	234·59p per kg. liveweight
16 June	190·45p per kg. liveweight
23 June (estimate)	150·00p per kg. liveweight

It is too early to assess the impact that the recently announced restrictions on the movement and slaughter of sheep will have on the industry.

However, any fall in prices will be compensated under the sheep variable premium scheme which makes good any shortfall between the market price and the guide support price.

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest information regarding the levels of radiocaesium in the parts of north Wales affected by the order made on 20 June prohibiting the movement and slaughter of sheep; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The latest published results were contained in a press notice on 20 June a copy of which is in the Library of the House of Commons. Further lists will be published covering the current testing programme.

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on results to date of efforts to improve the marketing of Welsh lamb; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I welcome the increasing emphasis on the marketing and promotion of Welsh lamb in recent years and recognise the financial contribution which the industry itself has made, on a voluntary basis, through Welsh Lamb Enterprise and through the levy collected by the Meat and Livestock Commission. Results to date are encouraging but more remains to be done.

Beef

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he will give to farmers in Wales pending European Economic Community decisions on beef support, expected later in the current year.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The European Commission's proposals for reform of beef support measures are to be further examined by the Council of Ministers with a view to a decision by 31 December 1986. In the meantime farmers in Wales will benefit from the continuation of existing support measures.

Roads

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with highway authorities in Wales concerning the condition of roads for which they are responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None. However, the subject has been raised by representatives of the local authority associations in the transport and highways working party of the expenditure sub-group on local authority expenditure in Wales. I will be meeting the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 9 July to discuss the sub-group's report in the context of the rate support grant settlement for 1987-88.

Outgoers Scheme

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what has been the impact of the outgoers scheme in Wales and in South Glamorgan, respectively; and what has been the net reduction in the numbers of farmers producing milk in each case;

(2) what reduction has resulted in Wales and in South Glamorgan, respectively, in the number of milk producers since the introduction of the milk producers' scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: As at 20 June 1986 a total of 255 producers in Wales had ceased production under the terms of the outgoers' scheme, surrendering a total of 25·8 million litres of quota.

For south Glamorgan the figures are seven producers and 1·8 million litres, respectively.

Agricultural Support

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had recently with Welsh farming unions and interests concerning likely changes in agricultural support during the next 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I and my officials met both farming unions and other interests on several occasions for substantive discussions on the European Community price proposals for 1986-87, and will continue to do so on issues outstanding from the price agreement.

Youth Training

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what figures he has to show the number of disabled young people refusing the offer of a place in YTS in each of the last three years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Comprehensive information on YTS refusals is not readily available centrally. Individual careers services have information but it is not on a consistent or consistently accessible basis.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many disabled young people presently take part in YTS in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is currently not available. The Manpower Services Commission's computerised management information system, from which YTS statistics are obtained, is currently being reprogrammed and improved to meet the needs of two-year YTS. As a result of this work information about the participation of young disabled people on YTS will not be available until the end of this summer.

I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with this information as soon as it becomes available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what figures he has to show the number of disabled young people applying to take part in YTS each year in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Manpower Services Commission does not hold information on the number of young people applying for YTS.

Disabled Young People

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the population of economically active disabled 16 and 17-year-olds in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not available.

Bracken

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what estimate he has of the area of land covered by bracken in Wales;

(2) what estimate he has of the probable area of land covered by bracken in Wales, at present rates of encroachment, by the year 2000.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: As I said in my reply to the hon. Gentleman on 24 January 1986, at column 322, estimates put forward by research organisations suggest that 118,000 hectares in Wales are subject to bracken infestation and that the annual rate of encroachment is between 1 and 3 per cent.

I have no estimate of the probable area of infestation by the year 2000 because bracken infestation is so variable.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many grants were paid for the purpose of bracken control in Wales; and what was their total value in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is not available for bracken only, but the number of payments and the amount of grant paid in respect of bracken control and heather regeneration was as follows:

	Number of Payments	Grant (£)
1981	19	7,076
1982	31	15,075
1983	28	8,766
1984	25	15,692
1985	49	22,654

Brymbo Steelworks

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales what action he has taken to date, and what action he proposes to take, to facilitate securing investment at Brymbo steelworks.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: When United Engineering Steels was set up my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry made it quite clear that the company would be a freestanding private sector company. The location of investment projects is equally clearly a matter for the board of UES and it would not be appropriate for me to intervene in a commercial decision.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will make a statement on the performance of the two privately run kidney dialysis units in Wales.

Mr Mark Robinson: The performance of the two privately run subsidiary renal units which provide a service to district health authorities in Wales is the subject of an evaluation study by Professor William Asscher, professor of renal medicine at the University of Wales college of medicine. Whilst the evaluation has not yet been completed, the indications are that the units are operating effectively and providing a real benefit to patients.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inland Revenue

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the letter dated 25 April 1986 from the Inland Revenue to certain professional bodies concerning inquiries made by tax practitioners to the technical division of the Inland Revenue; if it was with his authority that this change of policy was made; why it was made; why it was not the subject of a press release; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The text of the letter of 25 April 1986 is printed as follows. Treasury Ministers were informed of the issue of this letter. It was sent to six professional bodies representing tax practitioners. No more widespread notification was considered necessary.

A practice had been growing of treating technical division at Somerset house as a free tax advisory service for tax practitioners. That is not its function and, with increasing pressures of work and a current shortage of experienced inspectors of taxes, the Board of Inland Revenue could no longer continue to provide this service. The change does not mean that the Inland Revenue is no longer prepared to provide information to practitioners. The technical division will respond to inquiries about recent legislation and changes in Inland Revenue practice, and the normal point of contact for tax practitioners with the Inland Revenue will continue to be the tax office responsible for dealing with the tax affairs of the practitioner's client. Notification of the Revenue's interpretation of tax law will continue to be provided by way of press releases and booklets and the Inland Revenue will ensure that inspectors in tax offices can provide an authoritative Revenue view in relation to questions arising in any particular case.

"I am writing to let you know of some new guidance which, with considerable regret, we have found necessary to issue to our specialists in Technical Division, and to explain the background.

As you know, our Technical Division at Head Office is responsible for advising Inspectors in Tax Districts on tax problems arising from their examination of accounts and tax returns, and for ensuring that the law is applied uniformly and consistently throughout the network; and it is also responsible for helping Policy Divisions prepare advice for Ministers and assisting with the preparation of new legislation. In addition, in recent years it has become increasingly involved with providing information or guidance to tax practitioners, who telephone or write direct to the specialists here. For our part, we have generally been happy to provide this help, where we can; and—though there are obviously some difficult areas—I think your members will agree that Technical Division staff have always tried to be helpful in responding to legitimate enquiries about difficult tax problems.

I am afraid however that I have to tell you that against a background of continuing losses of experienced Inspectors from the Department, our Technical Division will, as regards enquiries from tax practitioners, in future be able to respond only to those involving recent legislation and changes in practice.

Let me say again that I am sorry that it has become necessary for me to write to you, and to other professional bodies affected, in these terms. I thought, however, that those of your members who have found it helpful in the past to get in touch with Technical Division rather than the appropriate Tax District would at least like to be forewarned of this change, and be told why it has become necessary."

Unemployment (Costs)

Mr. Dormand asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the basis for his assessment that the true cost of unemployment could be less than the total of transfer payments made to unemployed persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I am not clear what assessment the hon. Member has in mind. But of the benefits paid to unemployed people, an estimated £1·15 billion is currently being spent on housing benefit. Some part of that would continue to be spent if the claimants returned to work because housing benefit can be paid to those in full or part-time employment.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the annual percentage change in manufacturing output from 1979 to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Latest available annual figures for manufacturing output — from 1978 to 1985 — were published in tables accompanying the index of output of the production industries press notice dated 18 June 1986, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Local Authorities (Borrowing)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for each year since the scheme was commenced in 1973, and cumulatively, how much profit or loss the Treasury has incurred by requiring local authorities to pay a premium when borrowing from the European Investment bank as an insurance against losses resulting from changes in sterling parities.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My hon. Friend is referring to the Treasury's exchange cover scheme. Local authorities which borrow under this scheme surrender the proceeds to the exchange equalisation account (EEA) in return for sterling, and pay an exchange cover charge in return for which the EEA undertakes to provide foreign currency at the guaranteed rate for the servicing and repayment of the loan. The charge is calculated in such a way that the total sterling costs of the loan to the borrower are equivalent to the interest it would have paid on a comparable loan from the Public Works Loans Board (PWLB), less a margin which is at present ½ per cent. on new loans. The EEA holds the foreign currency proceeds of the loan in the form of foreign currency assets, as part of the Government's overall reserves management operation. Provided the foreign currency assets match the foreign currency liability on the loan, the EEA's net overall position will not be affected by exchange rate movements during the life of the loan. As the EEA holds its foreign currency assets in the form of a pool, EEA transactions cannot be attributed to particular sources of funds.

Shipping

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what arrangements exist in each member state of the European Economic Community to exempt from tax income derived by shipping companies from the sale of ships; and what conditions have to be met to qualify for such tax exemption;

(2) which member states of the European Economic Community have investment promotion arrangements comparable to the business expansion scheme; whether such arrangements apply to investment in ships; and what conditions are imposed in each case, including particularly restrictions on the nationality of the operating company, the ability of the companies concerned to hire in management services, the provenance of the ships, the flags under which they sail, the nationality of their crews and the trades or trading areas in which they operate.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Accident (Effects)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Prime Minister if she will give an estimate of the effects which would be caused by an accident at a British nuclear power station of similar magnitude to that which occurred at Chernobyl in terms of deaths, effects on human health, costs of emergency arrangements, costs of rehabilitating land and property in Britain and elsewhere and the cost of replacing the generating plant.

The Prime Minister: The Chernobyl design is different from that of United Kingdom reactors. Planning against the remote possibility of an accident serious enough to affect people in the vicinity of a nuclear installation in the United Kingdom is described in the HSE's booklet "Emergency Plans for Civil Nuclear Installations", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Pharmacists

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about co-ordination between the Department of Health and Social Security and the Department of Trade and Industry and the Office of Fair Trading on the implications of Her Majesty's Government's competition policy of the new proposed pharmacists' contract.

The Prime Minister: Officials at the Department of Health and Social Security had discussions with officials at the Department of Trade and Industry, the Office of Fair Trading and other interested Government Departments, during the preparation of the proposed new contract for retail pharmacists.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Batiste asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on progress arising from the latest crime prevention seminar which she held at No. 10 Downing street and the progress and achievements made in the field of crime prevention under her Administration.

The Prime Minister: The Government have placed crime prevention to the forefront of their strategy against crime. I met the participants at the second Downing street seminar on crime prevention on Monday. They reported substantial progress on the wide range of important action points agreed at the seminar I chaired in January. I heard, for example, of discounts being offered by a number of insurance companies to those who make their homes more secure; of the progress on a British standard for car security to be published later this year; and of the wealth of locally based activity throughout the United Kingdom. It is a sign of progress that crime prevention now comes high on the agenda of so many public, private and voluntary sector organisations.

The Government are devoting considerable financial resources to crime prevention related activity, including: an estimated £20 million from the urban housing renewal unit's resources to be devoted to the security of run down local authority housing estates; resources to provide over 5,000 places under the community programme devoted to crime prevention work (some £22·5 million); £2·5 million on Home Office crime prevention publicity.

The number of neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales has increased to over 14,500.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister what is the extent of the responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Wales regarding encouraging support of the Welsh language in relation to university education.

The Prime Minister: Responsibility for funding first degree and postgraduate courses at the university of Wales rests with the Secretary of State for Education and Science and the University Grants Committee. The Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for providing grant for the four extramural departments of the University of Wales constituent colleges. Parts of the annual Welsh Office grant to the extramural departments is used to provide tuition through the medium of the Welsh language. The Welsh Office also assists various departments within the constituent colleges of the university of Wales with funding for specific Welsh language projects under section 21 of the Education Act 1980.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report the exchange of letters dated June 1986 between the hon. Member for Monklands, West and herself on the subject of overseas aid; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

The information is as follows:

10 Downing Street
London SW1A 2AA
10 June 1986

Dear Mr. Clarke

You will recall our correspondence earlier this year about the figure for official and private flows from this country to developing countries. The information then available suggested that the 1984 figure for total flows was 0·89 per cent. of GNP. Since then, more information has become available which indicates that the amount of direct private investment in developing countries from this country rose sharply in 1984. This means that the revised figure for total official and private flows is 1·23 per cent., rather than 0·89 per cent. This figure is close to that for 1982 and 1983 and compares with the United Nations target for official and private flows of 1 per cent.

Yours sincerely
Margaret Thatcher

Tom Clarke Esq. CBE MP

House of Commons

11 June 1986

Rt. Hon. Margaret Thatcher,
Prime Minister

Dear Prime Minister,

Thank you for your letter dated 10 June.

I am grateful for the trouble you have taken on this matter.

However, I am interested to know what new information led to the revised figures, and I should be most grateful if you could help to clarify the matter.

Yours sincerely
Tom Clarke

10 Downing Street
23rd June 1986

Dear Mr. Clarke

Thank you for your letter of 11th June in which you asked for further clarification of the revised figure of 1·23 per cent. of GNP for combined official and private flows from Britain to developing countries in 1984.

I explained in my earlier letter that the change is almost entirely due to revised estimates of British direct private investment in developing countries. The Department of Trade and Industry conducts surveys of British firms in order to collect these statistics. The original estimate was based upon a quarterly sample survey. The revised estimate is based upon the results of a full survey. Total net direct investment in developing countries in 1984 is estimated to have been £1,896 million, more than double the earlier estimate. On this basis the total of net official and private flows to developing countries in 1984 represented 1·23 per cent. of GNP. When OECD calculate and publish the flows one element of direct investment overseas, that relating to investments in financial subsidiaries, is omitted. In Britain's case this amounted to £149 million. As a result the final published figure against the 1 per cent. UN target will be 1·18 per cent. for 1984.

Yours sincerely
Margaret Thatcher

Tom Clarke Esq CBE MP

South Africa

Mr. Nellist asked the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), Official Report, 18 June, columns 546-7, she will list the Government's actions to encourage British companies with interests in South Africa to comply fully with the provisions of the European Economic Community code, with the date on which each action was initiated, and to which firm it was directed.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), on 24 June at column 89. Ministers and officials have had many contacts with the companies concerned, and the various organisations and trade associations of which they are members. One measure of the success of our efforts is that the number of firms who declined to submit returns for the last reporting period was reduced to only three, compared with 10 the previous year.

Civil Defence

Mr. Strang asked the Prime Minister which Government Departments will be asked to participate in the regional civil defence exercises.

The Prime Minister: Final details have not yet been settled, but it is expected that all civil Departments with responsibilities in a war crisis will participate.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions have been held with voluntary bodies concerning the involvement of families in the care of the mentally ill.

Mr. Whitney: This Government are committed to the close involvement of the families of people suffering from a mental disorder in decisions concerning their care and in the planning of relevant services. The Department has regular contact with a wide variety of voluntary bodies active in the mental illness field. We are currently funding nineteen organisations directly involved and are in contact with others that we do not fund. During the many exchanges we have with this wide range of organisations, the involvement of families is a topic that arises on many occasions. We frequently use those occasions to repeat our commitment to family care, which for many people is the essence of community care.

Radiation

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that sufficient stocks of potassium iodide and potassium iodate tablets are available to the population through local chemist shops; and if he will issue guidance to all householders on the safe and effective measures to be taken to reduce exposure to radiation in general and radioiodines in particular in the event of future accidents involving release of radiation and exposure to the population.

Mr. Whitney: I am advised that there is no need for community pharmacies to stock iodine tablets so that they are available to the population in the event of a release of radioiodine. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy in his reply to the hon. Member today explains the system by which iodine tablets will be administered in an emergency.

As for guidance to householders, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to him on 8 May at column 216.

Hip Replacements (Northern Region)

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average number of hip replacement operations performed annually by consultants in the Northern regional health authority area.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated number of operations for total hip replacement and other arthroplasty of hip performed in National Health Service hospitals in the northern regional health authority in 1984, the latest year for which figures are available centrally, was 2,010. A whole-time equivalent of 46·1 consultants in the specialty of traumatic and orthopaedic surgery were employed by this authority during 1984-85 but no information is held centrally about how many individual consultants performed these operations.

Foster Parents (Sexual Orientation)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance his Department gives on the sexual orientation of foster parents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The suitability of an individual to be a foster parent is a matter of professional judgment to be made within the requirements of the Boarding-Out of Children Regulations 1955. General guidance on the selection and assessment of foster parents is given in "Foster Care—A guide to practice" published in 1976.

Institute for Motor Disorders, Budapest

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what ministerial or other visits have been made from his Department during the past five years to the Institute for Motor Disorders in Budapest; and if he has any plans to make any visits.

Mr. Whitney: As I explained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth on 23 April at columns 162-163, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke), the then Minister of State for Health, visited the Peto education and training institute in Budapest in November 1984. No other visits by Ministers or officials from the Department have been made during the last five years, nor are there plans at present for any such visits. However, the possible desirability of such a visit will be considered in the context of the current discussions with the Spastics Society about its proposed study of conductive education in this country.

Sugars

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received any recent advice from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy on sugars.

Mr. Whitney: At its meeting on 20 June the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) advised that a COMA panel be set up to examine the effect of sugars in the diet.

Drug Addiction (Acupuncture)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in view of the successful treatment by acupuncture now being given to drug addicts in the Liverpool area, he will seek to make this method of treatment more widely available to addicts.

Mr. Whitney: The Department does not prescribe treatment approaches. It is for health authorities and practitioners in the field to consider whether they wish to incorporate treatment by acupuncture into their services for drug misusers.

Children in Care

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have been placed into care as a result of matrimonial care orders in each year since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: The information is given in the table.

Children admitted to the care of local authorities in England under section 43(1) of the Matrimonial Causes Act 1973, 1979-84

During the year ended 31 March	Number of children admitted
1979	524
1980	605
1981	527
1982	529
1983	400
1984	330

District Health Authorities (General Managers)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names of those district health authorities whose general manager posts have been filled by doctors.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand the following fifteen district health authorities have appointed a doctor as their general manager:

Bradford
Airedale
Central Nottinghamshire
City and Hackney
Maidstone
West Lambeth
Wandsworth
Kingston and Esher
Oxfordshire
Northampton
Milton Keynes
Bristol and Weston
Cheltenham
Frenchay
Sandwell

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for severe weather payments have been made in the current year at his Department's offices in Burnley; and how many were successful.

Mr. Major: Separate information on the number of claims for exceptionally severe weather payments is not collected. Information on the number of payments made this year is not yet available. When the period during which payments are likely to be made is over, local offices will be asked to make a return, so that the total number of payments can be calculated.

NHS (Unemployed Doctors)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to create posts in the National Health Service for the present number of unemployed doctors.

Mr. Hayhoe: There are no such plans. I have not seen evidence to indicate that special action is needed to combat medical unemployment. What evidence there is suggests that most spells of unemployment are very short and represent doctors between jobs.

Benefit Statistics

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total sum of money paid, in the form of unemployment benefit to male, female and young claimants in the last 12 months for which figures are available in Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland, respectively.

Mr. Major: The total estimated expenditure on unemployment benefit in Great Britain and Northern Ireland in the financial year 1985-86 was £1,640 million.

A breakdown of this figure is available as follows:

	£ million
Scotland	189
England	1,314
Wales	88
Northern Ireland	49

I regret that the information requested regarding expenditure by sex and age is not available.

Social Security Recipients

Mr. Adley: asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what obligations he imposes upon those in receipt of social security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Every person who makes a claim for a social security benefit, is under an obligation in law to furnish such certificates, documents, information and evidence as the Secretary of State, acting through his officials, may require for the determination of the claim. This may involve the claimant being required to attend for interview at either a DHSS local office or an unemployment benefit office.

There is a similar obligation on every person receiving a benefit, whether on his own behalf or on someone else's, to furnish such information as the Secretary of State may require in order to confirm continued title to benefit. In particular, the benefit recipient is obliged to notify the Secretary of State promptly of any change of circumstances that he might reasonably be expected to know might affect the right to benefit. To this end, benefit recipients are advised by way of DHSS leaflets, benefit notes issued with girocheque payments and printed notes in benefit order books of those changes which they should report.

An unemployed claimant is, as a condition of his receiving unemployment or supplementary benefit, usually required to attend at an unemployment benefit office at intervals determined by the Secretary of State, in order to demonstrate his fitness and availability for work. These intervals are in most cases fortnightly, although they can be longer or shorter, depending on the circumstances of each individual case.

Hospital Schemes

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospital schemes costing over £5 million which have started on site since May 1979 giving in each case (a) the date of commissioning, (b) the date of start on site, (c) the initial planned completion date, (d) the actual completion date or, the present intended completion date, (e) the number of beds involved, (f) the number of operating theatres involved, (g) the cost and (h) the health district.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) for each health authority, what is the saving achieved to date by competitive tendering as a percentage of the total savings achieved;

(2) for each health authority, what is the saving achieved to date through competitive tendering as a percentage of the district's total expenditure on ancilliary services.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested, based on estimated savings reported for 31 March 1986, is shown in the table. The total expenditure figures refer to catering, domestic cleaning and laundry services for 1983-84, the year in which our competitive tendering initiative began.

* less than 0·1 per cent.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to (a) efficiency savings, and (b) savings from competitive tendering achieved by (i) each regional health authority and (ii) each district health authority in each financial year 1979-80 to 1985-86.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that information on savings from competitive tendering is not recorded in the form requested. However, for the latest savings estimates I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope), and to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 23 June at columns 71-84.

I will reply as soon as possible on efficiency savings.

Medicine Labelling

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will amend the medicine labelling regulations to ensure that non-active ingredients are clearly listed.

Mr. Hayhoe: My Department hopes to begin formal consultations shortly with interested organisations about a package of measures designed to increase the information available to doctors, pharmacists and consumers about non-active ingredients in medicines. This may lead, among other things, to amendments to the Medicines (Labelling) Regulations. A copy of the Department's consultation letter will be placed in the Library as soon as it is issued.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made since 1979 towards making information about the ingredients of medicines more widely available.

Mr. Hayhoe: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the availability of such information to patients and consumers. In the case of medicines which can be bought without a prescription, the names of the active ingredients must appear on the label and in any leaflet that is provided. This is a legal requirement and has been since before 1979. Arrangements for the labelling of prescribed medicines are different. In these circumstances it is for the prescribing doctor to decide what information is to be supplied. Usually the name of the medicine is stated on the label, together with instructions for use, but not details of the ingredients.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to make the limited list compulsory in hospitals.

Mr. Hayhoe: No. The regulations applying the selected list to the family practitioner services do not extend to the hospital service, but health authorities were asked in HC(85)18 to apply the principles of the selected list to the use of drugs in hospitals. The circular said that it was not intended to seek powers to give the list statutory backing for health authorities.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to extend the limited list to other therapeutic categories.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mr. Winterton) on 22 May at column 314.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reviews or audits have been initiated by his Department to investigate the impact of the introduction of the limited list on (a) prescribing patterns, (b) patient health and (c) the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Hayhoe: Prescribing statistics collected by the Department are used to monitor the effects of the selected list scheme. The Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs keeps the selected list under review to ensure that the clinical needs of patients continue to be met. No reviews or audits have been initiated by my Department into the scheme's effect on the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes to the limited list have been recommended by the review committee; and which of these have been accepted.

Mr. Hayhoe: All the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs on the products which should and should not be available for prescription under the selected list scheme have been accepted and the changes are included in the following amending regulations; SI 1985 No. 1712, SI 1986 No. 381, SI 1986 No. 916.

Prescribing

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what negotiations are in progress between his Department and the medical profession in relation to voluntary measures on prescribing.

Mr. Hayhoe: Discussions with the medical profession have covered a number of measures which would encourage general medical practitioners to prescribe more effectively and economically. My Department is pressing ahead with plans to provide practitioners with better and more timely information about their prescribing and is considering what other help might be given. In many areas, however, my Department is looking to the profession itself to take the initiative and I intend to review progress at regular intervals.

Review Committee on the Limited List

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the terms of reference and the current membership of the review committee on the limited list; and how often it meets.

Mr. Hayhoe: The terms of reference of the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs are:

"To advise the United Kingdom Health Ministers about the composition of Schedules 3A and 3B to the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1974 and the corresponding schedules in the Regulations in Scotland and Northern Ireland, (except those items which are in Schedule 3A because the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances has advised that they are not considered drugs in the circumstances of general practice) in order that drugs to meet all real clinical needs at the lowest possible cost to the NHS are available under the National Health Service in the following categories; mild to moderate pain killers, indigestion remedies, laxatives, cough and cold remedies, vitamins, tonics and benzodiazepine sedatives and tranquillisers.

The arrangements of the committee's meetings are flexible. Currently quarterly meetings are scheduled. The committee's membership is:

Artificial Limb and Appliance Centres

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the muscular dystrophy group on the McColl report on the services of artificial limb and appliance centres; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have received from the president of the Muscular Dystrophy Group a petition with about 96,000 signatures, calling for the immediate introduction of dual purpose indoor/outdoor powered wheelchairs. Over 200 members have written to me on the same point following approaches from local branches of the group. The group has also sent me a detailed commentary on the report of the McColl working party.

I have assured those who have raised the matter with me that we are considering urgently the issues raised in the working party's report. We expect to be making a detailed response by the end of the year, and on some issues we may be able to act sooner.

Incontinence Aids and Garments

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received seeking the provision by prescription of incontinence aids and garments for elderly and for disabled people.

Mr. Whitney: In the past three years an average of five inquiries a year have been received. There is no evidence of general dissatisfaction with current arrangements for supply via health authorities.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to establish the feasibility of combining the present system of contract buying of incontinence aids and garments with provision of such aids and garments on prescription.

Mr. Whitney: We are always concerned to discover the most cost-effective way of providing services. The present system enables health authorities to obtain favourable terms for bulk purchase.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates to be the cost of the provision of incontinence aids and garments under the present system operating in England and Wales; what he estimates would be the cost of the provision of such aids and garments by prescription; and upon what basis such estimate is made.

Mr. Whitney: In England and Wales, National Health Service supply of incontinence aids and garments is the responsibility of Health Authorities and is met from within their financial allocations. Figures on the cost of such provision are not kept centrally. The estimated cost of supplying incontinence aids only on prescription would be about £15 million a year. This is a pro-rata estimate based on the 1984 prescribing figures for these items in Scotland.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will establish an inquiry into the feasibility of providing elderly and disabled patients with incontinence aids and garments on prescription; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: No. The question of transferring responsibility for supply from health authorities to the family practitioner service has been considered. It would mean increases in public expenditure to cover the whole cost of provision under the family practitioner services unless compensating reductions were made to health authority cash limits. A change in the existing supply arrangements cannot be justified at present as a priority over other competing claims for resources. We will continue to keep these arrangements under review.

Mentally Handicapped Patients

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the current expenditure per patient for the mentally handicapped by the Bassetlaw health authority; and how this compares with the national average;

(2) how many mentally handicapped patients have been sent out of Saxondale and Balderton hospitals, Nottinghamshire, to return to the Bassetlaw area health authority; and what extra money has been made available to take care of them;

(3) if he will now make the funds available fully to staff and maintain Hillside house, Kilton hospital, Worksop to provide short-term care facilities for the mentally handicapped;

(4) why parents in Bassetlaw have been advised that their mentally handicapped children can no longer use the facilities of Hillside house, Kilton hospital, Worksop;

(5) what comparison he has made of the provision for the mentally handicapped in (a) Worksop and (b) Bassetlaw constituency, Nottinghamshire; and what is the expenditure of other health authorities in Nottinghamshire, South Yorkshire and surrounding areas, respectively.

Mr. Whitney: Responsibility for the provision of local health services to mentally handicapped patients lies with individual regional and district health authorities. The hon. Member may therefore wish to make inquiries of the chairman of the Trent regional health authority.

Dual Purpose Ambulances

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department holds any information on the age and mileage of dual purpose ambulances in England.

Mr. Whitney: No, this information is not held centrally.

Single Payments

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state (a) how many single payments have been made under regulation 28 of the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulations for each year since November 1981 to the following categories of claimants: (i) pensioners, (ii) unemployed, (iii) sick and disabled, (iv) single parents and (v) others, (b) the cost by year and on average for each category, (c) how many of these payments have been made to the long-term unemployed, (d) how much it is expected to save by its abolition and (e) how much under or overestimation should be taken into account in the figures.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in preparing guidelines on minimum standards of services and provision for people with mental handicap, he will take into account the stamina paper No. 7 published by MENCAP, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Whitney: MENCAP's stamina paper No. 7 "Care in the Community for People who are Mentally Handicapped" provides guidelines for MENCAP local societies to help them to discuss with statutory authorities how local services can be improved. Our guidance to health and local authorities already emphasises the need to inform and consult parents, and the role of local voluntary organisations. In our consideration of the extent to which further guidance from the Department to authorities would be welcome and useful, we will take full account of stamina paper No. 7. This paper has also been brought to the attention of the national development team for mentally handicapped people, which advises health and social services authorities on their services for mentally handicapped people and their own self-monitoring arrangements.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if, in preparing guidelines on leisure activities for people with a mental handicap, he will take into account the recent MENCAP report, a copy of which has been sent to him;

(2) if, in preparing guidelines on daytime services for people with a mental handicap, he will take into account MENCAP's publication "Day Services Today and Tomorrow," a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Whitney: The Department's resource guide to day services for mentally handicapped people, now in preparation, will take full account of both documents.

Blood

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give, for each quarter since 1980, the total number of units of blood supplied to non-National Health Service hospitals by the regional blood transfusion service, covering south London, Surrey, Sussex and Kent;

(2) if he will give, for each year since 1975, the total number of units of blood supplied to non-National Health Service hospitals by the national blood transfusion service.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

In-patient Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to his Department on patients' experience of waiting lists and waiting times for in-patient treatment in other industrialised countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: While we have some information, differences between the organisation of health systems in other industrialised countries make comparisons with the situation in the National Health Service not very meaningful.

Registered Homes Tribunal Hearings

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost to date of the registered homes tribunal hearings; and what this represents in terms of cost per hearing.

Mr. Whitney: Payments made in the 12 months ending 31 March 1986 in respect of registered homes tribunals hearings amounted to £13,340. This would represent a sum of about £834 per hearing.

New End Hospital, Hampstead

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will provide bridging finance to allow Hampstead health authority to build alternative accommodation for patients from New End hospital before that hospital closes.

Mr. Hayhoe: The allocation of capital to district health authorities is a matter for regional health authorities.

Suicides

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many suicides have occurred in each year since 1974 amongst 16 to 19-year-olds, 20 to 21-year-olds and over 25-year-olds, giving figures for males and females, separately.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Bolton General Hospital

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date in 1989 he expects work on phase 1 of Bolton general hospital to begin; and what steps he will take to ensure that this timetable is adhered to by the North-Western regional health authority.

Mr. Whitney: This is for the North-Western regional health authority to say as it remains its responsibility to set and manage an affordable capital programme, which advances the region's strategy. The hon. Member may therefore wish to address his detailed inquiry on dates to the chairman of that authority.

Dental Charges

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to make available to social security officers and dental surgeries leaflets P11 (Prescriptions) and D11 (Dental Treatment) stating the current charges for these services as uprated on 1 April; if he will give the reasons for the delay in making these leaflets available; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Dental charges have not been increased since April 1985. Leaflet D11 (Dental Treatment) has current prices and has been widely available since then. It will be replaced in July.

The new edition of P11 (Prescription Charges) will be available in July. A poster announcing the new prescription charges has been widely available since they were introduced in April.

The new P11 will give details of the new charges and of the qualifying income levels for exemption from charges. These new exemption levels come into effect with the social security benefit up-rating in July. It would not have been economic to have produced a leaflet only for the period April to July 1986.

The reform of social security benefits will align social security up-ratings with other budgetary change.

Casualties (Helicopter Transportation)

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance is given to health authorities on the transport of casualties by helicopter; when he last issued a circular on the subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Guidance to health authorities on the transport of all types of patient was issued in 1978—health circular (78)45. Specific guidance on the transport of patients by air was issued in 1975—Health Service Circular (Interim Series) HSC(IS)196; this guidance remains applicable. Copies of these documents are in the Library.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning discrimination against people with disabilities from Mr. Jack Watson of Hillingdon, Middlesex: what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Mr. Watson wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 22 October 1985 alleging that the BBC was contravening certain sections of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970, the Disabled Persons Act 1981, and the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, and asking that the Secretary of State for Social Services exercise his default powers under section 36 of the National Assistance Act 1948. Mr. Watson's letter was acknowledged on behalf of the Secretary of State on 7 November 1985.

On the information contained in Mr. Watson's letter, it does not appear that my right hon. Friend has the powers, in relation to the issues raised, which Mr. Watson asked that he should exercise. A further reply has now been sent to Mr. Watson explaining this, together with an apology for the delay in writing to him again. The reply also indicates that, if Mr. Watson wishes to pursue the matter and will provide further details of his complaint, consideration will be given to whether there is any action which could appropriately be taken.

Legal Aid

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many outstanding applications for finance for legal aid are on file at the Department of Health and Social Security legal aid assessment offices at Preston, Lancashire; what is the average period of time taken to process such claims; if he has plans to increase staff at the office: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: There are 54,845 outstanding applications for finance for legal aid on file at the Department's legal aid assessment office at Preston, Lancashire. Information on the time taken to process such claims is not available in the form requested by the hon. Member, however, 59 per cent. of applications are cleared within six weeks of registration at the office. Staffing levels were increased from 292 to 313 in April 1986. There are no plans for any further increase, but a staffing survey is planned for August 1986.

YTS (Benefits)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many young people in (a) Coventry, (b) the west midlands and (c) nationally, have had their benefit cut as a result of coming off the YTS prematurely or because they refused a place when offered one.

Mr. Major: Department of Employment statistics show that for the year ending April 1986, altogether 17,804 young people were disqualified from benefit for premature termination of a youth training scheme. I regret that reliable information is not available for Coventry and the west midlands.

Consultants (Trent Region)

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultants are at present under suspension by the Trent regional health authority; and what is the average length of time they have been suspended.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the Trent regional health authority, who may be able to provide the information requested.

Elderly Persons

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his replies of 2 May, Official Report, columns 517-8, he will provide such information as is available on local authority and health authority services for those aged over 65 years in such form as is available.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the length of time taken by regional health authorities to apply the present disciplinary procedures when dealing with consultants employed by the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Health authorities are responsible for deciding whether or not to institute disciplinary proceedings against consultants and they are not required to supply details routinely to the Secretary of State about individual cases. Recent criticisms about the disciplinary procedures for hospital doctors are being considered and, if appropriate, action will follow.

Detention Centre Policy, Liverpool

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set up an inquiry into the detention of a 10-year-old boy in assessment centres in Liverpool for the past five years.

Mr. Whitney: I am expecting a report from the Liverpool social services department. I will be writing to the hon. Member when it has been considered.

Hospital Beds (Thames Region)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the average daily number of available beds by sector in each of the districts of the four Thames regions in each year from 1979; and what were the equivalent figures for each of the years 1974 to 1978.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

London Teaching Hospitals (Bed Closures)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the long-term bed closures carried out in London teaching hospitals by district health authorities since April 1984.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. It is not collected centrally, he may wish to write to the chairmen of the Thames regional health authorities, who may be able to provide the information requested.

Expenditure Statistics

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply, of 24 June, Official Report, column 153, to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Pavitt) if he will give a table setting out, for each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87 and cumulatively to 1985-86 and to 1986-87, expenditure on hospital and community health service giving (a) gross spending in cash terms, (b) the percentage increase for each year on the previous year as measured by the gross domestic product deflator, (c) the percentage increase on the previous year of National Health Service pay and prices in excess of inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator, (d) the percentage increase on the previous year of demographic pressures over and above inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator and (e) the additional expenditure on the previous year the Department of Health and Social Security estimated is required, over and above inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator, as a contribution to the costs of the process of medical innovation in health care and its costs 1983.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Maudsley Hospital

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the percentage change in the number of patients attending the emergency clinic at the Maudsley hospital in the last 10 years.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 12 June 1986, c. 303]: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member information in precisely the form she seeks. The available information is given in the table.

DEFENCE

Planning Decisions

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many local planning decisions he has referred to the Department of the Environment since 1979; how many of these have resulted in public inquiries; and of these public inquiries how many have resulted in favour of the Minister's proposals.

Mr. Freeman: Records are not maintained of local planning decisions referred to the Department of the Environment. However, seven cases can be recalled as having been referred since 1979. Of these, one was dealt with by an informal meeting between the parties and another has only recently been referred. Five have resulted in public inquiries. The decision was in favour of the MOD in one of these and against in another. The outcome of one is awaited and two public inquiries are to be held in July 1986.

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state since 1979 the total cost to his Department of appeals against decisions of local planning authorities not to give permission to Ministry planning applications.

Mr. Freeman: Records are not maintained which enable the cost of appeals to the Department to be determined. The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. James Young

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what training was provided by his Department or its agents during June in the Birmingham area for Mr. James Young, a captain in the South African infantry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I am not aware that Captain Young of the South African infantry has received training at any Ministry of Defence establishment, but if the hon. Member would like to write to me giving further details I shall undertake to investigate the matter again.

Blastproof Structures

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what construction work involving hardened or blastproof structures has been carried out, is being carried out, or is planned at Ouston barracks or Albemarle airfield; and if he will state the nature, purpose and cost of such construction.

Mr. Freeman: A secure vehicle compound and training facility has recently been constructed at Albemarle barracks, Ouston. Also, for safety reasons, asbestos cladding was recently removed from the walls of a bunker which was constructed in the late 1930s and which is used as the tactical area of responsibility headquarters, Northumbria within No. 2 home defence region. The total cost of both projects is about £283,000.

Privatisation

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now cancel further privatisation plans of his Department including the contractorisation proposals at COD Donnington.

Mr. Freeman: Contracting out of support services, where this is shown to offer a more cost efective alternative to retaining the task in-house, is an important element in the Department's continuing search for efficiency and value for money. We have no intention of cancelling our plans in this area.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make it his policy to invite the submission of evidence from those scientists in the United Kingdom who claim that a comprehensive test ban treaty is adequately verifiable; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to convene a conference of scientific opinion in the United Kingdom on the issue of seismic and other means of verifying a comprehensive test ban; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Government are advised by their own experts in seismology and other matters related to the verification of a comprehensive test ban. Work carried out by others in these fields is also monitored. There is, therefore, no need for the Government to invite evidence or convene a conference on these issues. The Government believe, however, that these need to be addressed at the Geneva conference on disarmament, and have proposed a mandate for an ad hoc committee to do so. Regrettably, others have not accepted it.

Military Expenditure (NATO)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of United Kingdom military expenditure is attributable, both directly and indirectly, to North Atlantic Treaty Organisation commitments.

Mr. Stanley: It is estimated that about 95 per cent. of the United Kingdom's defence budget is devoted directly or indirectly to NATO tasks.

Royal Navy (Ships)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many new ships are due to enter the service of the Royal Navy in each of the next three years, indicating the type of each ship.

Mr. Lee: It is not our practice to reveal planned acceptance dates for RN ships. Annex C of vol. 1 of SDE 86 does however indicate those ships planned to enter service in 1986-87. There are currently 25 warships on order.

HMS Tiger

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans have been made for the disposal of HMS Tiger.

Mr. Lee: HMS Tiger is to be sold for breaking for the recovery of scrap. Following competitive tendering the highest bid has been accepted, subject to contract, with Terry Bell Shipbrokers acting on behalf of Desguaces Varela of Spain.

TRANSPORT

Tolled Crossings

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now respond to the report of the Transport Committee on tolled crossings (HC 250-1) published on 12 March.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I cannot yet add to the answer given to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend on Monday 21 May at columns 11-12.

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorway service areas are being considered for the M25 and M11; and when he now expects the first to open.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our present aim is to establish four service areas on the M25 and one on the M11 at Birchanger. The first of these areas expected to open is at South Mimms on the M25. It is expected that this will be fully operative early in 1987.

Driving Licences

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to recall all current driving licences; for what purpose this is to be done; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no plans to recall all current driving licences.

Vehicle Number Plates

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many (a) unissued and (b) spent number plates are currently held in respect of each licensing district; and, of these, how many in each case fall within his Department's definition of cherished;

(2) why some current registration numbers when reached in rotation are not issued; which numbers in which series are so retained; and if he will make a statement on his policy towards the future of these numbers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Over 100 million possible registration mark combinations are known not to have been issued and 1·3 million marks were assigned to vehicles which are recorded on DVLC's computer record as scrapped or permanently exported. There is no agreed definition of what constitutes a "cherished" mark but since 1983 50,000 possible combinations in the 1 to 20 number range have been withheld each year because there is currently no satisfactory basis for deciding between competing claims.

Registration marks are withheld by the Department if it is considered that they are potentially offensive or are likely to be particularly attractive (primarily those in the 1 to 20 number range). I am now considering the possibility of making attractive registration marks available by means of a sale scheme. Legislation would be required before any such scheme could be introduced.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government that no large contracts should be placed in connection with the Channel tunnel project until the presenters provide evidence to Her Majesty's Government that the shareholders and lenders have agreed to it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since this is a wholly private sector project, the Government do not consider it necessary to require evidence that shareholders and lenders have agreed to contracts. The concession does not therefore contain a requirement to that effect. The Government's concern is that sufficient funds should be available to finance the works, and clause 5.2 of the concession requires the concessionaires to satisfy the Government on that point.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport why article 8.4 of the draft concession for the Channel tunnel project was withdrawn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Channel tunnel concession went through many drafts before reaching its final form, but it would not be appropriate to reveal details of this commercial negotiation.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ascertain from the French Government whether it is their policy that major contracts for the Channel tunnel project should not be placed until evidence is provided that the shareholders and lenders have given their consent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Like the British Government, the French Government are a signatory to the Channel tunnel concession, which does not contain such a requirement.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the organisations and individuals who have made representations to him in support of a third Thames crossing at Dartford and the removal of tolls, as an alternative to the construction of the proposed east London river crossing.

Mr. Moore: I will answer this question shortly.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department intends to provide the inquiry into the proposed east London river crossing with information on the traffic effects of providing a third Thames crossing at Dartford and removing existing tolls as advocated by a number of objectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I have undertaken to make an announcement on the proposals for the third Thames crossing at Dartford. The Department will provide such further evidence as may be appropriate in the light of that announcement.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Transport what help the Government will give to transport authorities and local authorities in introducing more energy-efficient means of public transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government are always willing to encourage ways in which energy efficiency can contribute to overall economic efficiency in their discussions with local authorities and others on major investment projects. The Energy Efficiency Office of the Department of Energy, with my Department's support, is undertaking a study with the industry into energy use by bus and coach operators. This will provide guidance on energy efficiency which will be applicable to both the public and private sector.

Motor Cycle Noise

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the outstanding European Economic Community directives on motorcycle noise, currently awaiting approval by the House, indicating which of them will require action by the House to implement them; and if he will state the dates by which each must be implemented.

Mr. Moore: There are no directives outstanding. The current directive (78/1015/EEC) was introduced into UK legislation in 1980 and applies to every motor cycle first used on or after 1 April 1983. Negotiations are now taking place on Commission proposals for an amending directive which will introduce tighter limits. These proposals are the subject of explanatory memoranda Nos. 9148/84 and 6766/85. The limits and implementation dates in the proposals have yet to be agreed.

Offshore Supplies

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with representatives of Britain's offshore supply vessel companies and crews concerning the effect of oil prices on their business; what consideration has been given to reserving offshore oil supply traffic to British vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: My Department has regular contacts with the industry's representatives and my noble Friend the Minister responsible for shipping will be meeting a deputation from the British Offshore Support Vessels Association later this week for further discussions about the problems facing the United Kingdom support vessel fleet. Clearly there are a number of options open to us and I will be evaluating these in the light of developments in the negotiations in the European Community and our discussions with the industry.

Associated British Ports (Redundant Land and Property)

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the valuation criteria for the disposal of redundant land and property owned by Associated British Ports for inner city and urban renewal purposes in cases where the cost of reinstating the land is very high in relation to its likely developed value;

(2) what is his policy on the disposal of redundant land and property owned by the Associated British Ports for inner city and urban renewal purposes.

Mr. Moore: Associated British Ports is wholly owned by Associated British Ports Holdings plc which was privatised in 1983. The disposal of redundant land and property owned by Associated British Ports is therefore a matter for that undertaking and its parent company. The valuation of any such disposals is a matter for them and the purchaser.

Driving Instructors

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport what allocation of time is set aside for driving instructors to speak to or discuss matters with their supervising approved driving instructors when problems occur.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's supervising examiners (ADI) arrange their programme of work so that they are normally available in their offices each Friday to speak to instructors. In addition, the supervising examiner will offer to discuss an instructor's performance and any problems at the end of a test of continued fitness and ability.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport who is responsible for trainee driving instructors when their sponsoring approved driving instructor moves to another job.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no specified "sponsoring" approved driving instructor. The Motor Cars (Driving Instruction) Regulations 1977 require only that there must always be at least one approved driving instructor working at the address specified on the trainee licence for every licence holder employed there.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that the ratio of one driving instructor to one trainee is observed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's supervising examiners (ADI) carry out random checks on driving schools to confirm the observance of instructor/trainee ratios.

The Department investigates fully any alleged breaches.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many driving instructor trainee licences have been issued since the implementation of the Road Traffic (Driving Instruction) Act 1984; and how many subsequent trainee licences have been issued to the same applicants since that date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since sections 2 to 5 of the Act came into operation on 20 May 1985, 2,766 trainee licences have been issued up to 31 May 1986. Of these (a) 764 were first licences; (b) two were second licences following issue of one in a category (a); (c) 1,981 were second licences issued to trainees to whom a first licence had already been issued before implementation of the Act; (d) 19 were third licences to trainees in the same position as those in category (c).

Radioactive Materials (Transportation)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail the exact routes and the land or sea which is flown over by aeroplanes carrying radioactive materials.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The national regulations governing transport of radioactive materials by air are based on the technical instructions of the international Civil Aviation Authority which do not depend for their effectiveness on the choice of any particular route. Accordingly the Department does not collect detailed information of the kind requested.

Investment Grants (Shipping)

Sir William Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) which member states of the European Economic Community provide investment grants or other assistance to their shipping companies for the purchase of new ships; what is the size and nature of such grants or assistance in each case; and whether the grant of such aid is conditional on either building such ships in national shipyards or operating them under the national flag;

(2) which member states of the European Economic Community make operational subsidies available to their shipping companies; what is the scale of such assistance; and what conditions are imposed on the availability of such assistance;

(3) which member states of the European Economic Community reserve part of their seaborne trade to their national shipping companies; and what is the nature and extent of such cargo reservation in each case.

Mr. Moore: I will answer these questions shortly.

Sir William Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport, which member states of the European Economic Community provide investment grants or other assistance to their shipping companies for the purchase of secondhand ships; what is the size and nature of such assistance; and what conditions are imposed on the availability of such assistance.

Mr. Moore: The information is as follows:

France

Interest subsidies are provided for the purchase of second-hand vessels less than 10 years old or in the case of tankers to be used in cabotage trades less than 13 years old. The proportion of the subsidised loan cannot count for more than 60 per cent. of the purchase price including necessary repairs; the scheme applies to loans for a period of up to seven years, and the purchaser of a foreign vessel has to prove that no foreign credits exist.

In order to benefit from the subsidy the vessel must be at least half owned by a French national or be entirely owned by companies having their headquarters in France. The vessel must be at least 150 grt and fly the French flag and all conversions must be carried out in French shipyards.

Italy

A grant of up to 1·88 per cent. is provided for the purchase of a foreign flag ship between three and 10 years old and not exceeding 10,000 grt.

Netherlands

A fleet modernisation scheme in the form of a premium of 2·3 per cent. a year for five years exists for ships less than five years old. Vessels have to be Dutch-owned and flagged but the scheme is not restricted to those built in Dutch shipyards.

Freckleton Bypass

Sir Edward Gardner asked the Secretary of State for Transport if additional funds can be made available to enable Lancashire county council to include the construction of a bypass around the village of Freckleton in its road programme for 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no additional funds available to support local authority road building in 1986-87. The transport supplementary grant (TSG) settlement was announced in December and, as it must do, it distributed all the grant. My right hon. Friend will consider the distribution of TSG for 1987-88 when he has received highway authorities' transport policies and programmes later this year. Councils receive general support for their spending through rate support grant block grant.

EC (Vehicle Tests)

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on vehicle testing arrangements in other European Community countries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Testing arrangements for heavy goods vehicles and large passenger vehicles are governed by the EC road worthiness directive (77/143/EEC), under which these vehicles must be tested annually starting one year after first use. The arrangements for cars and light goods vehicles are set out in the table.

Comparison of car and light goods vehicle testing in EC countries
Countries with (or in process of introducing) testing schemes

	First test after	Frequency thereafter	Additional testing		Nature of testing stations

Other countries:
France: Considering introducing testing for vehicles involved in serious accidents and vehicles over five years old at change of ownership.
Greece: Considering testing of vehicles every two years in government test centres.
Ireland: Considering scheme on British model.
Portugal and Spain: No annual testing—not known if considering anything.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Leicester Crown Court

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Attorney-General what has been the percentage rate of acquittal at Leicester Crown court in cases where the defendants plead not guilty for each of the past 10 years for which figures are available.

The Solicitor-General: The percentage of defendants who were acquitted after pleading not guilty to all counts at Leicester Crown court in the past 10 years is as follows:

	per cent.
1976	35·3
1977	33·7
1978	31·9

HOME DEPARTMENT

New Prisons

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which are the 20 new prisons that are currently planned to be built.

Mr. Mellor: Three new prisons built by the Property Services Agency as part of the prison building programme have already been opened; at Wayland in Norfolk, Stocken in Leicestershire and Thorn Cross in Cheshire. Following work by the Home Office directorate of works, two further prisons were opened in 1985 to relieve acute pressure on the prison system. These were at Lindholme, near Doncaster, and at Morton Hall, in Lincolnshire.

The programme of new PSA prison building further consists of the following 13 establishments which are in construction, in design or planned:

Establishment	Location
Full Sutton	Humberside
Littlehey	Cambridgeshire
Mount	Hertfordshire
Swaleside	Kent
Garth	Lancashire
Brinsford	Staffordshire
Whitemoor	Cambridgeshire
Bicester	Oxfordshire
Woolwich	Greater London
Lancaster	Lancashire
Milton Keynes	Buckinghamshire
Doncaster	South Yorkshire
Ashford	Middlesex

As a result of the public expenditure decision announced in January, design work is now also planned to start on two more prisons.

Maintenance Defaulters

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men have received prison sentences for non-fulfilment of maintenance payments to former marital partners and children following broken marriages in each year since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: Receptions of those committed to custody by magistrates for non-payment of wife or child maintenance are published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (table 6.2 of the issue for 1984, Cmnd. 9622). Provisional figures for receptions of males in 1985 are 698 for wife maintenance and 37 for child maintenance. The corresponding figures available for those committed by county courts are given in the table.

Drugs Offences

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions have been imposed by magistrates in Wolverhampton on people for being in possession of drugs in each of the last six years; and if he will list the range of fines, prison sentences and suspended prison sentences imposed for this offence during the same period.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested for the years 1979 to 1984, is given in the table. Corresponding information for 1985 is not yet available.

Alvada Kooken

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire as to the steps being taken to secure the recapture of Alvada Kooken, an inmate of Broadmoor, who absconded whilst on day release in Southsea; what co-ordination with other police forces is being effected in this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Miss Kooken was recaptured and returned to Broadmoor on 25 June.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a list of the number and type of appliances and their equipment deployed at each fire station in the north-east area command of the London fire brigade which carry equipment specifically for use at incidents involving radioactive substances and details of other specialist appliances deployed elsewhere in the brigade which could be used at such incidents; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of this level of provision in relation to protection against radioactive hazards.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The list requested is as follows:

Station	Appliances
Shoreditch	Pump Ladder, Pump
Kingsland Road	Pump Ladder, Pump, Hydraulic Platform
Stoke Newington	Pump Ladder, Pump
Whitechapel	Pump Ladder, Pump
Stratford	Pump Ladder, Pump

Dagenham	Pump Ladder, Pump, Hydraulic Platform
Hornchurch	Pump Ladder, Pump
Barking	Pump Ladder, Pump, Foam Tender, Fire Investigation Unit
Wennington	Pump Ladder
Silvertown	Pump Ladder, Pump
Plaistow	Pump Ladder, Pump

These appliances carry equipment for use at incidents involving radioactive substances. 26 pump ladders each carry five breathing apparatus sets, a survey meter, six dosimeters, six pairs of protective gloves and two chemical protection suits. 19 pumps each carry four breathing apparatus sets, five dosimeters, five pairs of protective gloves and two chemical protection suits. The emergency rescue tender carries five breathing apparatus sets, five dosimeters, four gas-tight suits, four chemical protection suits, five pairs of protective gloves and personnel decontamination equipment. A survey meter is for contamination monitoring and a dosimeter is an individual absorbed radiation monitor.

Similar numbers of these appliances and the equipment carried are present in each of the other areas of the London fire brigade and can be mobilised to any incident in the brigade area. Scientific advisers are available at all times. Ancillary equipment is held at the brigade's headquarters.

I am advised that the appliances, equipment, expertise and guidance available to the London fire brigade are adequate in the circumstances.

Probation

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals are the subject of a probation order; and what is the estimated annual cost of implementing a probation order.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is published annually in "Probation Statistics England and Wales" (tables 1.1 and 12.3 of the latest issue, for 1984). The estimated annual cost for each person on probation, which should be treated with reserve as it involves a number of assumptions, was £660 in 1983-84.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about reconviction rates (a) following a probation order and (b) for individuals who are subject to probation order.

Mr. Mellor: The latest available information on reconvictions of those given probation orders was published in 1979 in chapter 3 of "Previous convictions, sentence and reconviction" Home Office Research Study No. 53 (tables 3.4 and 3.5). A new study is being made of the reconviction rates of those given probation orders and results are expected to be available by the autumn, which will include separate estimates of the number of persons reconvicted during and following a probation order. Information on terminations of probation orders for conviction of an offence is normally published annually in "Probation Statistics England and Wales" (tables 2.10 and 2.11 of the issue for 1983) and will be included in the issue for 1985 to be published towards the end of this year.

Trespass

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to introduce into English law the provisions in section 3 of the Trespass (Scotland) Act 1865, making it an offence to encamp on private property without the consent and permission of the owner or legal occupier of such premises.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor) on 20 June 1986, at column 658.

EC Budget

Q.17 Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the proposal by the Commission to raise a supplementary budget for 1986 which exceeds the strict budgetary limits agreed at a recent meeting of the Council; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: This subject is about to be discussed by the ECOFIN and budget Councils.

La Belle Discotheque (Bombing)

Q.70 Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will now, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, Official Report, column 287, 12 June, publish the evidence that Libya was involved in the bombing of the La Belle discotheque in Berlin on 5 April.

The Prime Minister: I have received two representations about the recent decision by United Engineering Steel (known as Phoenix II) to place an order for a new continuous caster at its Aldwarke works. Decisions about investment projects at Brymbo and other United Engineering Steel plants are matters for the board of the company.

Sir Robert Armstrong

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister why she has extended the tenure of office of Sir Robert Armstrong as Cabinet Secretary and head of the Civil Service beyond normal retirement age.

The Prime Minister: I have asked Sir Robert Armstrong to continue in office until not later than September 1988, in order to leave the greatest possible degree of freedom for decisions after the general election about the organisation of functions and distribution of duties at the centre of government.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 July.

Mr. Janner asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 July.

In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall attend a state banquet at Buckingham palace in honour of President von Weizsacker.

EC (Grants)

Mr. Arnold asked the Prime Minister what steps she takes to monitor the extent to which each Government Department takes up the European Community grants available to it; and what percentage of such grants were taken up in the last year.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 9 June 1986, c. 40-41]: I regret that the figure given for the United Kingdom share of agricultural guidance receipts was incorrect. The table shows the percentage share of United Kingdom receipts from the main Community funds.

	Per cent.
Agricultural Guarantee	9·4
Agricultural Guidance	16·1
European Social Fund (ESF)	30·8
European Regional Development Fund (ERDF)	28·9

The latest estimate of total United Kingdom receipts in 1985 (excluding budget funds and abatements) is £1,908 million.

Coal Industry

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) in view of the abandonment by the National Coal Board of the coal industry's conciliation scheme as enacted in section 46 of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946, what steps he is taking to ensure good working relations on safety, health and welfare of persons in the coal industry between the National Coal Board and the National Union of Mineworkers;

(2) whether the National Coal Board has deposited any copies of new agreements with his Department as replacements for the termination by the National Coal Board of the coal industry conciliation scheme as enacted by Parliament in the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946;

(3) whether he was consulted by the National Coal Board about its unilateral termination of its involvement in the coal industry conciliation scheme which has statutory authority from his Department under section 46 of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946.

Mr. David Hunt: Section 46 of the 1946 Act places a duty on the NCB to consult organisations appearing to it to represent substantial proportions of the persons in its employment. I am satisfied that the board is complying with that duty.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Brian Gentlemen (Prosecution)

Mr. Dubs asked the Attorney-General if he will refer to the Director of Public Prosecutions the new evidence revealed in the programme "Spying for the Comrades" of 12 April regarding the passing of classified information to a foreign diplomat.

The Solicitor-General: All the information contained in the programme referred to by the hon. Member was available to the officers of the Metropolitan police responsible for investigating the allegations made against Mr. Brian Gentlemen and it was all taken into account by the Director of Public Prosecutions when reaching his decision. He concluded that there was no evidence sufficient to justify the institution of criminal proceedings against Mr. Gentlemen.

ENVIRONMENT

Mobile Labour (Housing)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the provision of housing for people moving to take up work, in the light of the recent SHAC report "A Job to Move", a copy of which has been supplied to him; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Government fully recognise the importance of mobility for those moving for work. My Department, in conjunction with the local authorities, has set up national mobility schemes, and continues to support them. I am always keen to look at the possibility of making improvements, and I am examining the SHAC report's recommendations.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list in the Official Report the extent to which housing authorities in England and Wales achieved the target of 1 per cent. of lettings going to the national housing mobility scheme nominees in (a) 1984-85 and (b) 1985-86; and whether he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The information is not yet available in the form requested. When it is available, I shall arrange to place it in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total level of assistance given by his Department spent in the Kirklees metropolitan district council area in each year since 1974, broken down by category of assistance.

Notes:

1. Rate support grant data cover the period since the introduction of Block Grant. Data relate to Kirklees metropolitan district council only and are latest estimates, after holdback where relevant. Care should be taken in comparing 1986-87 with earlier years because of the abolition of West Yorkshire metropolitan county council.

2. Figures for Derelict Land Grant relate to actual expenditure. 1985-86 data are provisional, and figures prior to 1977-78 are not readily available.

3. Urban Programme figures represent annual approvals for expenditure given to Kirklees metropolitan district council.

4. Local Employment Act/Industrial Development Act figures relate to grant payments, which were made only in the years shown. Only a small part of the district is currently eligible.

5. 1985-86 and 1986-87 figures for Home Insulation Scheme Grant, Slum Clearance Subsidy and Improvement Contributions are estimates and will be subject to adjustment when final audit claims are received. Data on Home Insulation Scheme Grant are given from the start of the scheme. Information on Housing Corporation Grant approvals for years prior to 1981-82 is not readily available.

Public Library, Berwick-upon-Tweed

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has given his consent for the complete or partial demolition of the public library building in Berwick-upon-Tweed under section 277A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971.

Mr. Tracey: No. I understand that the district council has sold the building. The new owner has applied for a certificate of immunity from listing under section 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. That application is being considered, and a decision is expected shortly. Whether or not a certificate of immunity is granted, the owner would require the consent of the local planning authority before carrying out any demolition work because the building is in a conservation area.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority (a) the number of difficult to let houses, (b) the number of houses classified as unfit and (c) the number of houses lacking basic amenities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Local authorities' housing investment programme returns include their estimates of the numbers of unfit dwellings, of other dwellings which lack basic amenities, and, excluding private housing, of dwellings which are difficult to let. The information relating to April 1985 is listed in the "HIP1 (1985) all items print" which is available in the Library. The numbers reported are not necessarily comparable as authorities' criteria may differ.

House Building

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of new housing was built on (a) virgin land and (b) recycled land in each of the five most recent years for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: Information in the form requested is not available. Figures recently issued for land use changes in England recorded during 1985 show that 22 per cent. of land developed for residential use was previously developed, 23 per cent. was vacant land in urban areas, and 55 per cent. had been mainly in agricultural use.

Rates

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his answer of 11 May, Official Report, column 484, he will publish in the Official Report the percentage increase in rates for 1986-87 over that for 1985-86 for each shire county.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is as follows:

Assured Tenancies

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to extend monitoring of the assured tenancy scheme to include questions concerning the renewal and termination of assured tenancies.

Mr. John Patten: I propose to include these questions in the next monitoring exercise.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the information, as at 1 April 1986, requested by his Department from approved bodies under the assured tenancy scheme, covering, for each named body (a) the number and geographical location of dwellings let, (b) the number and geographical location of dwellings under construction, (c) the number and geographical location of dwellings planned, (d) the rent levels of each letting, (e) the address of each approved body, and (f) in each case, under (a) to (e) above, whether the approved body is a financial institution, a building/construction company, a property investment company, a non-incorporated partnership or a housing association.

Mr. John Patten: My Department has prepared a report on the assured tenancies monitoring exercise carried out earlier this year. Copies are being placed in the Library.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by bands of expenditure, the amounts required to bring privately-owned vacant dwelling houses up to a basic standard of fitness for (a) Greater London, (b) the rest of England, and (c) England as a whole; and how he has taken or will take these amounts into consideration when determining the prescribed amounts applicable to qualifying works under the assured tenancy proposals in the Housing and Planning Bill.

Mr. John Patten: I regret that information is not available in the form requested by the hon. Member.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the basis on which he will determine the prescribed amounts for qualifying works under the assured tenancy proposals in the Housing and Planning Bill.

Mr. John Patten: I propose to consult publicly before reaching a view on the prescribed amount.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those bodies which have expressed an interest to his Department concerning an extension of the assured tenancy scheme to improved, repaired or converted dwelling houses; which of these bodies are already approved bodies under the existing scheme; and if he will indicate for each body whether the interest shown concerns dwelling houses (a) at present in the ownership of a local housing authority (b) at present privately owned but which at some point have been owned by a local housing authority, or (c) in long-term private ownership.

Mr. John Patten: A substantial number of bodies, including building societies and landlords already approved under the assured tenancy scheme, have expressed general interest in our proposals to extend the scope of the scheme.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many mortgage repossessions have taken place in each of the years 1979 to 1985 in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Radioactivity

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will review the level of radioactivity specified in the guide on the interpretation of the Radioactive Substances Act 1983; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what account was taken in calculating the level of radioactivity specified in the guide on the interpretation of the Radioactive Substances Act 1983 of data published by the Central Electricity Generating Board in relation to radioactivity levels of garden soil, tea, coffee and common fertilisers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are no plans to update the guide to the administration of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, which was published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in 1982.

I shall ask the Central Electricity Generating Board to write to my hon. Friend, since the statement to which he refers appears to come from that source.

Dolphinaria and Marine Parks

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has yet completed its review of dolphinaria and marine parks.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have now studied the report commissioned by my Department last September from Dr. Margaret Klinowska at the University of Cambridge. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

Dr. Klinowska's report is based on a thorough examination of past and present practices at United Kingdom dolphinaria, and she has taken evidence from over 150 organisations and individuals. I accept her two main conclusions: that dolphinaria can continue to be permitted, provided that there are major improvements in virtually all areas, including accommodation, captive breeding programmes, the co-ordination of research and the quality of education provided by cetacean displays; and that my Department should not permit further imports of cetaceans until these new standards have been met.

My Department will establish a steering group (including a representative of the Nature Conservancy Council) to consider the report's detailed recommendations. The steering group will seek co-operation from the operators of dolphinaria, and from other bodies whose help will be needed, particularly in trying to establish co-ordinated programmes for captive breeding and research.

The operators and other interested bodies will be invited to comment on the detailed recommendations by the end of August, and we will be seeking programmes for each dolphinaria by the end of November to show how and when the required improvements will me made. This will guide the Department in decising whether or not further exemptions for commercial display under article 6 of the EC CITES regulation (3626/82) can be granted after 1 January 1987. I expect the main preparations for implementation to have been completed by the end of this year. Operators will be given a maximum of five years to meet the new basic standards for existing animals, and a further five years after that to make additional improvements.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the Housing Corporation's corporate plan.

Mr. John Patten: The Housing Corporation's second corporate plan covering England, Wales and Scotland was published yesterday. It reviews the corporation's programme of investment in housing associations, its administrative functions and operating costs and sets out various options for the future.

I welcome the plan as a valuable contribution to the discussion of important housing issues.

The options in the plan will be considered in the forthcoming public expenditure survey against the background of other pressures on public resources.

The publication of this plan gives me the opportunity to pay tribute to the corporation and to the voluntary housing movement in Great Britain for their work in meeting the needs of those who face special difficulties and in fostering low-cost home ownership.

Council House Sales

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the table giving information on sales of dwellings by each local authority in England, which was referred to in the answer given to the hon. Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 26 March, Official Report, column 495.

Mr. John Patten: I have today placed in the Library the latest figures, to which my hon. Friend refers, giving information reported by each local authority in England on the progress of council house sales to the end of March 1986.

Radiation

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment at what level alpha emitters were detected on 5 May; at what locations and by whom; what further investigations have been carried out or are planned as a result; what has been the trend in the level of alpha emitters detected since 5 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The complete monitoring data arising from the Chernobyl incident is being collated and will shortly be published through Her Majesty's Stationery Office. A copy will be deposited in the Library of the House of Commons.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the level of caesium 137 detected by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology at Ennerdale in Cumbria on 5 May; how this figure compares with the normal background readings for caesium 137; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 5 May the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology (ITE), during an analysis of radioactivity levels on the Cumbrian Fells, recorded 16,900 Bq of caesium 137 per kilogram of grass on Ennerdale Fells and passed the information to my Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The measurement was included in the collection of monitoring results my Department made available to the public on 15 May.

ITE's analysis was carried out on dried samples, which gives results about five times greater than those obtained on freshly harvested grass, which is the standard method of analysis. This accounts for the apparent discrepancy between the measurements reported by ITE and those from other agencies.

Sellafield

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish details of the proposed new authorisation for radioactive liquid discharges from British Nuclear Fuels plc plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 30 April 1986, c. 414.]: The new authorisation limiting liquid radioactive discharges from Sellafield has been issued jointly by my Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and comes into effect today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accidents in the Home

44. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people were treated by the National Health Services during 1985 as a result of accidents in the home caused by faulty electrical installation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: This information is not available. The data collected at the 20 hospitals in the home accident surveillance system (HASS) include a provisional figures of 108 people who were treated at those hospitals in 1985 having had an electric current accident. This does not necessarily imply fault in either the appliance or the electrical installation involved.

British Books (Canadian Tariff)

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the implications of the Canadian Government implementing a 10 per cent. tariff on British books for Her Majesty's Government's negotiating position in connection with the general agreement on tariff and trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: GATT ecourages, but does not require, its signatories to enter into commitments — known as bindings — not to increase tariffs above certain levels. However, books are among the very few manufactured products where Canada's tariff is not bound: Canada may therefore change the tariff as it wishes.

A priority in the round of GATT negotiations will be to press for fuller acceptance of GATT tariff obligations by our trading partners and to seek reductions of higher tariffs.

Beer Froth

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his definition of the froth on a glass of beer.

Mr. Howard: The term "froth" is not legally defined, but it is used to describe the mixture of gas and liquid which forms above the surface of the liquid when beer is poured into a container.

Weights and Measures

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for the implementation of section 43 of the Weights and Measures Act 1985.

Mr. Howard: Consultations on the Department's proposals for changes to the regulations dealing with the construction and testing of beer glasses will not close until 16 July, and the Brewers' Society has yet to make public its proposals for guidance notes to which I referred in my answer of 26 March, at columns 475-76.

As I said then, the Government will wish to see if this joint initiative proves to be successful before considering implementing section 43 of the Weights and Measures Act 1985.

Small Firms

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect on the cash flow of small and medium sized firms falling within the Bolton definition of companies of the four-month moratorium of Government grants to them; if he will now abandon the moratorium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No formal assessment of the effects on firms of the moratorium on payments of old-style regional development grants has been carried out. While the moratorium has the effect of delaying receipt of grant by four months, many applicants will be able, if they wish, to borrow money on the strength of the approval letters which are issued in the normal way but four months before the actual payment. There are no plans at present to lift the moratorium.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many small firms, by Bolton committee definition, he has assisted by regional development grant, selective financial assistance or any other financial assistance in the course of the last 12 months to the latest convenient date; and how much money was involved in each region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The table sets out the schemes of assistance for which information on support for small firms is available. Except where indicated the Bolton committee definition of 200 employees has been used. Information on the amount of assistance by region could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Assistance	Number of firms assisted	Amount £ million	Period

* Figures are only available for the new regional development grant scheme which was introduced in November 1984.

† Figures given are for firms with up to 500 employees.

‡ Responsibility for this scheme was transferred to the Department of Employment on 1 October 1985. The figures relate to the number of guarantees given and the total loan value. In addition, in the six months period covered the small firms service handled some 127,000 inquiries and 17,500 counselling sessions.

Note:

The figures given for regional development grant and regional selective assistance are for England only.

General Motors-BL

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what talks or contacts, formal or informal, have taken place recently between the Government and General Motors; and what discussions there have been in this context about Leyland Vehicles and Land Rover.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There have been no meetings between Ministers and General Motors since my meeting with Mr. Stempel reported to the House on 22 May 1986, at columns 249-50. Working level contacts between officials of my Department and companies in the vehicle industry, including GM, have continued in the normal way.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what current discussions are taking place between his Department, General Motors and BL about joint schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government share the view of the BL board that all options regarding the future of BL's commercial vehicle operations should be reviewed. The chairman of BL has stated publicly that he is exploring the possibilities for collaborative and other arrangements with other manufacturers.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions are taking place between his Department, BL and General Motors about possible marketing arrangements involving General Motors and Land Rover.

Mr. Peter Morrison: None.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any discussions are taking place between his Department, the BL board and General Motors about the future of Freightrover.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No discussions have taken place since my right hon. Friend's statement of April 24 with any party regarding the sale of Freight Rover but, as with other BL businesses, opportunities for collaboration and other arrangements with other manufacturers will continue to be explored.

Austin Rover

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if there are any discussions involving his Department, BL and other companies about the future of Austin Rover; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No discussions are taking place concerning the sale of Austin Rover. Discussions between individual BL businesses, including Austin Rover, and other companies on matters of mutual commercial interest continue to take place in the normal way.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any discussions are taking place between his Department or the BL board and the Ford Motor Company about the future of Austin Rover.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry told the House on 6 February that the possibility of the sale of Austin Rover to Ford would not be pursued. The position is unchanged.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any discussions are taking place between his Department or the BL board and Honda about the future of Austin Rover.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Austin Rover is involved in major collaborative projects with Honda, including the new Rover 800 car, to be launched this month. BL and Honda are therefore frequently in touch about their collaboration and its development.

EC (Product Liability)

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has reached a decision on implementation in the United Kingdom of the European Community directive on product liability.

Mr. Howard: We propose to implement this directive through primary legislation as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits, together with legislation to implement our proposed general safety duty and other amendments to consumer legislation. We propose to allow at least six months between enactment of the legislation on product liability and its entry into force. The development risks defence and the exemption for primary agricultural products will be retained, but we do not intend to introduce a financial limit on a producer's liability.

Furnishings (Inflammability)

Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has completed his review of regulations concerning the inflammability of furniture and furniture coverings sold in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply 23 May 1986, c. 363]: I have completed my review of the need for updating the regulations concerning the flammability of upholstered furniture and have concluded that new legislative requirements should include a reference to a code of practice based on the Furniture Industry Research Association's own classification scheme. This will mean that some of the worst upholstery component combinations now on the market will be banned, but it will stop short of requiring all upholstered furniture to meet the match test. The option of meeting the match test directly will be allowed and the cigarette test will of course remain an essential requirement.

In each of the years 1981 to 1984 there were between 3,300 and 3,600 accidental fires which started in upholstered furniture in occupied buildings in the UK. Each year about 150 people died and about 1,000 were injured in those fires. About half the fires were started by cigarettes.

A working group is being set up to devise a code of practice that will serve as a basis for legislation and ensure a worthwhile improvement in the fire resistance of upholstered furniture. My aim is progressive upgrading of the performance in accidental domestic fires of the furniture available on the market. One of the advantages of a code of practice based on the FIRA classification scheme is its flexibility; as new materials and treatments are developed, the requirements of the code can be made stricter.

The same working group will also consider ways of extending the scope of legislation to include loose cushions and cushion covers, loose replacement covers and upholstery materials sold separately from furniture. It will have 18 months in which to complete its task.

The legislative options are either regulations under the Consumer Safety Act or, when the general safety requirement proposed in our White Paper on the Safety of Goods (Cmnd. 9302) is enacted, approval of the code of practice as a sound modern standard of safety.

Jaguar

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what request his Department has made to BL for the repayment of open market borrowings with some of the receipts from the sale of Jaguar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 373]: My Department has made no such request to BL, but use of the funds from the sale of Jaguar has been the subject of discussion with the company from time to time in the context of BL's overall financial position.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which European Economic Community member states now support effective economic measures against South Africa; and what further action the European Economic Community Council intends to take.

Mrs. Chalker: The Twelve are united in a common policy towards South Africa which emphasises the need for the total abolition of apartheid, an urgent start on national dialogue in South Africa and a cessation of violence on all sides. At the request and on behalf of the Twelve, my right hon. and learned Friend intends to visit southern Africa shortly in a further effort to establish conditions in which the necessary negotiations can commence.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress was made in the elimination of chemical weapons as a result of a recent visit of Mr. Israelyan to the United Kingdom from the Soviet Union.

Mrs. Chalker: In a detailed exchange of views with Mr. Israelyan on June 18 my hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) made plain the need for new Soviet flexibility in the negotiations. We hope that the meeting will contribute to further progress in the CW negotiations.

Bulgaria (Srednogorye Steel Plant)

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any requests from the Bulgarian Government for advice and assistance in the light of the disaster at the Srednogorye steel plant; and if any British citizens were affected by the disaster.

Mrs. Chalker: We much regret the loss of life in the fire at the copper smelting plant at Srednogorye on 23 June.

No British nationals were involved. We have received no requests for advice or assistance from the Bulgarian authorities, but we are ready to consider any that may be made.

Soviet Union (Weapons)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has as to the number of intercontinental ballistic missiles, submarine-launched ballistic missiles and heavy bombers the Soviet Union has removed from operational service since January 1985;

(2) what information he has as to the aggregate number of intercontinental and sea-launched ballistic missiles and heavy bombers the Soviet Union would be obliged to remove from operational service under the terms of a ratified SALT 2 agreement;

(3) what information he has as to the number of intercontinental and sea-launched ballistic missiles, and nuclear missile-carrying submarines the Soviet Union has been obliged to remove from operational service under the terms of SALT 1 and SALT 2.

Mrs. Chalker: It is our understanding that the Soviet Union has withdrawn older strategic systems as new ones are deployed in order to stay within the agreed limits under SALT 1 and 2. The number removed relates directly to the number of new systems deployed.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has as to the Soviet Union's compliance with the SALT 1 and SALT 2 prohibitions on the construction of new fixed intercontinental ballistic missile silos, the testing of new heavy intercontinental ballistic missiles and the number of re-entry vehicles on existing intercontinental ballistic missiles;

(2) what information he has as to whether the Soviet Union has complied with the ceilings on the number of ballistic missile launchers and the number of MIRVed ballistic missile launchers stipulated in the SALT 1 and SALT 2 treaties;

(3) what information he has as to whether the Soviet Union has tested nuclear weapons with a number of re-entry vehicles in excess of that permitted under the terms of the SALT 1 and SALT 2 treaties.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom is not a party to either SALT 1 or SALT 2, which are bilateral agreements between the United States and Soviet Union, although SALT 2 was never ratified. We therefore have no formal standing to pronounce on matters concerning their implementation. We are not aware, however, that the United States has claimed that the Soviet Union has violated the provisions relating to these particular issues.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the Soviet Union's provision of prior notification of tests involving multiple missile launchers and extra-territorial flights.

Mrs. Chalker: None. Article XVI of the SALT 2 agreement, to which the United Kingdom is not a party, stipulates the terms under which one party should give prior notification to the other of ICBM launches.

United States of America (Weapons)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the numbers of intercontinental ballistic missiles, sea-launched ballistic missiles and nuclear missile-carrying submarines the United States has removed from operational service under the SALT 1 and SALT 2 agreements.

Mrs. Chalker: It is our understanding that the United States has withdrawn older strategic systems as new ones are deployed in order to stay within the agreed limits under SALT 1 and 2. Most recently, two Poseidon submarines were removed from service in advance of the latest Ohio class submarine starting sea trials.

African National Congress

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis Her Majesty's Government decided to hold talks with the African National Congress at ministerial level; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government have been following with deep concern recent events in South Africa, including the declaration of a state of emergency. We decided that a meeting with the African National Congress at ministerial level offered an opportunity to impress on the ANC leadership our view that a suspension of violence on all sides is essential to help create a climate in which dialogue and negotiations will become possible.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the conditions precedent to Her Majesty's Government being prepared to hold talks at ministerial level with the Palestine Liberation Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Meetings with PLO officials have been held at the level of Minister of State without formal pre-conditions. Contacts with the PLO at Cabinet minister level remain difficult while the PLO's policies remain ambiguous on Israel's right to exist within secure and recognised boundaries and on the use of violence.

USSR (Russian Jews)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his estimates of the numbers of Russian Jews who have been allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union so far in the current year.

Mrs. Chalker: The figures available to us for the period 1 January to 31 May 1986 are as follows:

Month	Number
January	79
February	86
March	47
April	72
May	49

We expect a figure for June to be available shortly.

Chernobyl Radiation (Compensation)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a claim to the Soviet Government for compensation for any losses sustained by British agriculture as a result of contamination caused by the destruction of the reactor at Chernobyl.

Mrs. Chalker: We are studying the question of a possible claim by Her Majesty's Government on their own behalf or on behalf of their nationals. We intend in any case to reserve all our rights in this matter with the Soviet Government.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schizophrenia

43. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on progress in research into schizophrenia.

Mr. Walden: The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom. I understand from the MRC, which supports a considerable amount of research in schizophrenia, that good progress is being made in several areas including, computer assisted diagnosis, structural changes in the brain, neurochemical imaging, molecular genetic studies, family therapy and evaluation of psychiatric services. The council has recently set up a Schizophrenia and Allied Conditions Committee to review current research in the field and to identify opportunities for future research.

In addition, the Department of Health and Social Security is funding epidemiological research on morbidity and mortality in schizophrenia at the unit of clinical epidemiology, Oxford, and also intends to support studies on community-based services for people with mental illnesses such as schizophrenia. Two such projects have already started.

Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, further to his reply dated 13 May, Official Report, columns 433-34, he will publish in the Official Report the comparable figures for the United Kingdom in each year since 1970, and the proportion contributed by central and local government, respectively, in each case in terms of (i) current prices, (ii) as a percentage of 1979 deflated by the retail prices index and (iii) as a percentage of 1979 deflated by the gross domestic product deflator.

Mr. Dunn: The readily available information shown in the following table relates to net recurrent expenditure in schools incurred by local education authorities in England. Direct expenditure by central Government on maintained schools is negligible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the United Kingdom the amount spent by central Government on each level of education each year since 1970 as a percentage of (a) central Government expenditure and (b) gross domestic product, to two places of decimals.

Mr. Chris Patten: Available information (for selected years) is shown in the following table. Additional information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

School Examinations

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the percentage of passes in GCE O-level and CSE examinations, indicating the subjects and gradings as appropriate.

Mr. Dunn: Information in respect of the GCE and CSE attainments of leavers from English schools is shown in the following table:

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children in Lancashire have taken the GCE O-level and CSE examination in the last five years, indicating the subjects taken.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Religious Education

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that schools implement the provisions of section 25 of the Education Act 1944 relating to religious education.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have already made it clear in the White Paper "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469) that we look to local education authorities and to the schools to ensure that the statutory requirements for religious education and collective worship are met. My right hon. Friend also carefully considers any complaints he receives in respect of particular schools that these requirements are not being fulfilled.

Universities (Funding)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Association of University Teachers about the funding of universities in 1986-87.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has received two letters from the Association of Universities Teachers about the funding of universities and the pay of academic staff. He hopes to meet representives of the association shortly. I spoke at a meeting of the association's council on 16 May and met members of the association Executiver on 12 June; on both occasions I took note of their concerns about funding and pay.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh West, of 17 June, Official Report, column 513, what criteria were used by the University Grants Committee to determine the change to a common funding basis as the single important factor in determining the size of the allocations to universities.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the University Grants Committee did not decide in advance that its adoption of a common funding basis for students in each subject group should be the most important factor influencing changes in the grant allocation to individual universities. That was an outcome of the committee's new resource allocation arrangements, not a predetermined intent.

General Certificate of Secondary Education

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied with the progress being made in introducing the syllabi for the GCSE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Secondary Examinations Council has approved 281 GCSE syllabuses, which virtually completes the programme for the approval of syllabuses. The examining groups have already circulated most of the approved versions and they will distribute the remainder as soon as possible.

The draft GCSE syllabuses, in schools since autumn 1985, and the GCSE national criteria, in schools for over a year, should have enabled teachers to make proper preparations for their new courses.

School Leavers (Arithmetical Achievements)

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any information on the proportion of British school leavers able to perform simple arithmetic sums and on the corresponding proportion of German school-leavers able to perform similar sums.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend is aware of a number of studies which bear on the relative mathematical attainment of pupils in England and West Germany. While there are considerable technical difficulties in making such comparisons, it appears that pupils of average and lower ability in England do less well in routine mathematical tasks than their West German counterparts. The Government are concerned to improve standards of achievement in mathematics for pupils of all abilities. To this end they are supporting a number of measures designed to improve the teaching of mathematics in schools and the appropriateness of that teaching to the needs of pupils and their future employers.

Goods and Services

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest estimate of the total value of purchases of goods and services made by public education institutions; and what proportions of the total was supplied by the private sector.

Mr. Dunn: The information is not available.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils from each local education authority area have received places on the assisted places scheme in each year since its inception.

Mr. Dunn: Information on the home address of assisted pupils is not collected centrally.

Free Speech

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on his proposals to seek to amend the Education Bill [Lords] with respect to free speech in institutes of higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The chairman of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals wrote to my right hon. Friend on 30 May about the Government's intention to introduce an amendment on free speech to the Education Bill. My right hon. Friend invited the CVCP and other bodies representing higher education institutions to a meeting on 5 June to discuss this. Consultations with these bodies on the possible form of the amendment to be introduced in this House are continuing at official level.

Higher Education

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from universities and university staff, and in particular those at Salford university, regarding Government policy on higher education and education cuts since 1981; what is his assessment of the ability of universities to recruit and retain staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend and his predecessor have received several hundred representations from universities and their staff, including those at Salford university. The Government have acknowledged that present salary levels for academic staff are not always attractive to staff in subjects such as engineering and science where skills are in strong demand elsewhere. Our willingness to consider making extra funds available will depend on the readiness of the universities and university lecturers to agree a new pay structure which provides greater flexibility and helps the recruitment and retention of staff of appropriate quality.

EC Students

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about payment of fees by students from other European Community countries.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: From 1 September 1986 students who are nationals of other European Community countries and are studying in the United Kingdom on courses designated for mandatory award purposes in England and Wales or which are covered by equivalent awards arrangements in Scotland will have their fees paid by the Government if they satisfy the same or equivalent conditions for eligibility for such assistance as are applied to United Kingdom students. The United Kingdom has an obligation as a member of the Community not to discriminate against nationals of other Community states in access to vocational training. The European Commission has recently taken this matter up with the Government, and we have concluded that it would be right to make this change in the light of its concern.

This will affect some 3,500 students from other EC countries studying here, roughly the same as the number of United Kingdom students studying in those countries. The latter are not generally charged tuition fees by their host countries.

The relevant educational interests are being consulted about the necessary administrative arrangements. Details will be sent to authorities and institutions as soon as the arrangements have been agreed.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General how many new jobs have been created in the Bolton area during the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: Information about jobs created and jobs lost is not available from the Departments statistics. Net changes in employment can be given but, for areas smaller than regions, only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken.

The latest available information is from June 1978 and the September 1981 census of employment. In that period the number of employees employed in the area covered by the Bolton jobcentre area fell by just over 8,000.

More up-to-date figures for local areas will become available following publication of the 1984 census of employment later this year. Between censuses, employment estimates are based on small scale sample enquiries which do not provide reliable results for areas smaller than regions.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many people were employed in 1979, 1983 and the latest date for which figures are available (a) in the north-west region, (b) in Burnley, (c) in Pendle and (d) in Hyndburn.

Mr. Lang: The table gives the available information for the north-west region and for the local authority districts of Burnley, Pendle and Hyndburn. For areas smaller than regions, figures can be provided only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken. The table therefore includes the available information from the 1978 and 1981 censuses of employment. More up-to-date figures for local areas will become available following publication of the 1984 census of employment later this year.

Labour Force Survey (Qualifications)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General what the preliminary results of the 1985 labour force survey reveal about the percentage of the work force with no recognised qualification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Preliminary labour force survey results for the spring of 1985 estimate that 35 per cent. of economically active persons of working age in Great Britain have no qualifications.

Working Week (Reduction)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Paymaster General what consideration has been given by his Department to the reductions in the working week as a method of dealing with unemployment.

Mr. Lang: Changes in the working week are best arranged between employers and employees. Imposed cuts in hours of work would increase unit labour costs unless there were compensating increases in productivity or decreases in workers' wages.

Restart Programme

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General (1) what liaison exists or is planned under the restart programme between jobcentres and the unemployment benefit service's fraud managers and investigators;

(2) how many claimants interviewed under the restart programme have been referred to benefit authorities as a result of their interviews;

(3) what role is undertaken by the unemployment review officers in the restart programme; and what instructions are given to staff in jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices to report non-attendance by interviewees or refusal of an offer under the restart programme.

Mr. Lang: Counselling interviews under the restart programme are intended to provide positive help and encouragement for long-term unemployed people in trying to re-enter the job market: they are not designed to detect benefit fraud and there are no arrangements for direct liaison between restart counsellors and fraud investigators. However, all jobcentre staff (including those on restart) are under standing instructions that, where they suspect a person may be claiming benefit fraudulently, they should report the matter to the nearest unemployment benefit office. The case will then, if appropriate, be forwarded by benefit office staff to a fraud officer.

Jobcentre staff are instructed that if a person does not attend an interview under the restart programme they are to issue another invitation offering an appointment at a date and time which is within two weeks of the first appointment. If the second appointment is not kept, the fact is reported to the benefit authorities, usually the local DHSS office, which will withdraw supplementary allowance (if in payment) and notify the claimant of the decision and their right of appeal. The DHSS will then notify the relevant unemployment benefit office, which will suspend any unemployment benefit which may be in payment and seek an explanation from the claimant of his or her non-attendance. On the basis of this, a decision will be made either to allow the claim or seek a formal decision from an independent adjudication officer.

If a specific job opportunity is refused at the interview, jobcentre staff follow the normal instructions which apply in jobcentres. These are that staff are expected to report to the unemployment benefit service cases that come to their notice where jobseekers act in a way apparently intended to avoid deliberately the chance of a suitable job or training. Where the claimant is in receipt of unemployment benefit and/or National Insurance credits, the benefit office will suspend payment and ask the claimant to give his or her reasons for refusing employment before the case is referred to an adjudication officer. Where supplementary allowance is in payment, the Department of Health and Social Security will consider continued payment of benefit in the light of the adjudication officer's decision.

Out of 26,374 people who had been interviewed under the restart programme by 20 June, a total of 908 people had been referred to benefit authorities as a result of their interview or as a result of their response to the invitation to an interview.

Unemployment review officers in DHSS are continuing to help people who have not yet come into the scope of restart, for example by advising them on benefit in and out of work, and helping them to find opportunities for work or training. They will also help people who are asked to see them as a result of the restart interview, if it seems that this would be useful in their individual circumstances.

Community Programme

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General what are the numbers of community programme entrants in the 12 months to October 1985, December 1985, February 1985 and April 1986.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of community programme entrants in the 12 months to October 1985, December 1985, February 1985 and April 1986 are as follows:

	Numbers
October 1985	196,551
December 1985	208,738
February 1985	159,031
April 1986	254,012

Special Employment Measures

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General what estimates there are of the expenditure on all special employment measures including YTS for each year since 1980, for each local authority area in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Lang: No estimates are available of expenditure on the measures by local authority area.

Pension Age (Equalisation)

Mr. Martin asked the Paymaster General what is the current practice of each nationalised industry as to the general retirement ages of (a) men and (b) women, respectively; and if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's plans, and the time scale, for equalisation.

Mr. Lang: The Government do not collect information about the practice of nationalised industries regarding retirement ages for employees: this is a matter for the individual industries. The Government have tabled amendments to the Sex Discrimination Bill currently before Parliament to give women the right to work to the same age as their male colleagues. We intend this to come into operation 12 months after the Bill receives Royal Assent.

Small Firms

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Paymaster General (1) how many small firms, by Bolton committee definition, went out of business in each region of the United Kingdom during the course of the last 12 months;

(2) how many small firms, by Bolton committee definition, presently exist in each region of the United Kingdom;

(3) how many small firms, by Bolton committee definition, were set up in each region of the United Kingdom during the course of the last 12 months to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report the full list of Government schemes which exist to assist small firms; when each scheme started; and when it is due to finish.

Mr. Trippier: Following are those national schemes currently in existence which were specifically introduced to be of direct benefit to small firms. There are many other measures which small firms can usefully take advantage of including some that are specific to particular areas of the United Kingdom.

Information and advice on any Government scheme is readily available through a wide range of advisory bodies including the Government's small firms service and the local enterprise agency network.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Under this scheme, introduced in 1981, over 16,630 guarantees have been issued in respect of over £540 million in bank loans. The scheme has proved to have a considerable job creation potential both in numbers and cost effectiveness. The life of the scheme was extended in the 1986 budget for three years and the premium rate halved to 2·5 per cent. to make it more popular. Appraisal and monitoring requirements have been introduced and better financial management encouraged to improve the survival rate of scheme borrowers.

Business Expansion Scheme

This scheme was introduced in April 1983 to enlarge and improve upon the business start up scheme (introduced in 1981). In this year's Budget, BES was extended indefinitely and the scheme's coverage was also changed to aim it better at genuine risk investment.

Training for Enterprise

The Manpower Services Commission first introduced this on-going scheme in 1977. It has subsequently been expanded considerably and the number of people expected to benefit in 1986-87 is over 46,000 compared with 32 in 1977.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

The Manpower Services Commission first introduced this scheme in 1982. It has since been expanded to provide 65,000 places in 1985-86 and 86,000 places in 1986-87. The 13 week qualifying period of unemployment has been reduced to eight weeks whilst greater emphasis is now being given to counselling and training for applicants.

Business and Technical Advisory Services

The Department of Trade and Industry launched this package of schemes in April 1985. This is an on-going programme aimed at providing subsidised consultancy to small and medium-sized firms.

Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology (SMART)

SMART was announced in April this year. This competitive scheme is being introduced on a one year trial basis in the areas of biotechnology and instrumentation and aims to encourage small firms and potential entrepreneurs to bring forward highly innovative ideas that cannot attract existing sources of funding.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General if he will list the components of the retail prices index; what criteria are used to determine which items should be included; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The retail prices index covers practically the whole range of goods and services which consumers buy. Separate indices for over a hundred components are published each month in Tables 6.2 and 6.4 of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is available in the Library. I understand that the structure of the index is one of the matters addressed in the report of the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee which was submitted today to my right hon. and noble Friend and which will be published shortly. The Government will make a statement when the report's recommendations have been fully considered.

Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee

Mr. Chapman asked the Paymaster General whether the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee has submitted its report.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Committee's report has been submitted to my right hon. and noble Friend today. It makes a number of recommendations for improving the way in which the retail prices index is constructed and presented. It will be published as soon as possible. The Government's decision on the recommendations will be announced in due course.

SCOTLAND

Universities of Glasgow and Strathclyde

45. Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he or the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State propose to visit the universities of Glasgow or Strathclyde.

Mr. Rifkind: Neither my hon. Friend nor I have plans to visit either university in the near future.

Industry (Employment)

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people were employed in the steel making industry in Scotland in 1979; and what is the latest comparable figure;

(2) how many people were employed in the shipbuilding and ship repair industry in Scotland in 1979; and what is the latest available figure;

(3) how many people were employed in the electrical appliance industry in Scotland in 1979; and what is the latest comparable figure;

(4) how many people were employed in the production of Scotch whisky in 1979; and what is the latest comparable figure;

(5) how many people were employed in the textile industry in Scotland in 1979; and what is the latest comparable figure.

Mr. Rifkind: The estimated employment in these industries is set out in the table:

	1980 Standard Industrial Classification Activity Headings	Estimated employment
		1979	1983
Iron and steel manufacturing	2210, 2220, 2234, 2235	22,700	11,200

Coal Mining Industry

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed in the coal mining industry in Scotland in 1979; and what is the latest available figure.

Mr. Rifkind: The National Coal Board estimates that its number of employees in March 1979 was 25,000 and in March 1986 was 10,000. Estimates for other employers in coal mining are not available for these dates.

In patients (Post-operative Infection)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the rate of in patient post-operative infection in (a) Scotland and (b) Northern Ireland in the latest year for which figures are available; and what information is available on comparable figures in other European countries.

Mr. John MacKay: None of the information sought is held centrally in Scotland.

Albyn House Association

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the end of Scottish Office funding for Albyn House Association as of September in the current year; and which organisations have submitted objections.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations commending the work of the Albyn House Association and urging the Government to extend the financial support which they undertook to provide for three years to September 1986. These have come from hon. Members, from private individuals and from the following organisations:

Banff and Buchan District Council
Cunninghame District Council
Gordon District Council
Stirling District Council
Aberdeen Crime Prevention Panel
Aberdeen Youth Information Centre Action on Alcohol Abuse

Job Vacancies

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many job vacancies were notified in May 1979; and what is the latest comparable figure.

Mr. Rifkind: Information on job vacancies is available in the House of Commons Library. Figures are not comparable between the two years because of changes in the basis of statistical compilation. The number of vacancies notified to jobcentres is estimated to be only one-third of existing vacancies overall.

Labour Statistics

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were unemployed in Scotland in 1979; and how this figure compares with the latest figures on a comparable basis.

Mr. Rifkind: A consistent set of unemployment figures since 1979 is available only from the seasonally adjusted series. On this basis, in May 1986 there were 339,600 unemployed people in Scotland compared to 150,400 in May 1979.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people aged 16 to 18 years were registered as unemployed at May 1979; and what is the latest comparable figure.

Mr. Rifkind: Information on unemployment by age category is available in the House of Commons Library on a quarterly basis. A comparison between the latest and the May 1979 figures is not, however, possible because of changes in the intervening years in the way the statistics have been compiled.

Job Creation

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make an estimate of jobs created in Scotland as a direct or indirect result of work done in the North sea oil and gasfields.

Mr. Rifkind: It is estimated that at end-1985 between 89,000 and 104,000 jobs in Scotland were due directly or indirectly to North sea oil and gas activity.

Small Firms

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many small firms were given financial assistance by the Highlands and Islands Development Board in the course of the last 12 months to the latest convenient date; and how much money was involved.

Mr. Rifkind: The bulk of the board's economic assistance is given to firms with 100 employees or fewer. Information on the number of such firms assisted is not available, but in the financial year 1985-86 a total of 1,597 applications for assistance were approved. Some of these approvals would not result in assistance being paid in 1985-86 and others would be withdrawn for various reasons. A total of £18 million was paid in 1985-86 by way of grants, loans and purchase of equity.

Expenditure Statistics

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the last year for which figures are available the sums spent on (a) roads and road improvement, (b) sewerage, (c) new houses, housing repairs, (d) house modernisation, (e) educational building and (f) new work on harbours and repairs, in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The estimated figures for 1985-86 for public expenditure within the Scotland programme are as follow:

	£ million*
Road and road improvements	429
Sewerage	103
New houses	131
House improvements†	421
Educational Building	64
New work on harbours and repairs	7

* The figures represent estimated outturn of capital and, where appropriate, current expenditure from the Scotland programme by central government, local authorities and other public bodies. The figures do not include expenditure within Scotland on these services in other departments' programmes.

† Figures are not available for expenditure on housing repairs and modernisation separately. The figure in the table for "house improvements" comprises gross capital expenditure on all types of improvement work.

Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made with the preparation of the code of practice to be issued under the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984; if he plans any change in the present position relating to guardianship; and what arrangements will be made for interested bodies to comment on a draft of the code.

Mr. John MacKay: Consideration is being given to the preparation of a Code of Practice for the guidance of medical practitioners and others on the detention and discharge of patients under the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984, and the medical treatment of such patients. the Scottish Division of the Royal College of Psychiatrists recently expressed the view that the Scottish code should be acceptable to all those working in the psychiatric field, and it is our intention to consult interested bodies on the provisions of the code, as indeed the 1984 Act requires. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to make any changes in the provisions of the 1984 Act relating to guardianship.

Education (Planning)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the future of planning schools in Scotland and of planning education in Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: By the end of June representations about proposals from a working party which has reviewed planing education throughout the United Kingdom had been received from 20 right hon. and hon. Members, 23 organisations and over 60 individuals. My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the views which have been expressed, and decisions will be taken in due course.

Employment Structure (Stirling)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 91, concerning the structure of employment in Stirling, if he will publish in the Official Report the data used as surrogates for employment structure and the conclusions of the qualitative analysis.

Mr. John MacKay: Detailed information is not available in a form suitable for publication. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State will be writing shortly to my hon. Friend about the comparative assessment which was carried out. I shall arrange for a copy of the reply to be placed in the Library of the House.

Edinburgh District Council (Rate Reduction)

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take in relation to the proposal by Edinburgh district council to reduce its rate by 2p.

Mr. Rifkind: I have today written to Edinburgh district council agreeing to their proposal to reduce their rate for 1986-87 by 2p to 14·7p and make corresponding reductions in their budget. I am glad that Edinburgh district council has revised their expenditure plans which were in my view excessive and unreasonable and I am sure that ratepayers will be grateful for the reduction in their rate bills.

TRANSPORT

Humber Bridge (Debt)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the proposed discussions with the Humber bridge authorities concerning the level of debt on the bridge have taken place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A helpful and constructive meeting at official level was held on 30 June. Further discussions on the financial position of the Humber bridge are planned for next month.

Motor Vehicles (Records)

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to provide for records to be kept of all motor vehicles destroyed for scrap.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is already a statutory requirement to notify the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre when a vehicle is scrapped. The vehicle's record is then adjusted accordingly.

M63 (Road Works)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the alternative routes provided to avoid the M63 widening road works; and what arrangements have been made for the control of traffic on that section of the M63.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of alternative routes for both local and long distance traffic are signposted and given extensive publicity by the media. An explanatory leaflet is available to motorists. The police operate a closed circuit television surveillance system and electronic variable message signs to monitor and control traffic on the approach roads to the works.

Motorway Services

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport what minimum 24 hours a day facilities motorway service stations are expected to provide on each carriageway direction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All motorway service areas are required to provide at least the following basic facilities 24 hours a day:

(1) cold food, together with hot and cold drinks;
(2) petrol, diesel, oil and air supplies;
(3) free parking for up to two hours;
(4) free toilets and wash basins;
(5) coin-operated telephones.

Double-sided sites with a bridge or subway between the two halves may reduce the provision of services during the night when demand is low. In such cases, refreshments, toilets and telephones may be provided on only one side of the motorway.

Three motorway service areas in north Lancashire and Cumbria on the M6 are designed to serve traffic on one side only of the motorway.

Gatwick-Heathrow Helicopter Link

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many individuals raised objections to the Gatwick-Heathrow helicopter airlink; and how many people live in the flight path of this route.

Mr. Moore: The Civil Aviation Authority received 2,225 objections to British Caledonian's application for a licence to continue the helicopter service, of which 949 were within the statutory period allowed for objections. My Department also received over 8,000 representations against the service, including about 7,000 names in the form of a petition.

The local authorities estimated about 35,000 people were affected by the route which the helicopter operated and that some 112,500 people would be affected by the new routes on which British Caledonian proposed to fly.

About 40,000 people living in the former GLC area should be added to these estimates. Although the CAA had some reservations about the methodology of the estimates, the authority considered they gave an indication of the numbers who might be affected by the helicopter service.

Government Freight Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish the name of the Government freight agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The position of Government freight agent is held by the company Hogg Robinson (GFA) Ltd.

Goods and Services

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest estimate of the total value of purchases of goods and services made by public transport utilities; and what proportion of the total was supplied by the private sector.

Mr. Moore: This information is not held by my Department, and could not readily be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Merchant Navy

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the size of the British registered merchant navy in 1979, measured by numbers of ships and by deadweight tonnage; and what are the equivalent figures for 1986.

Mr. Moore: At end April 1986, the latest period for which figures are available, the United Kingdom registered merchant fleet of vessels of 500 gross tons and over consisted of 656 ships with a total of 16·5 million deadweight tons. This compares with 1,382 ships of 43·8 million deadweight tons at end April 1979. These figures exclude Government-owned vessels, offshore supply vessels, tugs, fishing vessels and other non-trading vessels.

LRT (Rail Journeys)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 9, what proportion of the 37 per cent. increase in rail passenger journeys on London Regional Transport since 1981 is estimated to have been taken by holders of travelcards, holders of season tickets and cash tickets, respectively.

Mr. David Mitchell: Information of this kind is a matter for London Regional Transport. I suggest the hon. Member writes to the chairman.

EC (Vehicle Roadworthiness)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in the proposal by the EEC Commission to require a uniform roadworthiness test for private cars; and what would be the consequences of such a directive for British car owners.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The EEC Commission's proposal to amend directive 77/143, which was forwarded to the Council of the European Communities on 2 May 1986, has yet to be discussed by member states.

The effect of the proposal, as presently framed, would be an increase in the scope and, consequently, the cost of the current MOT test.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the organisations and individuals who have made representations to him in support of a third Thames crossing at Dartford and the removal of tolls, as an alternative to the construction of the proposed east London river crossing.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986]: Our records show that we have received 357 in respect of the east London river crossing making representations that a third crossing at Dartford, or the removal of tolls, or both, would be an alternative. In view of the length of the list, I am arranging for it to be sent to the hon. Member.

British Nuclear Fuels plc (Plutonium)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether British Nuclear Fuels plc has decided to discontinue flights from Liverpool; which further airport will be used for the transport of plutonium to Dounreay; and if he will introduce legislation to provide that such use of an airport be subject to the approval of the local authority.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am not aware of any such decision. The choice of airports for any future consignments would reflect convenience and suitability. I see no need for the legislative provision suggested.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Community Care

15. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in developing arrangements for the transfer of funds from health authorities to local authorities for community care initiatives in line with the recommendations of the Social Services Committee report on community care.

Mr. Hayhoe: The flexible financial arrangements already in place under the care in the community initiative enable health authorities to transfer funds to local authorities and voluntary organisations for as long as necessary to enable long-stay hospital patients to move into community care. Most regional health authorities have established funding mechanisms including bridging finance to promote the development of community care. I am keeping these arrangements under review, in consultation with regional health authorities.

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for monitoring the effectiveness of the care in the community policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Government are committed to helping vulnerable people to live as independently as possible. The care in the community initiative is a means to this end. Implementation is the responsibility of the health and local authorities working together. Progress in developing care in the community is considered at annual accountability reviews of regional and district health authorities.

Pensioners (Residential Homes)

16. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on his Department's consultative paper on his payment of pensions to pensioners at local authority residential homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend has recieved representations from seven organisations, including the Social Security Advisory Committee, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the Association of County Councils, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Associations of Directors of Social Work and of Services, and the Social Care Association. Their comments are being considered.

Board and Lodging

17. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish new limits for payments for board and lodging.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my statement on 18 June at column 1056.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) which of his Department's local offices attending seminars on board and lodging in the autumn of 1985 had no commercial establishments in their area known to be within the board and lodging limits;

(2) which of his Department's local offices attending seminars in the autumn of 1985 on board and lodging reported that they were not aware of any landlords in their area who had reduced their charges.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services from which 26 local offices the social security policy inspectorate drew its sample of ordinary board and lodging when examining the effects of the board and lodging regulations.

Mr. Newton: The following local offices were visited by the social security policy inspectorate during the course of the ordinary board inquiry:

Aberdeen (North), Aberdeen (South), Anglesey, Barrow-in-Furness, Birmingham (Ravenhurst), Birmingham (Sparkhill), Bristol (West), Buxton, Cheltenham, Chesterfield, Coventry (East), Crystal Palace, Dumfries, Gravesend, High Wycombe, Hull (East), Irvine, Leeds (North), Leeds (South), Manchester (Failsworth), Manchester (Openshaw), Nuneaton, Port Talbot, Romford, Shrewsbury, Weymouth.

20. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will seek to introduce a voucher system for the direct payment of supplementary benefit for board and lodging accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Vouchers or other means of direct payment to landlords are already used in certain cases where the claimant has proved himself unable to manage his own money or, at the start of a claim, where it is necessary to secure the accommodation. We have no present plans to extend these provisions.

Battery-powered Wheelchairs

18. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further representations he has received concerning provision of battery-powered wheelchairs in the aftermath of the McColl report.

Mr. Newton: A number of organisations have written in support of the working party's recommendations for wider provision of powered wheelchairs. There has been very little support for the working party's suggestion that such an improvement might be financed by abating increases in mobility allowance.

Maternity Units (Rural Areas)

19. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further guidance he intends to give to district health authorities about the role of maternity units in small hospitals in rural areas.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to issue further advice on the organisation of maternity services.

Social Security Bill

21. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the effect of the Social Security Bill on disabled people.

Mr. Newton: We have received a considerable number of such representations, to which we are giving continued consideration, having regard also to proceedings on the Bill in another place, where my noble Friend Lady Trumpington stated the Government's intention to take further steps to protect severely disabled people receiving extensive help from the present domestic assistance addition and to undertake further discussion with bodies representing disabled people on new arrangements for helping with similar needs after 1988.

35. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what review machinery he intends to establish to monitor the workings of the provisions of the Social Services Bill after enactment.

Mr. Newton: We will decide on the best arrangements to ensure effective monitoring of the workings of the proposed new arrangements when our detailed plans for their implementation are further advanced.

Poverty

22. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the definition of poverty used by the international organisations concerned with social questions of which the United Kingdom is a member.

Mr. Whitney: For the purposes of their action to combat poverty the Council of the European Community defined "the poor" as persons, families and groups of persons whose resources (material, cultural and social) are so limited as to exclude them from the minimum acceptable way of life in the member states in which they live.

London Ambulance Service

23. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the London Ambulance Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: As the hon. Member will know, over the past few months I have received a number of representations from right hon. and hon. Members, and members of the public about the London ambulance service's non-emergency service. Since then, as my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health told the hon. Member for Vauxhall on 23 May at column 385 the situation continues to improve following the recent recruitment drive.

Non-United Kingdom European Community Citizens

24. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many non-United Kingdom European Community citizens have drawn social security benefits during a visit lasting less than six months in the period April to October 1985.

Mr. Major: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to claims for supplementary benefit, of which there were approximately 1,000 in the first seven months of 1985. More recent figures are not yet available and records are not kept of the period a claimant to benefit has spent in this country prior to making his claim.

Disabled People (Appliances and Equipment)

25. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received regarding the McColl report on appliances and equipment for the disabled.

Mr. Newton: I invited interested bodies to comment on the recommendations in the McColl report by 30 April, and to date there have been about 50 responses.

Benefit Claimants (Availability for Work)

26. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the operation of section 5(1) (a) and (b) of the Supplementary Benefits Act 1976 concerning availability of benefit claimants for work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The term "available for employment" contained in section 5 of the Supplementary Benefits Act 1976 has the same meaning as for unemployment benefit purposes. It is the responsibility of Department of Employment to test the availability of unemployed claimants for both benefits when new claims are made. In addition, those drawing benefits sign a declaration regularly that they remain available for work. The present availability test has been the subject of criticism by the Public Accounts Committee and other evidence which casts doubt on its adequacy comes from the labour force survey. As a result, the Department of Employment in conjunction with the DHSS has reviewed the arrangements and a pilot exercise of a strengthened availability test started on 16 June in 12 unemployment benefit offices.

Cancer Treatment Services

27. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will initiate a study into cancer treatment services in the light of the consideration being given by the North-East Thames regional health authority to the centralisation of such services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: An expert working group of the standing sub-committee on cancer of my Department's Standing Medical Advisory Committee has already considered the organisation of acute hospital services for the diagnosis and treatment of cancer. The main aim of the report was to offer practical guidance on the effective use of resources to achieve maximum benefit for cancer patients. It was distributed to all health authorities in October 1984 under cover of health notice HN(84)23, which asked them to bring the report to the attention of all staff concerned with the care of cancer patients and to consider its implications in the future planning and organisation of services for cancer. A copy is in the Library. Another expert working group of the standing sub-committee on cancer is preparing a report on primary care services for cancer patients.

Nurses (Pay and Conditions)

28. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will next be meeting representatives of the Royal College of Nursing to discuss the pay and conditions of nurses.

Mr. Hayhoe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I met the General Secretary of the Royal College of Nursing on 25 June 1986. No further meetings with the Royal College are planned at the moment, although my right hon. Friend and I are always ready to meet its representatives.

Chiropody Services

29. Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the current level of chiropody services.

Mr. Hayhoe: While there are now about 20 per cent. more whole time equivalent chiropodists in the National Health Service than in 1979 and they are treating more patients and providing more treatments than ever before further progress is desirable and is being made.

Housing Benefit

30. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate (a) the number of recipients of housing benefit who will receive less benefit than would otherwise have been their entitlement as a result of the Government's decision to change the basis for uprating the needs allowance in July and (b) the saving which Her Majesty's Government will make in a full year as a result.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 12 May at column 381. I have also written to him about the detailed points he raised in the debate on the uprating orders on 11 June, at columns 361-65.

Unborn Children (Tests)

31. Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the disclosure, other than to doctors, of information relating to the sex of an unborn child obtained as a result of clinical tests on pregnant women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have no plans to do so.

Teaching Hospitals

32. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the effects on teaching hospitals of the present resources allocation formula.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have received a number of recent representations on the national resources allocation formula, some of which make reference to the position of teaching hospitals. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I are shortly to meet a group of London hospital consultants to discuss their concerns on this matter. The current review of the RAWP formula is considering whether improvements can be made in the way in which the extra service costs associated with medical teaching are taken into account.

Wrightington Hospital, Lancashire (Children's Ward)

33. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be able to announce his decision on the proposed closure of the children's ward at Wrightington hospital, Lancashire.

Mr. Whitney: We are considering the regional health authority's proposals, in the light of the representations made by the recent deputation led by my hon. Friend.

Private Homes and Hospitals (Inspections)

36. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to collect information as to the number of inspectors of private homes and hostels for former patients of hospitals for the mentally ill and handicapped now living in the community.

Mr. Whitney: As the staff of registration authorities engaged on inspections duties are not necessarily confined to one kind of accommodation, it would not be practicable to collect information along the lines suggested.

Single Payments

37. Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current average length of time for a decision on an application for a single payment.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not available. However, claims for single payments are determined as soon as possible after all the information required has been collected, urgent claims being given priority.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many Department of Health and Social Security single payments were made in Lincolnshire in 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Major: Six local offices serve Lincolnshire but their boundaries are not conterminous with that of the county. The single payments they made during years ended early in April are shown in the following table:

Office	1984-85	1985-86*
Boston	2,641	3,944
Grantham	2,753	4,536
Lincoln (Newland)	4,902	6,931
Lincoln (Orchard Street)	8,944	13,254
Skegness	1,155	1,619
Grimsby	11,375	14,871
Totals	31,770	45,155

*Provisional figures.

Mr. Victor Paige (Successor)

38. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to name a successor to Mr. Victor Paige.

Mr. Fowler: An appointment will be made as soon as practicable. The work of the National Health Service Management Board is continuing under its acting chairman, Mr. Len Peach.

Students (Benefits)

39. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish his proposals for students' benefit entitlement.

Mr. Newton: The relevant regulations, together with the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee and the Government's response to that report, were laid before the House on 18 June.

Child Abuse

41. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he has received to the guidelines on the professional conduct of child abuse cases recently published by his Department.

Mr. Whitney: We are pleased to report that initial responses by organisations active in the child care field to the draft circular and guide to arrangements for inter-agency co-operation for the protection of children issued on 6 May have been favourable. Consultation ends on 30 September and the Department is already receiving written comments. We hope as many organisations as possible will respond.

Abortions

42. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions have been carried out under the National Health Service and privately in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: The numbers of notifications of legal abortions carried out in National Health Service (NHS) premises and non-NHS premises under the Abortion Act 1967 in the United Kingdom for 1981-85 are shown in the table. The Abortion Act does not apply in Northern Ireland.

Numbers of notifications of legal abortions by type of premises, residents and non-residents, United Kingdom, 1981-85

Type of premises	1981	1982	1983	1984	*1985

Non-National Health Service†	101,400	100,751	99,546	105,285	106,830

* Provisional figures.
† These figures include operations carried out in the private sector on NHS patients.

Family Credit

34. Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be able to report on the consultation on family credit.

40. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is yet in a position to announce the result of his review of the method of payment of family credit.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) and the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) earlier today.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the housing benefit returns for each of the past three years for the London boroughs of Brent, Barnet and Camden.

Mr. Major: On the basis of information provided by the London boroughs of Brent, Barnet and Camden in connection with their subsidy claims, it is estimated that the average number of recipients of rent rebate, rent allowance and rate rebates is:—

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Brent
Rent rebates	13,500	13,500	10,200
Rent allowances	8,000	8,100	9,700
Rate rebates	39,800	39,900	33,500

Rate rebates	30,700	30,400	29,200
Camden
Rent rebates	17,800	17,800	17,800
Rent allowances	9,100	9,800	9,600
Rate rebates	29,500	30,400	30,000

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were in receipt of supplementary benefit in (a) the north-west region and (b) Burnley in 1979 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Major: North-western region was formed in 1983 by the amalgamation of the former north-west (Manchester) and north-west (Merseyside) regions with parts of the former northern region. The table shows the number of people receiving supplementary benefit in (a) Burnley and (b) those offices which now form north-western region.

Figures given show the position at 6 May 1986, the latest available, and at comparable dates for each of the years since 1979.

	Burnley	Region
1979	10,239	454,955
1980	10,156	458,474
1981	11,984	534,489
1982	14,345	628,573
1983	15,351	672,937
1984	16,167	713,229
1985	17,062	745,329
1986	16,579	762,492

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has about how long supplementary benefit boarders who are re-classified as non-householders are able to remain in the same accommodation whilst being paid as non-householders; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many supplementary benefit claimants identified in the London south regional surveys as having ceased to claim supplementary benefit after having their benefit reassessed so that they were no longer classified as boarders had again claimed supplementary benefit within (a) one week of having been so reassessed, (b) three weeks of having been reassessed, (c) five weeks of having been reassessed and (d) eight weeks of having been so re-assessed;

(3) how many supplementary benefit boarders who were identified in (a) the survey conducted by his Department's London south region and (b) the survey conducted by his Department's Scotland region as having remained in the same accommodation after having been reassessed as a non-householder were still claiming as non-householders in that accommodation (a) one week after they began to be paid at the non-householder rate, (b) three weeks after they began to be paid at this rate and (c) six weeks after they began to be paid at this rate.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information obtained from the London south and Scottish survey cannot be broken down in the way the hon. Member has requested. Both surveys looked at cases after the expiry of their time limits on payment as a boarder. The London south survey was conducted some eight to fourteen weeks after the April 1985 changes and the Scottish survey 15 to 19 weeks after. Parallel surveys held in three social security regions —Midlands, the South West, and London south—in the spring this year reached similar conclusions.

Child Benefit

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the total number of families receiving child benefit at the present time and in 1979, respectively.

Mr. Major On 4 June 1986, 6·85 million families were receiving child benefit. The comparable figure for 31 May 1979 was 7·23 million.

Claimant Statistics

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details, on the same basis as his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 287, of the breakdown of social security claimants for 1979 and 1985, or at the latest date available, into the categories (a) pensioners aged 80 years and over, (b) pensioners aged 60 to 79 years, (c) sick and disabled, (d) one-parent families, (e) low-paid families, (f) unemployed families, (g) single people, (h) childless couples and (i) widows and others; and if he will show the total number of recipients in 1979 and 1985.

Mr. Major The following table gives national details of people in receipt of supplementary benefit in December 1979 and 1984 (the latest figures available) in the categories requested:—

(Thousands)

	1979*	1984*
Pensioners aged 80 years and over	384	476
Pensioners aged 60 to 79 years	1,339	1,200
Sick and Disabled	207	278
One parent families	322	518
Unemployed families	146	491
Single people	2,294	3,523
Childless couples	401	563
Widows	19	19
Others	32	189
Total Recipients	2,855	4,609

The number of low paid families in receipt of Family Income Supplement in December 1979 was 81,000 and in December 1984 203,000+.
*Annual Statistical Enquiry. The figures for 1984 are still provisional + 10 per cent. annual sample.

In-patients (Post-operative Infection)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of those in-patients who suffered from post-operative infection in each regional health authority area in 1983 died as a result of the infection.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. It is not available from the sample information held centrally.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what compensation was paid by each regional health authority area in those in-patients who had post-operative infection in 1983;

(2) how many in-patients in maternity units suffered from post-operative infection in each regional health authority area in 1983 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not recorded centrally.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the major cause of post-operative infection;

(2) what steps he is taking to reduce the incidence of in-patient post-operative infection;

(3) if he will make a statement on the problem of in-patient post-operative infection.

Mr. Whitney: Information on hospital acquired infection (HAI) is contained in the public health laboratory service prevalance study (1981). A copy is in the Library. This indicates that the issue is a complex one. It is not possible to isolate major causes, nor is all HAI preventable. It is, however, for health authorities to ensure that adequate systems are in place for the monitoring and control of infection in hospitals, from whatever source that infection arises. We hope to issue fresh guidance on these issues later in the year.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why the south-western region had more cases of in-patient post-operative infection in 1983 than other regions.

Mr. Whitney: The Department is investigating the apparent higher incidence in the region and I will let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services which hospital in each regional health authority area has the largest number of in-patient post-operative infections in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. It is not available from the sample information held centrally.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services what information is collected centrally on waiting lists for medical operations.

Mr. Whitney: Information on in-patient waiting lists is collected by the Department twice a year, on 31 March and 30 September, by specialty and district health authority and annually on 31 December by specialty and hospital. A bound volume of the district waiting list returns is placed in the Library with copies of the national and regional summaries.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services if he will list the number of patients who have had to wait over three months for each kind of surgery for each year from 1979.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. The information is not available centrally in the form requested except at disproportionate cost but estimated mean and median waiting times for all medical procedures are given in "Hospital In-Patient Enquiry" volumes, of which there are copies in the Library.

Single Payments

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services what was the number of single payments and their value, by Department of Health and Social Security region, for 1981 and in each subsequent year to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Major: The information requested is as follows:

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements he proposes to make to ensure that members of the public who telephone his Department's office at 4-10 Regency street, London SW1, will in future receive a prompt and efficient response.

Mr. Major: Complaints have been made recently about the telephone service at the Regency street office. Management have investigated and found faults on the switchboard. British Telecom has undertaken the necessary repairs and a normal, satisfactory service has now been restored.

Joint Planning (Report)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the report of the joint working group on joint planning on the second report from the Social Services Committee 1984-85 session.

Mr. Hayhoe: The report of the joint working group on joint planning was published on 28 November 1985 under the title "Progress in Partnership". The production of that report completed the task of the working group. It had the benefit of the Social Services Committee's report on community care in carrying out its work but it was not part of its task to comment on that report.

NHS (Land Sales)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what land forming part of a mental-illness hospital has been sold to date; and if the proceeds of such sales have been dedicated to the benefit of mentally-ill people.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that separate information in respect of sales of land forming part of mental illness hospitals is not collected centrally. However, I can say that we expect resources received from the disposal of redundant mental hospitals to be used to develop better community based services for mentally ill and mentally handicapped persons of the districts previously served.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what actions have (a) regional health authorities and (b) the English National Board taken to meet the education and training requirements of community psychiatric nurses.

Mr. Hayhoe: There are a number of recent developments in community psychiatric nurse training. First, the English National Board's new (1982) syllabus for basic registered mental nurse training is being increasingly adopted and will be compulsory by 1987. This syllabus places considerably greater emphasis on community care than the old syllabus and should equip those RMNs who work in the community without additional post-basic training (as some do) to deliver care more effectively. Second, the English National Board has devised a post-basic curriculum, available to all health authorities, for community psychiatric nurses. To date, 10 institutions offer this nine-month course and 945 community psychiatric nurses have gained their qualifications since the courses were first set up in 1979. Third, the board has allocated £150,000 in the current financial year to develop the educational provision for community psychiatric and mental handicap nursing.

The role of regional (and district) health authorities is to determine, through the planning process, their future requirements for RMNs and CPNs and make appropriate training provision. Regional strategic plans suggest a considerable expansion of CPN training to meet planning targets for the mid 1990s.

Pharmaceutical Committee, Avon

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what basis the Avon local pharmaceutical committee, at a meeting on 21 March, appointed members to the proposed new committee to deal with dispensing contracts before the authority to do so conferred by the National Health Service (Amendment) Bill had been agreed to by Parliament; if he will issue guidance to local pharmaceutical committees to the effect that they should not take any action in anticipation of Parliament's approval of the new legislative framework for pharmacists' contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am advised that on 21 March the Avon local pharmaceutical committee, in anticipation of the introduction of new arrangements for allocating National Health Service pharmacy contracts, agreed nominations by the pharmacy practices sub-committee, which will be established under the proposed new arrangements, and submitted them to the Family Practitioner Committee Administrator, who has noted them.

A pharmacy practices sub-committee has not been established in Avon and no appointments have been decided. Commencement of the new arrangements will depend on the successful passage through Parliament of the National Health Service (Amendment) Bill. Family practitioner committees are fully aware of the current arrangements and there is no need to issue guidance at this stage.

Conductive Education

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services if he will estimate how many disabled persons are known to his Department to have undertaken courses in conductive education.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information is not available centrally to enable us to make any reliable estimate of the number of disabled persons who have undertaken such courses.

Intermediate Treatment Projects

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services what is the amount of public funds allocated to intermediate treatment projects at the latest date for which information is available; and how this compares with the relevant figure five years previously.

Mr. Whitney: The actual (or estimated) public expenditure in respect of intermediate treatment (IT) in England in the financial years 1980-81 and 1985-86 is as follows:

	1980-81 (£000)	1985-86 (£000)
*Gross Expenditure by Local Authorities	6,170	†17,535

Invalidity Care Allowance

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services if he will state how many additional women in Wales it is estimated will now be eligible to receive invalidity care allowance following the recently announced change in Government policy on this matter.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 15 May at column 531.

Friendly Societies (Personal Pensions)

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether it is his intention to seek to restrict friendly societies from writing personal pension business.

Mr. Major: In principle, we see no reason to prevent registered friendly societies from providing personal pensions contracted-out from the state earnings-related pension scheme, provided that the schemes they offer meet the investor protection standards which will apply to all such schemes.

Prescriptions

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prescriptions have been dispensed each year since 1981; what proportion of them were paid for; what proportion of them were dispensed free of charge; and at what cost.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is as follows:

Prescriptions dispensed by chemists and appliance contractors in England:

	Number of prescriptions (million)	Of which dispensed free of charge (per cent.)	Total Net Ingredient Cost (£ million)*	Net Ingredient Cost of items dispensed free of charge (£ million†)	Total cost (£ million‖)

† The percentages are estimates derived from a 1 in 20 sample of prescriptions.
‡ Based on January to November 1985 data.
‖ "Total Cost" is the total cost of all prescriptions dispensed after deducting discount and adding on cost allowance, fees, container allowance and oxygen to the "net ingredient cost".

Community Care

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made to develop arrangements for the transfer from health authorities to local authorities of community care initiatives in line with the recommendations of the Social Services Committee report on community care.

Mr. Whitney: Progress in developing community care is being made in many areas through joint initiatives between health and local authorities. Bridging finance made available through regional funding mechanisms is supporting their efforts and 28 pilot projects are being funded centrally under the care in the community initiative, each for three financial years. The development of jointly planned initiatives continues to be encouraged in many ways. Arrangements for monitoring the achievement of all service priorities are an integral part of the National Health Service planning and accountability process. Whenever it proves necessary this issue would be raised at annual accountability reviews of particular regional and district health authorities.

Health (Resources)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the increase in resources devoted to health and the personal social services for each year since 1979, measured in real terms; and how much of that increase has been on improved pay and working conditions for the staffs concerned.

Mr. Whitney: The table gives the information requested for revenue spending on the hospital and community health services (HCHS) and local authority personal social services (LAPSS).

Erith Hospital

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received on the future of Erith hospital.

Mr. Whitney: In May 1986 a petition of 5,000 signatures was presented to Ministers against the decision of the Bexley health authority to postpone the geriatric development plan for Erith hospital.

Skoal Bandits

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his negotiations with U.S. Tobacco Inc. concerning the display of a health warning on its product Skoal Bandits and on advertising for that product; and when he expects to bring an agreement on this subject into effect.

Mr. Whitney: Negotiations are proceeding. I should expect a new agreement to come into immediate effect.

Dr. Issac Brave (Nursing Homes)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many former patients of Rainhill hospital, St. Helens, have been transferred to nursing homes owned or formerly owned by Dr. Issac Brave in 1986 to date, 1985, 1984 and 1983.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 27 June 1986, c. 356.]: I regret that this information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of St. Helens and Knowsley health authority who may be able to provide the information requested.

Hospital and Community Health Service (Expenditure)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 24 June, Official Report, column 153, to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Pavitt) if he will give a table setting out, for each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87 and cumulatively to 1985-86 and to 1986-87, expenditure on hospital and community health service giving (a) gross spending in cash terms, (b) the percentage increase for each year on the previous year as measured by the gross domestic product deflator, (c) the percentage increase on the previous year of National Health Service pay and prices in excess of inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator, (d) the percentage increase on the previous year of demographic pressures over and above inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator and (e) the additional expenditure on the previous year the Department of Health and Social Security estimated is required, over and above inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator, as a contribution to the costs of the process of medical innovation in health care and its costs 1983.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986]: The figures for year on year changes requested at (b), (c) and (d) were given in my reply to the hon. Member on 11 June at columns 219-22. The following tables set out the additional information now sought. The figures for demographic pressure and medical progress represent the extent to which services need to grow to meet them. Service growth is produced by a combination of higher cash spending and improved efficiency. Health authorities cash savings have cumulated to nearly £500 million a year (5 per cent.) by the end of the period. In addition, more patients are being treated within existing resources.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Cable and Wireless

Mr. Chapman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Government's special share in Cable and Wireless.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Cable and Wireless plc will be proposing to shareholders, at the company's forthcoming annual general meeting, an amendment to the articles of association which requires the consent of the Government as holder of the special share in the company. The proposed amendment is to enable appropriate Stock Exchange nominee organisations in other countries (which perform a similar function to SEPON Ltd. in the UK) to be exempted from the requirement in the articles that no person, alone or with his associates, shall be entitled to hold more than 15 per cent. of the shares of the company.

The proposed amendment would not alter the requirement in the articles that no person, alone or with associates, can exercise (or control the exercise of) more than 15 per cent. of the votes at general meetings of the company. The Government have agreed to the proposed amendment to the articles.

Pound Sterling

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table taking 1964 as a base year showing the spending power of the pound sterling in the United Kingdom from 1964 and in each subsequent year to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Figures for the purchasing power of the pound sterling for all years from 1948 to 1984 are published on page 114 of the 1986 edition of Economic Trends annual supplement. A figure for 1985 is given on page 42 of the May 1986 edition of Economic Trends. Both these publications are available in the House of Commons Library. The published figures are based on 1980 as equal to 100. Figures based on 1964 as equal to 100 can be obtained by dividing the published figures by 4·73.

Expenditure Statistics

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the last year for which figures are available the sums spent on (a) roads and road improvement, (b) sewerage, (c) new housing, housing repairs and house modernisation, (d) hospital and health service building works, (e) education building and (f) new work on harbours and repairs, within the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: The information is as follows:

Estimated figures for public expenditure in the United Kingdom for 1985-86*

	£ million
(a) Roads and road improvement	3,074
(b) Sewerage†	548
(c) New housing, housing repairs and house modernisation‡	3,991
(d) Hospital and health service building work	878
(e) Education building	615
(f) New works on harbours and repairs	20

* The figures represent estimated outturn of capital, and where appropriate current, expenditure by central government, local authorities and other public bodies.
† Expenditure on sewerage in England and Wales is not direct public expenditure. Work is carried out by the Water Authorities and it is only their external finance that is included in public expenditure.
‡ Current expenditure on local authority housing is not included. In addition to the above figures local authorities are currently spending over £1 billion a year from the housing revenue account on repairs and maintenance.

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to impose tobacco duty on smokeless tobacco products, including the product known as Skoal Bandits.

Mr. Brooke: I have no plans to do so, but the taxation of these products is being kept under close review.

Personal Taxation

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 13 June, Official Report, column 332, when the hon. Member for Kensington can expect to receive replies to the two questions tabled for answer that day.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret the delay in answering these questions; they are being answered today.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the changes in the yield of income tax, higher rate tax and employee's contributions to national insurance in 1986-87 if the combined rates were consolidated at 40 per cent. of taxable incomes with the tax allowances remaining as at present.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1986, c. 332]: The yields from employees in 1986-87 would be as follows:

	£ billion Existing regime
basic rate income tax	30·5
higher rate income tax	1·5
employees' NIC	11·6
total	43·6
Combined 40 per cent. rate for income tax and NIC	42·0
Decrease in yield	1·6

The effects of applying a 40 per cent. combined rate to other taxpayers, including the self-employed and the elderly, are not included in the figures above.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of Exchequer if he will publish a table showing his estimate for the current financial year of the numbers of people who will be liable to pay income tax, higher rate tax and employee's contributions to national insurance, divided into the main categories on the basis of the combined rates of deduction from income for which they will be liable.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1986, c. 332]: The table gives estimates of employees liable to income tax and national insurance contributions (NIC) in 1986-87 by the combined marginal rate of tax and NIC. Estimates are derived from projections of the 1983-84 "Survey of Personal Incomes" which does not contain details of NIC. These have been imputed from earnings levels on the simplifying assumption that all employees are contracted into the earnings related part of the National Insurance scheme and do not pay the reduced rate for married women optants. Other estimates could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

* For married couples taxable income is the combined income of the husband and wife except where there is a wife's earnings election, when the wife's earnings are treated separately as her taxable income.

† Above the upper earnings limit (£285 per week) for National Insurance contributions, the marginal rate of NIC is zero.

‡ For higher rate taxpayers the marginal rate of NIC is zero, except for a few cases where the wife's earnings are below the upper earnings limit or much of the income comes from investments.

CIVIL SERVICE

Departmental Duties (Emergency Cover)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Minister for the Civil Service what steps are taken to provide emergency cover in Government Departments on those days in addition to statutory holidays and annual leave entitlement which civil servants are permitted to take as leave; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

WALES

Planning Revocation Orders

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state in each case how much compensation was paid in relation to the six planning revocation orders, under sections 45 and 46 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 which have been approved by him since 1979; and if he will classify the compensation as to whether it was paid by the local planning authority or by his Department in each instance.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The payment of compensation under section 164 of the 1971 Act is the responsibility of the local planning authority, with reference to the Lands Tribunal in cases of dispute. Local planning authorities are required, under section 166(5) of the Act to notify the Secretary of State only where the compensation payment includes compensation for depreciation exceeding £20. In only one of the cases referred to has such notification been given when the compensation amounted to £3,100.

Housing Officers (Training)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a training unit for housing officers similar to the body already functioning in Scotland.

Mr. Mark Robinson: We are encouraging the Institute of Housing to develop proposals for an in-service housing management training unit for Wales. We look forward to considering the proposals with the local authorities and the housing association movement.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has about the number of adult classes in each county of Wales for those learning the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The centrally available information, which relates only to those courses provided by university extra-mural departments and the Workers' Educational Association, is as follows:

Number of Welsh language learning courses provided by Responsible Bodies 1984-85*

	Number
Clwyd	7
Dyfed	82
Gwent	19
Gwynedd	113

	Number
Mid Glamorgan	25
Powys	3
South Glamorgan	54
West Glamorgan	63

* University extra-mural departments and Workers' Educational Association.

Other Welsh language learning courses are provided at local authority adult education centres and at colleges of further and higher education, but such courses are not separately identified in central returns.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if any permanent liaison with the European bureau for lesser spoken languages has been established by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Yes. An official of the Welsh Office attends meetings of the United Kingdom co-ordinating committee as an observer.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to improve the availability and use of the Welsh language in medical care in Wales; and if he will update the directive, "The Health Service and the Welsh Language".

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The use of the Welsh language in the provision of health services is a matter for health authorities and family practitioner committees to consider in the light of local circumstances. Guidance issued in 1975 advises on action they may take to assist the use of Welsh in the Health Service in Wales. It remains departmental policy. It is recognised that the precise way in which this advice is implemented will vary considerably according to the use made of the language locally. I am not aware of any new circumstances which would warrant a revision of the guidance.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the printing and publishing work in the Welsh language commissioned by his Department is done by firms or organisations outside Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No detailed records are maintained by the Department of specifically Welsh or bilingual work, but it is believed that during 1985-86 no printing or publishing work solely in the Welsh language commissioned by the Welsh Office was undertaken outside Wales, although a small amount of bilingual work of a specialist character was so undertaken. Overall it is estimated that less than half of 1 per cent. of the total printing and publishing work commissioned by the Welsh Office in 1985-86 was undertaken outside Wales.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what approaches have been made to the Commission of the EEC in relation to permitting the Welsh language to be used for labelling food and drink in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None. The legislation does not specify a language for labelling purposes, but it is necessary for the customer to be able to understand the labels easily. It is a matter for the trading standards authorities to decide whether this requirement is met in individual cases. However, the European Community regulations governing the labelling of wine direct that the information on the label must be shown in an official language of the European Community.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines to local education authorities in Wales to the effect that education facilities for mentally handicapped children have regard to their home language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 8 May 1986, at column 201.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a breakdown of the uses and projects to which the money made available for the support and development of the Welsh language since 1979 has been put.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following table:

Health Education Council

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been granted to the Health Education Council in Wales for each year since 1980-81; and what proportion of the council's publicity is published in Welsh or in a bilingual format.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The contribution of the Welsh Office to the Government's grant-in-aid to the Health Education Council in the period since 1980-81 was as follows:

	£ 000s
1980-81	147
1981-82	290
1982-83	315
1983-84	486
1984-85	503
1985-86	511

Additionally, the council's pilot project, Heartbeat Wales, received from the Welsh office £20,000 in 1984-85 and £130,000 in 1985-86. The estimated grant for 1986-87, subject to parliamentary approval, is £527,000. Two hundred thousand pounds is being made available to Heartbeat Wales.

It is not possible to say what proportion of the council's health education materials is published in Welsh. However, the HEC made available £25,000 in 1985-86 for the production of Welsh language materials on the advice of the Welsh language panel of the Health Education Advisory Committee for Wales. It is anticipated that a similar budget will be made available this financial year.

Health Authorities (Bilingual Staff)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of staff in each of the area health authorities in Wales is bilingual.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not held centrally.

Road Signs

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the annual cost of providing bilingual road signs on trunk roads in Wales since 1981.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The cost of providing bilingual road signs is not distinguished from other highway expenditure, but a notional assessment is made as a proportion of the total cost of trunk road improvement schemes. Using the formula adopted since 1983, the assessed costs, at outturn prices, are as follows:

1981-82	332,500
1982-83	385,000
1983-84	476,000
1984-85	325,500
1985-86	308,000

The greater part of this expenditure would have been incurred in erecting English-only signs.

Health Authorities (Language Policies)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has issued any guidelines to Welsh health authorities concerning their language policies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: No. Guidance was issued to Welsh health authorities in March 1975 advising them on the action they might take to assist those who wish to use the Welsh language in their relations with the health service. This guidance remains departmental policy.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any further plans to extend the less-favoured areas in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: It is not within my power to extend the less-favoured areas in Wales. The EC Council of Ministers approved a redefinition of the LFAs in England and Wales in February 1984 and representations against exclusion from the redefined areas were invited. Some 2,000 such representations have been received in Wales and these are now being examined. If any of the areas subject to representations meet the criteria laid down for designation as LFA, a case for further adjustment of the United Kingdom's LFA line will be put to the European Commission for consideration.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, columns 120-1, to the hon. Member for Billericay, if he will specify the number of factors which the Royal Ulster Constabulary Chief Constable has to take into account when deciding whether or not a request to visit a Royal Ulster Constabulary station should be refused.

Mr. Scott: I understand that the main factors which the Chief Constable considers are (a) the current operational commitments of the force, (b) the nature and purpose of the visit and (c) the number of requests for visits at any given time.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, columns 120-2, to the hon. Member for Billericay, how many requests to visit Royal Ulster Constabulary stations concerning guests of his Department were (a) made by his Department and (b) refused by the Royal Ulster Constabulary Chief Constable in the years to the end of May 1986 and to the end of May 1985.

Mr. Scott: It is not my practice to give details of my correspondence with the Chief Constable.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radiation

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the information available to him as to the emergency reference levels for iodine 131 in milk, caesium 137 in milk and caesium 137 on grass employed in each of the 12 member states of the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statment.

Mrs. Fenner: We have not been officially notified of emergency reference levels of dose or of the derived emergency reference levels for iodine 131 or caesium 137 in milk, or caesium 137 on grass, employed elsewhere in the European Community. Our officials have requested the Commission to let us have this information, if available, from member states.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in how many instances readings of 1,000 becquerels per kilogram or higher have been found in vegetables following the Chernobyl disaster; and what action his Department took in consequence.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Sewage Sludge

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has on the concentration of list II substances in waste disposed of by Thames water authority at sea from (a) Crossness sewage works and (b) Beckton sewage works;

(2) what information he has as to the concentration of list I substances in waste disposed of by Thames water authority at sea from (a) Crossness sewage works and (b) Beckton sewage works:

Mr. Gummer: The most recent data available for substances listed in annex I and annex II of the Oslo Convention for the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping from Ships and Aircraft are set out below:

	Crossness	Beckton
Annex I substances
Mercury	3	5·5	mg/kg dry solids
Cadmium	15	22	mg/kg dry solids
Organohalogens:
(a) Gamma HCH	<0·01	<0·01	mg/litre (wet)
(c) Total DDT	<0·005	<0·005	mg/litre (wet)
(c) PCB'S	<0·006	0·008	mg/litre (wet)
(d) Dieldrin	<0·01	<0·001	mg/litre (wet)
Organosilicons	Nil	Nil
Annex II substances
Arsenic	13	16	mg/kg dry solids
Lead	990	897	mg/kg dry solids
Copper	570	921	mg/kg dry solids
Nickel	70	139	mg/kg dry solids
Zinc	1,370	3,800	mg/kg dry solids
Chromium	200	450	mg/kg dry solids

The negligible levels of the other substances listed in annex II do not warrant regular analysis.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how often sewage sludge dumped from ships is sampled for analysis; and on how many occasions that samples have been taken in the past years they have exceeded the permitted levels for the concentration of (a) list I substances and (b) list II substances;

(2) what is the frequency of analysis for list II substances in sewage sludge destined for sea disposal; and what have been the results of such analyses for each year since 1982;

(3) what is the frequency of analyses for list I substances in sewage sludge destined for sea disposal; and what have been the results of such analyses for each year since 1982.

Mr. Gummer: Applicants for licences for the sea disposal of sewage sludge are generally required to submit analytical data on an annual basis. Recurrent check analyses of samples of sewage sludge are carried out by officials of my Department in order to verify this data. The Oslo convention on the prevention of marine pollution by dumping from ships and aircraft recommends that analyses of sewage sludge are carried out routinely before a licence is issued in respect of those metals (except arsenic) listed in annexes I and II of the convention, and on a selective basis in the case of organochlorine compounds. These recommendations are fully met.

The Oslo convention does not specify permitted concentration levels for annex I and II substances in sewage sludges disposed of at sea.

Information on the results of analyses for annex I and II substances in sewage sludges disposed of at sea since 1982 could only be reproduced at disproportionate cost. However, summary information on the concentrations of a number of annex I and II substances present in sewage sludges licensed for sea disposal can be found in the annual reports of the Oslo commission, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Food Labelling

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations and individuals who have commented on his draft guidelines on fat labelling; and if he will publish these comments.

Mrs. Fenner: Proposals for regulations to require foods to be labelled with their fat content and proposals for guidelines for a system of voluntary nutrition labelling were published on 13 February. A total of 143 organisations and individuals have commented on our proposals and these are listed. These comments were not made in the knowledge that they might be published and it is not therefore appropriate for me to do so.

Sheepmeat (Caesium Levels)

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date he first discussed with the Commission of the EC the possibility of introducing a ban on the movement of lambs in certain parts of the United Kingdom; and whether at that time he obtained its agreement to the payment of compensation to farmers affected by such a ban.

Mr. Jopling: Imposition of controls on the movement and slaughter of lambs, is a matter for decision by the United Kingdom Government. As I indicated in my statement to the House on 20 June, if however it should prove to be necessary, the Government will be prepared to discuss cases of compensation for severe loss in particular circumstances to specific farmers.

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the draft statement concerning the ban on the movement of lambs which was circulated by his Department to local officials to discuss with farming interests at local level, differed in a material respect, in relation to compensation provisions from the statement which he made in the House on Friday 20 June.

Mr. Jopling: I am not aware that any draft statement concerning restrictions on the movement of lambs was circulated by my Department for discussion with farming interests at local level.

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state under what sub-head of public expenditure compensation will be paid to farmers affected by severe losses arising from the ban on the movement of lambs.

Mr. Jopling: If it is decided that compensation payments should be made, parliamentary approval of the necessary financial provision will be sought in the normal way through the Supplementary Estimates procedure.

Retail Food Developments

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what involvement his Department has in the siting and size of new retail food developments.

Mrs. Fenner: None directly. However, my Department is required to be consulted by the local planning authority, pursuant to article 15 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977, on proposed developments likely to affect 10 acres or more of agricultural land in England.

Radioactivity

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what agencies have conducted radioactive monitoring on behalf of his Department in each year since it assumed responsibility for this function.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to the reply, 26 June 1986, c. 307]: Operators of nuclear sites in the United Kingdom are required as a condition of the authorisation granted under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to carry out comprehensive monitoring of radioactivity in both discharges and in the environment. My Department undertakes an indpendent programme of monitoring of radioactivity in the marine and terrestial environment around nuclear installations. In addition, a number of other agencies, including the National Radiological Protection Board, the Institute of Terrestial Ecology and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, undertake ad hoc monitoring studies on behalf of the Department.

Veal

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information and statistics he has about the numbers of farmers continuing to operate veal crate systems despite the voluntary code of practice on the matter.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 3 June, 1986 c. 487]: According to the results of the recent survey carried out by the state veterinary service, there are six holdings where farmers continue to operate veal crate systems.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by his Department for the purpose of checking for aging and obsolescence in the reliability of the United Kingdom's stockpile of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Lee: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to reveal details of those engaged on the defence nuclear programme.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been his Department's expenditure on checking for aging and obsolescence in the reliability of Her Majesty's stockpile of nuclear weapons in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lee: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to reveal details of the cost of the defence nuclear programme.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what advice he has received from the Department of Defence of the United States of America on the technical problems connected with checking for aging and obsolescence in the reliability of the United Kingdom's stockpile of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Lee: Details of exchanges between the United Kingdom and the United States Governments on nuclear issues are classified and cannot be revealed.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any of the safety devices on nuclear weapons are operated by nuclear fission; what testing of conventional safety devices on such weapons takes place and at what intervals; if any such testing takes place in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Details of the design and operation of nuclear warheads cannot be revealed on the grounds of national security.

Radar Facilities (Fylingdales)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the date of the initial operational capability for the joint United Kingdom/United States of America modernisation programme for the United States radar facilities at Fylingdales in Yorkshire.

Mr. Stanley: We hope that the modernisation programme for the joint ballistic missile early warning system at RAF Fylingdales will be completed by late 1990 or early 1991. No firm date for initial operating capability has yet been fixed.

Rifle Ranges

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has completed his study of the use of Army or reserve forces rifle ranges in or near to densely populated areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have no study specifically addressing the use of Army or reserve forces rifle ranges in or near to densely populated areas. However, we continue to place the greatest importance on maintaining the safety of our ranges and, within the context of our essential military training requirements, to pay close attention to relations with the general public.

Army Training Team

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of the British Army training team in Khartoum.

Mr. Stanley: The role of the British Army training team in Sudan, currently comprising two men, is to assist with training and instruction at the Sudanese command and staff college at Omdurman.

Virgin Airways

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the value of the contract to Virgin Airways for transport to the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Stanley: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not the practice to disclose the cost of individual contracts. The contract to Virgin Atlantic Airways was awarded as the result of competitive tendering.

Northern Ireland (Security Forces)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the numbers of soldiers killed in Northern Ireland by regiment in each year since 1968.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1986, c. 26]: The information requested is set out in the table for each year since 1969, when troops were deployed on duties in support of the civil power. Information in the form requested for 1968 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Dr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 447, she will make a statement on the progress of the search of military records of the Ministry of Defence in connection with Dr. Kurt Waldeheim's wartime activities if she can yet state when the search is expected to be completed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As yet, I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave the right hon. Member on 3 June, at column 447.

European Court

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister if she will list the occasions since June 1979 when the United Kingdom has been found guilty in a case before (a) the European Court of Human Rights and (b) the European Court of Justice; and what was the subsequent action taken by the United Kingdom in each case.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 27 June 1986, c. 327]: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

(a) Since June 1979 the European Court of Human Rights has found against the United Kingdom on eight occasions. New primary legislation, or amendments to existing regulations or administrative practice, have been introduced consequent upon seven of these judgments. The cases, together with the date of the judgment and the subsequent action taken by the Government are as follows:

Young, James and Webster (13 August 1981): Employment Act 1980, effective 15 August 1980, re-enacted and strengthened by Employment Act 1982 — effective 1 December 1982;

Dudgeon (22 October 1981): Homosexual Offences (Northern Ireland) Order 1982 — effective 9 December 1982;

"X" (5 November 1981): Mental Health Act 1983—effective September 1983;

Silver and others (25 March 1983): Control of prisoners' correspondence. Amendment to Prison Regulations — effective in England and Wales 1 December 1981, Scotland 1 August 1983 and Northern Ireland 1 February 1985;

Campbell and Fell (28 June 1984): Changes in the practice relating to Prison disciplinary tribunals — by means of a letter of 12 July 1984 to Chairmen of Boards of Visitors copied to Prison Governors;

Malone (2 August 1984): Interception of Communications Act 1985 — effective 10 April 1986;

Abdulaziz, Cabales and Balkandali (27 May 1985): Changes to Immigration Rules on admission of husbands and wives—effective 26 August 1985;

As regards action on the one remaining case, Campbell and Cosans (25 February 1982), the hon. Member will be aware that the possibility of legislation relating to corporal punishment in schools is the subject of discussion in Committee on the Education Bill.

(b) Since June 1979, the European Court of Justice (ECJ) has found against the United Kingdom in 11 cases brought by the European Commission under article 169 of the EEC treaty, and in one case brought by another member state (France) under article 170 of the treaty. Details, including follow-up action, are as follows:

ECJ case number	Subject	Follow-up action
141/78†	Fisheries conservation legislation	Subordinate legislation amended.
170/78 170A/78*	Wine and Beer: Tax arrangements	Legislation amended by the Finance Act 1984.
32/79 804/79	Sea Fisheries: Conservation Measures	Community regime introduced in September 1980. Revised national arrangements introduced for control of herring fishing in the Irish Sea.
61/81	Equal pay for men and women	Legislation amended by the Equal Pay (Amendment) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983 No. 1794).
124/81	Imports of UHT Milk	Legislation amended by the Importation of Milk Act 1983 and regulations thereunder.
40/82 40A/82*	Newcastle disease in Poultry	Administrative changes made.
165/82	Equal Treatment for men and women	Amending legislation before Parliament in the Sex Discrimination Bill (HL).
207/83	Origin-Marking of retail goods	Legislation amended by the Trades Description (Origin Marking) (Miscellaneous Goods) (Revocation) Order 1986 (1986/193).
100/84	Anglo/Polish Fishing	Administrative changes made.

* The notification "A" is used to denote two judgments given in each case.

† Proceedings under article 170 of the EEC treaty.

In addition, under article 177 of the EEC treaty national courts may ask the European Court of Justice to give preliminary rulings in order to clarify questions of Community law. Once the European Court of Justice has answered the questions of the national court the matter returns to that court for decisions. Some preliminary European Court of Justice rulings in cases referred to it by United Kingdom courts have a bearing on United Kingdom law, which may on occasions require amendment as a result. Recent examples are the court's judgments in 152/84 Marshall v. S W Hampshire Area Health Authority, and 150/85 Drake v. Chief Adjudication Officer.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ships and Ship and Engine Repairs (Orders)

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many orders for ships and ship and engine repairs involving public money have been placed abroad since 1979; and what was the total sums involved.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No orders for ships involving public money have been placed abroad since 1979. The only expenditure incurred abroad in respect of ship and engine repairs relates to running repairs. The amount is believed to be modest in total, but full records of this incidental expenditure have not been kept.

Asbestos

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to ensure that the British Standards Institute audit of British standards to identify and eliminate references of asbestos is carried out urgently; and when he expects it to be completed.

Mr. Pattie: The British Standards Institution has commenced the audit. It anticipates that about three months will be required to scan the portfolio of some 10,000 standards in order to identify those where action is required. Prior to the completion of this initial investigation it is not possible to predict when the audit will be completed. I share BSI's desire to complete this activity as soon as possible.

National Accreditation Council

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to abolish the National Accreditation Council.

Mr. Pattie: The National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies is performing its functions well. A number of certification bodies are currently being assessed prior to accreditation and the first, Lloyds Register Quality Assurance Ltd. was accredited last March. The Government therefore have no intention of abolishing the council.

British Standards

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why Government Departments are withdrawing participation from the formulation of British Standards.

Mr. Pattie: The Government remain firmly committed to raising the efficiency and competitiveness of United Kingdom industry through their support for and development of a strong national standards system as stated in the 1982 White Paper "Standards, Quality and International Competitiveness" (Cmnd. 8621). Government Departments therefore continue to participate fully in the work of the British Standards Institution. There will, however, be occasions when changing priorities lead to changes in membership of particular standards committees, and these are a matter for the Departments directly concerned.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in implementing the rolling programme of references of nationalised industries to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will announce a further programme of references.

Mr. Channon: During 1985 reports were published on the revenue collection systems of four area electricity boards, the British Railways Board: Property Activities, the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board and the British Airports Authority. The report on the water supply services in the Southern water authority's area was published on 16 April 1986 and I hope to publish the report on the South of Scotland Electricity Board during the summer.

The commission is currently investigating the British Steel Corporation and the Post Office's procurement activities.

I decided that in view of current proposals for modernising the Post Office's counters service it would have been inappropriate to proceed with the counters reference planned in 1985.

I am anxious that our commitment to a worthwhile programme of efficiency audits of the public sector should continue. I hope shortly to announce the terms of reference for an inquiry into the British Waterways Board. As soon as the commission completes its outstanding work on the existing inquiries I propose to make references covering the remainder of 1986 including a re-reference of British Rail's network south-east, and an aspect of the Central Electricity Generating Board.

ENVIRONMENT

River Severn (Radioactive Emissions)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring takes place of the discharge of radioactive waste into the River Severn from nearby nuclear power stations; and if he will arrange through the Central Electricity Generating Board for the level of emission to be published.

Mr. Waldegrave: The CEGB power stations at Berkeley, Oldbury and Hinckley Point discharge liquid radioactive waste into the River Severn or its estuary. Monitoring of the discharges is carried out by the CEGB in accordance with the discharge authorisations granted under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 by the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Duplicate samples supplied to the radiochemical inspectorate of my Department are sent for independent analysis to ensure that the operators' analyses are being performed correctly.

Levels of emissions from all nuclear power stations in England are published regularly by the Central Electricity Generating Board and in the additional tables of the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" published by my Department.

Water Abstraction

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he takes to monitor the levels of water abstraction for agricultural purposes from rivers in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: It is for water authorities to monitor water resources and to license abstractions (other than their own), which are controlled under the Water Resources Act 1963. Most agricultural abstractions are however exempt from licensing.

Polar Bears

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the keeping of polar bears in captivity; and if he will make it his policy that this practice should be discouraged at least where breeding is unlikely to be achieved.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have received representations only from my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Miss Fookes) and I would refer the hon. Member to my answer of Tuesday 15 April 1986, at column 335, and to my subsequent letter to my hon. Friend the Member for Drake on 30 April, which I have placed in the Library.

The decision to keep polar bears in captivity is one for the individual zoo operators to make; conditions regulating their keeping may be imposed via licences issued by local authorities under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981, to ensure adequate standards.

Home Improvements

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has now received in favour of the proposals in the Green Paper on home improvements.

Mr. John Patten: My Department received a total of 430 responses to the Green Paper on home improvement. Over half these expressed no overall judgment on the merits of the proposals. Of the remainder, almost a quarter were generally favourable.

Wildlife Inspectors

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many wildlife inspectors are employed in his Department; how many of these are qualified ringers; and if he will give the figures for the last six years.

Mr. Ridley: There are currently 105 wildlife inspectors, of whom 53 are qualified ringers. The Wildlife Inspectorate was established following the introduction on 28 September 1982 of part I of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. By April 1985, 230 inspectors had been appointed, of whom 61 were qualified ringers. In the light of the inspectorate's operating experience, this number was then reduced to 112, of whom 58 were qualified ringers.

Urban Programme

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will begin consultation with local authorities and the voluntary sector about the bidding process for 1987-88 traditional urban programming.

Sir George Young: Arrangements for urban programme support to local authorities in 1987-88 will be announced soon.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Broadwater Farm Estate, Tottenham

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to arrange for the report commissioned by the Metropolitan police on police actions during the events at the Broadwater Farm Estate, Tottenham in 1985, to be circulated to all police stations in the Metropolitan police area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to the reply, 24 June 1986, c. 125]: The Commissioner is today publishing a report which includes details of the outcome of the reiew. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library. The Commissioner is arranging for copies to be circulated to all divisional stations.

I welcome the report. It provides a useful and frank account of what happened at Brixton and Tottenham, describes some of the work being done with the community to prevent crime and disorder and sets out the action taken, following the review, to improve the capacity and preparedness of the Metropolitan police to tackle disorder if and when it arises.

The report chronicles the events at Brixton and Tottenham following two tragic incidents - the shooting of Mrs. Groce and the death of Mrs. Jarrett. It gives a full and chilling picture of the ferocious attack which the police faced in the front line against the violence of the mob. At Brixton, the police faced a barrage of stones, bottles and petrol bombs and under the cloak of mob rule many crimes of serious personal violence against members of the public, looting and damage to property were committed. A press photographer suffered injuries from which he later died. At Tottenham, the police took the full brunt of a murderous attack during which firearms were used against them in addition to petrol bombs and other missiles and weapons. At height of the rioting PC Keith Blakelock was killed.

The report rightly emphasises the positive efforts which the Metropolitan police have made both before and after the riots to develop the good working relationships with the local community, which are an essential basis for tackling crime and disorder. These efforts include close consultation with community-police consultative groups, helping to set up neighbourhood watch schemes, victim support schemes and working with other agencies in tackling the particular problems of inner city housing estates. In addition, action has been taken to ensure that officers are trained in the skills necessary to understand and cope with the problems of the community they serve.

This commitment to positive and constructive policing policies remains and is being developed. At the same time, the Commissioner has taken action to improve the capacity and preparedness of the Metropolitan police to deal with extreme disorder, in the light of the lessons learnt from the rioting last autumn. Selected officers at senior and middle management level have received further intensive training, radio communications are being improved and better information gathering systems and command structures are being introduced. The new territorial support groups will also help in providing an early response to disorder.

In my statement to the House on 21 October last year, at columns 30-32, I said that the Metropolitan police were obtaining more shields and defensive equipment. As a result of the review the Commissioner has asked for my authority to purchase a number of items of equipment. I have given approval for the purchase of 700 additional radios, 24 ballistically protected vehicles, (which, in the light of the experience of Tottenham, are necessary to provide protection against firearms and petrol bombs) and 80 protected personnel carriers. This equipment will be made available as soon as possible.

At Tottenham the police lines were assaulted with long poles and other similar weapons. Shields and short truncheons proved ineffective in dealing with attacks of this kind, and the only available alternative was the use of plastic baton rounds or CS. The Commissioner has therefore sought my authority to acquire long truncheons to enable police officers on foot to protect themselves and respond effectively to such attacks. I have given authority for the purchase of 1,500 long truncheons for this purpose. These will be deployed only in a situation of extreme disorder, where other methods have failed or are unlikely to succeed, on the authority of an officer of at least commander rank and used under the direction and control of the senior officer in charge at the scene.

I share the Commissioner's hope that the availability of long truncheons as an intermediate option in dealing with serious disorder may prevent a situation escalating to a point where the use of plastic baton rounds or CS is necessary. But I have made it clear to the Commissioner that if, in the event of further extreme disorder, he concludes that there is no alternative to the use of plastic baton rounds or CS he will have my full support. The strict conditions governing the use of plastic baton rounds or CS were set out in my reply of 19 May to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire West, (Mr. Hind) at columns 15-16.

The Commissioner's report is a thorough and wide-ranging review which seeks to move forward from the dreadful events of Brixton and Tottenham and ensure that the lessons are learnt and acted upon. The report clearly has implications for other chief officers of police and it is being widely disseminated within the police service.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if British Rail, the Central Electricity Generating Board and other relevant bodies are required to inform the London fire brigade of proposed movements of trains carrying nuclear waste materials on the Greater London rail network.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No, but comprehensive guidance has been issued to all chief fire officers on emergency procedures and sources of expert advice.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Geiger counters are currently provided to the London fire brigade for use at incidents involving radioactive substances.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The London and all other fire brigades have a range of equipment for the detection of radiation and for the personal protection and decontamination of firefighters at incidents involving radioactive substances. This includes personal dosimeters, radiac survey meters and decontamination meters.

Young Offenders

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many young people are subject to detention centre orders; and what is the estimated average weekly cost of a detention centre order;

(2) how many people are subject to youth custody; and what is the average annual cost of a youth custody order.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, on 30 April 1986 there were about 1,200 detention centre trainees and about 7,800 youth custody trainees in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales. Estimates of average costs are all available only for types of penal establishments, and not for types of sentence. Detailed information on average weekly costs of penal establishments was published in the "Report on the work of the Prison Department 1984/85," (Cmnd. 9699) (table 7 and appendix No. 2, table D).

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has about reconviction rates following a detention centre order;

(2) what information he has about reconviction rates following a youth custody order.

Mr. Mellor: The regularly available information of young offenders reconvicted within two years of discharge from Prison Department establishments is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales". (Information about those discharged in 1981 is given in tables 8.4 and 8.5 of the latest issue, for 1984, Cmnd. 9622). Figures for youth custody trainees are not yet available.

KG Smoke Dispersals

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate will receive a detailed response to the letters sent to his noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 15 April and 3 June about KG smoke dispersals.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I very much regret the delay. My hon. Friend will receive a reply from my noble Friend very shortly.

Mr. Norman William Davis

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill on 18 June, Official Report, whether he has now taken a decision on the recommendation of the Parole Board regarding Mr. Norman William Davis.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend has considered the Parole Board's recommendation. Mr. Davis will be informed of the outcome as soon as possible.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state which of the Welsh police forces have supplies of plastic bullets.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Plastic baton rounds are held only by the North Wales police.

Drink-Driving

Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the practice of backtracking from breath tests for the purpose of seeking to assess whether a driver was at any particular previous time likely to have been in breach of the drink-driving provisions of the Road Traffic Acts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Road Traffic Act 1972 provides for the courts to give due weight to the results of evidential breath test, blood or urine tests in drink drive cases. It is for the court to decide in a particular case what other evidence is to be admitted, and the importance to be attached to it. I see no need to seek to restrict the discretion of the courts in this matter.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposed reorganisation of the current divisional structure of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In accordance with the plans for reorganising the force which the Commissioner announced in November 1984, the district command structure has been abolished with effect from 30 June. No changes are to be made to the divisional structure.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Young Persons (Full-time Education)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest estimate of the number and percentage of young people who remain in full-time education until the age of 18 years (a) in England and (b) in each of the principal English regions; and how this number compares with that for 1980 and 1984.

Mr. Dunn: The table shows the numbers and percentages of 16 and 17-year-olds who remained in full-time education at maintained schools and further education establishments in the academic years 1984-85 and 1980-81 by region in England. Data for the current academic year (1985-86) will be available in the autumn.

PhDs (Part-time Study)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he is notified of proposed increases in fees for students studying for PhDs on a part-time basis; if he will list the increases by university; and what estimate he has of the effect of fee increases on completion rates.

Mr. Walden: Universities do not notify the Department or the University Grants Committee of their fee levels for part-time students.

Science and Engineering Teachers

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy for attracting more science and engineering teachers into the teaching profession.

Mr. Chris Patten: Good science and technology teachers are vital for the future of an advanced industrial nation. Appropriate remuneration is important in securing an adequate supply of teachers of suitable quality, but a range of other measures will still be necessary. We are working on these with our partners in the education service and in industry. We are publishing a consultative document and I shall send a copy to my hon. Friend.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service talks on teachers' pay and conditions of service.

Mr. Chris Patten: I understand that the four working parties set up to look at teachers' pay and structure, appraisal and training, duties and responsibilities and future negotiating machinery have now completed their work. These reports are to be received at a meeting between the two sides at ACAS on Wednesday 9 July.

Universities (Funding)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the amount of money in current sterling values paid by Her Majesty's Government and local education authorities per head of the student population to universities in the financial year 1979-80 and in the present financial year.

Mr. Walden: The sum of the University Grants Committee's recurrent, equipment and capital grants to universities and universities' receipts in fees for home students (nearly all of which are paid by local education authorities) per full-time home student was, at 1986-87 prices, £6,323 in 1979-80 and £6,234 in 1986-87.

University and Polytechnic Departments

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many university departments and polytechnic departments have closed since 1979.

Mr. Walden: Information on the closure of university and polytechnic departments is not collected centrally; nor is information on the opening of new departments. Some such changes arise from reorganisation within institutions.

School Closures

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many objections to the closure of schools, out of the total number, have been successful in each year since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: Since 1979, 125 out of a total of 1,618 proposed school closures have been rejected by the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State considered these cases on their individual merits and reached his decisions on the basis of all the relevant factors, including any arguments raised by objectors.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have closed in England since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: Between 1979 and 31 May 1986, 1,493 schools have been approved for closure.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average time it has taken for him to reach a decision on the closure of a school in the last five years.

Mr. Dunn: Information is not available in exactly the form requested. The average time taken to decide all proposals falling to the Secretary of State in the period August 1980 to December 1985 was 6·5 months, including the two-month period for statutory objections to be made, and the further month for proposers' transmission of any such objections to the Secretary of State.

Teachers of the Deaf

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been his response to recent representations regarding the future of training teachers of the deaf.

Mr. Chris Patten: Ministers have received a number of letters, including one from the hon. Member on the future organisation of training to teach the deaf. I shall be replying to these representations shortly.

Royal Greenwich Observatory

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will be replying to the letter sent to his predecessor by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 19 May concerning the relocation of the royal Greenwich observatory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I replied to the right hon. Member today.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the development of the curriculum under the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: As explained in the White Paper "Working Together: Education and Training" published today, the Government have decided that the technical and vocational education initiative should be extended from the pilot to a national scheme from autumn 1987, to be administered by the Manpower Services Commission working in close consultation with the Education Departments.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I are issuing guidance to local education authorities about the curricular criteria for the TVEI extension, which will be as follows:

1. Authorities will be required to submit development plans which are designed to show how they will make available to students in the 14-18 age range in their areas programmes of full-time studies, drawing on the experience of the TVEI pilot projects. Within the development plan which each authority submits, the proposals for the curriculum for students to whom the extension applies will be assessed for their consistency with the Government's policies for the curriculum as expressed in "Better Schools" as regards England and Wales and the Munn Report and Action Plan as regards Scotland.

2. Aspects which will be particularly taken into account for this purpose are set out below. They refer especially to what is proposed to be offered to those affected in the 14-16 age range. Due allowance will be made for the different situation of greater specialisation post-16 where studies may prepare directly for a specific vocational area, as defined in paragraph 49 of "Better Schools".

3. The individual programmes made available to students through the structure and application of common cores and option choices should be broad and balanced. They should be related to experience and aim to stretch all pupils to the full potential of their abilities. Students should be enabled to acquire a proper balance of knowledge, understanding, attitudes and skills including practical applications. The aim of the curriculum should be to develop the potential of all students as a preparation for adult life, including employment and the responsibilities of citizenship. This involves attention to the content of programmes, to the learning and teaching approaches used and to progression and continuity within courses and from year to year, particularly where what is done post-16 needs to start from what has been learnt before. It also involves the provision as far as practicable of programme patterns and choices which allow equal opportunity to boys and girls, to students from ethnic minorities and to students with special needs.

4. Breadth and balance cannot be achieved without an appropriate representation in each student's programme of technical and practical elements. The development plan should seek to secure that representation. Subject to that the balance should vary according to student needs, but all programmes for the 14 to 16 phase should reflect or make clear progress towards the situation set out in para 69-71 of "Better Schools" and for Scotland in "Curriculum design at S3 and S4: Guidelines for Headteachers" issued by the Consultative Committee on the Curriculum in December 1983. Programmes should include English, mathematics, science, elements drawn from the humanities and the arts, practical and technological work, and access to modern languages, or in Scotland the modes of study set out in the Munn Report. Due regard should be paid the statutory requirements for religious education. There should also be provision for individual and social development including personal counselling and guidance. Post-16 it is desirable that account should continue to be taken of breadth in order to foster the student's versatility and to keep open as wide as practicable a choice of career options.

5. Relevance should be sought by making programmes include a suitable emphasis on personal and social skills, initiative, and problem solving. Relevance may be improved by pre-vocational studies in appropriate cases and by relating what is taught in a broad sense to potential career opportunities locally and nationally; good careers education and guidance is essential. But relevance should not be sought before 16 through premature vocational specialisation. There should be appropriate planned work experience from age 15 onwards bearing in mind the provisions of the Education (Work Experience) Act 1973, and the Education (Scotland) Act 1980.

6. To secure differentiation, programmes should cater effectively for variations in abilities and aptitudes of all students. All students need to find themselves systematically challenged but not to find that the tasks set are beyond them.

7. Wherever possible the course of full or part-time education or training should lead to nationally recognised qualifications approved by the Secondary Examinations Council or the proposed new National Council for Vocational Qualifications, or in Scotland the qualifications of SCOTVEC and/or the Scottish Examination Board. These will include GCSE, A and AS levels, BTEC, RSA, CGLI and CPVE, or in Scotland SCE Standard Ordinary, Higher and Certificate of Sixth Year Studies and National Certificate Modules.

8. Arrangements should be made for regular assessment. Where practicable students should on leaving school be issued by the authority with a record of achievement describing qualifications gained in their programmes and recording significant elements and attainments which are not readily deducible from the qualifications, for example work experience and personal success.

Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, further to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, columns 433-34, he will publish in the Official Report details of the basket of goods he used for comparing the purchasing power of expenditure on education, including figures on the standard of living of teachers.

Mr. Dunn: My answer of 13 May, revised on 12 June, at column 278, made use of purchasing power parities estimated by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. For comparing expenditures measured in national currencies, these are preferable to exchange rates in that they allow for differences in national price levels and so permit "real" comparisons. A summary of the theory underlying PPPs, together with some recent data, were given in "Purchasing Power Parities and Real Expenditures in the OECD", a copy of which is in the Library.

As is the case with consumer price indices which are used to adjust for changes in price levels over time, PPPs can be calculated based on different "baskets" of goods and services. The basket used for Japan and the United States of America for the purchasing power parities covered the whole of gross domestic product, consisting of private consumption, Government consumption and capital formation: details are given in the OECD publication cited. That for other countries covered consumer expenditure only. The individual parities for the various goods and services entering into GDP are aggregated according to overall national consumption patterns, and so do not relate specifically to the standard of living of teachers.

Higher Education

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what (a) number and (b) percentage of people aged between 16 and 21 years in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, (iii) Wales and (iv) Northern Ireland are in higher education in the United Kingdom for each year from 1979 to date;

(2) what (a) percentage and (b) numbers of young people in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, (iii) Wales and (iv) Northern Ireland went on to higher and further education for each year from 1979 to date.

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1986, c. 515]: The information is shown in the following table. Figures for further and public sector higher education in Wales and of Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. WALES

Radiation

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the locations in Wales of facilities available to the public to monitor radioactivity in samples of food.

Mr. Mark Robinson: General facilities for members of the public to monitor radioactivity are not provided by the Government. A programme of monitoring a wide range of crops and meat has been undertaken by the Government on a national basis since the Chernobyl accident in order to ensure the safety of public food supplies.

Sheep

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of lambs whose movements have been restricted by his recently announced Government ban, in each of the districts of Arfon, Dwyfor, Meirionnydd, Aberconwy, Ynys Môn, Colwyn and Glyndwr, respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The estimated number of lambs whose movements have been restricted in the districts requested is as follows:

	Thousands
Arfon	80
Dwyfor	51
Meirionnydd	208
Aberconwy	128
Ynys Môn	156
Colwyn	154
Glyndwr	132

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table indicating the average price of lambs sold in markets in Wales during the periods (a) 8-14 June, (b) 15-21 June and (c) 22-28 June.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The average market price of lambs sold in markets in Wales in the periods requested are as follows:

Week commencing	Price per kg liveweight pence
9 June	234·59
16 June	190·45
23 June*	150·00

* Estimate.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are his responsibilities in relation to the Welsh language and its use.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The position was made abundantly clear by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in his speech to representatives of Gwynedd county council on 15 April 1980.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total amount of direct Government support for the Welsh language; and if he will express the figures on a per capita basis, and as a whole under each expenditure heading, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following table:

	1979-80 £	1980-81 £	1981-82 £	1982-83 £	1983-84 £	1984-85 £	1985-86 £	1986-87 £

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the Welsh-speaking population of the counties of Gwent, South Glamorgan, Mid Glamorgan and West Glamorgan at the last census.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is already published in the 1981 census report "Welsh Language in Wales" CEN81WL, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he takes to ensure that the linguistic position in Wales is taken into consideration when appointments to his Department are made.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The guiding principle with appointments to posts in all parts of the Civil Service is that the best available candidate should be selected, an where the duties of a post either require proficiency in Welsh or are such that proficiency would be an advantage, this is reflected in the selection process. Recruitment to clerical posts in the Department's local officers is undertaken locally and in the more Welsh speaking areas it is normally found in practice that a reasonable proportion of those appointed to them will be Welsh speakers.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many senior civil servants in his Department are Welsh speaking; and what proportion this represents.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Of the 126 senior civil servants (grades 1 to 6) 56 (44 per cent.) are Welsh speakers.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has about the number and total sales value of children's books published in the Welsh language during the most recent 12-month period.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Through my annual discussions with the Welsh Books Council I am kept fully informed on all aspects of publishing in the Welsh language. The hon. Gentleman should approach the council direct for information which might be of commercial interest.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps have been taken since May 1979 by his Department to encourage non-Welsh speaking persons in Wales to try to learn the language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Direct Government support for the Welsh language since 1979 amounts to £18 million. This money has been used to support a wide variety of practical projects, including some to encourage non-Welsh speakers to learn the language.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps have been taken to ensure that the number of qualified speech therapists employed by each of the area health authorities in Wales conforms with the standard set out in the report of the committee chaired by Sir Randolph Quirk; how many of those currently employed are bilingual in Welsh and English; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Following the publication of the Quirk report, a working party on speech therapy in Wales reported in December 1979. Since 1979 whole-time speech therapists employed by district health authorities in Wales increased from 65·6 to 117·6 at September 1985. This suggests that the standards recommended in the Quirk report will be attained well before the target date of 1992. Information on the current number of bilingual staff employed by health authorities is not held centrally.

Translation Unit

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons are now employed full-time and part-time at the translation unit of his Department; and how this compares with the position in 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We employ four full-time members of staff in the Welsh Office translation unit, compared with five in 1979. No part-time staff are employed, but we make use of translation agencies from time to time.

Housing

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report his sources of evidence for his acceptance in Welsh Office circular 30/86 that there is a genuine demand for sites for houses for executives and his concern that failure to meet it will inhibit attempts to secure new commercial and industrial enterprises.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The evidence derives from representations and statements to that effect by representatives of industry and housebuilders, supported by the views of the Land Authority for Wales and by professional advice in the Welsh Office. It has been corroborated in the responses to the consultation exercise undertaken on the issue received from a number of bodies, including the Confederation of British Industry (Wales), Winvest, Welsh Development Agency and Mid Wales Development.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report those organisations, including local authorities, that he consulted before issuing Welsh Office circular 30/86 about housing for executives.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is as follows:

Confederation of British Industry (Wales)
Winvest
Welsh Development Agency
Institute of Directors
National Federation of Chambers of Commerce (Wales)
Land Authority for Wales
House Builders' Federation
Building Societies Association
Federation of Master Builders
Royal Institute of British Architects
Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors
Incorporated Society of Valuers and Auctioneers
College of Estate Management, Polytechnic of Wales
National Housing and Town Planning Council
National Farmers' Union
Farmers Union of Wales
Country Landowners' Association
Development Board for Rural Wales
Countryside Commission
Council for the Protection of Rural Wales
Nature Conservancy Council
Royal Town Planning Institute
Town and Country Planning Association
Welsh Counties Committee
Welsh Office of the Assocation of District Planning Authorities
Welsh District Planning Officers Society
Wales Association of Community and Town Councils

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources he is to make available to planning authorities to carry out the review specified in Welsh Office circular 30/86 about housing for executives.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I am satisfied that the local planning authorities will be able to undertake the review in conjunction with their existing programmes of work.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report those research studies his Department has undertaken preceding the issuing of Welsh Office circular 30/86 that have direct relevance to that circular.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The evidence was not collected on the basis of research studies, but through the long-established process of public consultation.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report those individuals and organisations who have drawn his attention to the possible disincentive to business people who might otherwise be prepared to invest and develop in Wales brought about by the absence of an adequate pool of houses attractive to and suitable for senior managers and senior technical staff referred to in Welsh Office circular 30/86.

Mr. Mark Robinson: My right hon. Friend had his attention drawn to this matter by a number of individuals and organisations concerned with inward investment of business and industry. Their views have been supported in the responses from the Land Authority for Wales, Confederation of British Industry (Wales), Welsh Development Agency and Winvest, to the consultation exercise undertaken on the issue.

TRANSPORT

Trunk Road Programme

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current statement of policy objectives for the trunk road programme.

Mr. Moore: The current statement of policy objectives for the trunk road programme in England is in paragraphs 11 and 12 of the report, "National Roads England — 1985". This updates the previous statement of policy objectives given in the White Paper "Policy for Roads in England: 1983" (Cmnd. 9059).

Copies of "National Roads in England — 1985" were placed in the Library at the time of publication.

Motorway Services

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is considering the provision of any additional motorway services on the existing motorway network in the north-west.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are considering the provision of a motorway service area at Hapsford, at junction 14 of the M56 north of Chester.

London Midland Region (Performance Management Team)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 June, on what basis he has concluded that the results so far of the performance management team for the London Midland region to be encouraging.

Mr. David Mitchell: Details of this sort are a matter for the board, but I understand that its view was based on improved punctuality figures.

A65 Addingham Bypass

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the public inquiry into the proposed A65 Addingham bypass to take place.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Probably in the late autumn.

Roads (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the revised method of assessing the need for road lighting.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to announce a new policy on road lighting and to publish related guidance on assessment aspects before the summer recess.

M42

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what stretches of the M42 have been identified as being prone to fog.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table lists the relevant findings of a study undertaken for the Department by the Meteorological Office.

Sites around the M42 motorway between M5 and junction 5 north of Tamworth likely to experience 25 or more days with fog (visibility 1,000 m) at 09.00 h GMT per year and approximate average annual number of days with fog at 09.00 GMT +/− 5 days

Site	Number of days
Kingsbury Water Park	35
Junction 2 area	33
Junction 3 area	30
Austrey Meadows	27
River Anker Crossing	26
Junction 1 area	25

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what stretches of the M42 have had lighting installed along them.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All junctions, including motorway to motorway interchanges, are being provided with lighting.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if cable ducting has been installed during the construction of the M42.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Transverse ducting has been provided at regular intervals.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total of (a) accidents and (b) fatalities on motorways (x) in daytime and (y) at night in 1985 and in 1986 to date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Boeing 737 Fire (Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive a further report from the Civil Aviation Authority into the Boeing 737 fire at Manchester international airport on 22 August 1985; and if he can yet make a further statement.

Mr. Moore: The accident to the Boeing 737 at Manchester airport on 22 August 1985 is the subject of an inspector's investigation by the accidents investigation branch of my Department. The Chief Inspector of Accidents anticipates submitting his report to Ministers at the end of the year. This accident is an extremely complex one and it would be improper of me to try to anticipate the findings of the inspector's report.

Investment Grants (Shipping)

Sir William Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport which member states of the European Economic Community make operational subsidies available to their shipping companies; what is the scale of such assistance; and what conditions are imposed on the availability of such assistance.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 443]: Up-to-date information is not available, but in general direct operating subsidies in the Community are confined to support for services to outlying communities.

Sir William Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport which member states of the European Economic Community reserve part of their seaborne trade to their national shipping companies; and what is the nature and extent of such cargo reservation in each case.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 443]: France, Greece, Italy, Portugal and Spain all reserve their cabotage trades to their national flagged vessels. Denmark and the Federal Republic of Germany have similar restrictions but in practice waive them for United Kingdom flagged vessels. Spain reserves various cargoes, in particular oil, cereals and tobacco to national flagged vessels. France reserves the carriage of 66 per cent. of her crude oil imports and 40 per cent. of her coal imports to French flag vessels. France, Spain and Portugal also reserve "Government" cargoes to national flagged vessels. Belgium, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Portugal and Spain have bilateral cargo-sharing agreements of various kinds with certain developing countries.

Sir William Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport which member states of the European Economic Community provide investment grants or other assistance to their shipping companies for the purchase of new ships; what is the size and nature of such grants or assistance in each case; and whether the grant of such aid is conditional on either building such ships in national shipyards or operating them under the national flag.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 443]: The available information is as follows:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Attorney-General if he will consider establishing an inquiry into the use of the Welsh language in the courts of Wales.

The Solicitor-General: The Government are committed to the principle of equal validity in the use of English and Welsh in court proceedings in Wales as provided for in the Welsh Language Act 1967. The Lord Chancellor will willingly consider any specific representations about the facilities for the use of Welsh in courts for which he is responsible, but no need is seen for a further general review.

Mr. Wigley asked the Attorney-General what provision is being made as part of the development of land registration in Wales, for the certificate of land registration to be available in either a Welsh language or bilingual form.

The Solicitor-General: There are approximately 340,000 separate registered properties in Wales. The translation of this information in every case could at present be accomplished only at the cost of an unacceptable delay in the compulsory registration of title.

Merthyr Tydfil County Court

Mr. Rowlands asked the Attorney-General how many special procedure sittings took place at Merthyr Tydfil county court between 1 August and 1 October in 1983, 1984 and 1985; and how many are planned for those months in 1986.

The Solicitor-General: During the period 1 August to 1 October 1983 there was no special procedure sitting for dissolution of marriage at Merthyr Tydfil county court. One such sitting took place during the same period in each of the following years and one is planned for this year. Normally there is about one special procedure sitting each month. The court on an average sits about four days each month.

ENERGY

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will deposit in the Library a full copy of the original safety case for one of the Magnox nuclear power stations now subject to a 20-year safety review.

Mr. Goodlad: No. I understand from the operators that the original safety cases, which were prepared for the construction of the Magnox stations, have been continuously updated and that the original documentation does not therefore fully reflect the current safety cases.

Goods and Services

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest estimate of the total value of purchases of goods and services made by the public energy utilities; and what proportion of the total was supplied by the private sector.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

National Coal Board

Mr. Christopher Hawkins asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether the terms of his assurance about Government financial support for the National Coal Board set out in his answer of 19 June 1985 to the hon. Member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Portillo), apply to 1986-87 also.

Mr. David Hunt: Lower oil prices have increased the competitive pressure on the coal industry. Nevertheless, it remains the board's objective to break even on revenue account by 1987-88, and to earn a positive return thereafter on its assets in real terms after the payment of social grants.

I can confirm that, subject to Parliament's approving the necessary provisions, the Government will continue to make available funds to enable the NCB to meet its obligations as they fall due during the board's current financial year to 28 March 1987.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General (1) if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, 28 April, columns 337-38, he will show the types of job on the CODOT classification of those people aged under 20 years recorded as in (a) full-time and (b) part-time work;

(2) if, in the manner of the answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, 28 April, columns 337-38, he will give the comparable figures for the labour force surveys from 1979 to 1985 for those recorded to be in full-time and part-time work aged from 21 to 24 years.

Mr. Lang: The available labour force survey estimates are given in tables 1 and 2. The amount of occupational detail that can be given is limited by sample size.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year of the labour force survey the number of people aged (a) 16 to 19 years, (b) 20 to 24 years and (c) 25 years and over who were in temporary work, broken down into full and part-time workers.

Mr. Lang: Estimates of the number of seasonal, temporary or casual jobs are available from the labour force survey since 1981. These are presented in the following table.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Paymaster General what data have been assembled by his Department reflecting the overall level of employment and increases in levels of pay and earnings in the west midlands region each year since 1979; and how these statistics compare with those of east Anglia and the south-east.

Mr. Lang: Table 1 records the civilian employed labour force (the sum of employees in employment and the self-employed) in the regions specified at June each year from 1979 while table 2 presents the new earnings survey estimates of gross weekly earnings for April of each year.

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Paymaster General what has been the percentage increase in unemployment in Pontefract and Castleford and Knottingley since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not available. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies and electoral wards are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only from June 1983. These and statistics from the former system based on jobcentre areas are available in the Library.

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Paymaster General how many people were unemployed for more than one year in 1979 and each subsequent year in (a) the Castleford travel-to-work area and (b) the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Mr. Lang: Following is the available information which is in the Library. The figures are affected by the 1983 Budget provisions which mean that certain older men, mainly aged 60 or over, no longer have to sign on to receive benefit, and by the change in the timng of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Larger discontinuities occurred in the local area statistics in 1982 and 1983 with the change in the basis of the count, the introduction of ward-based statistics and the revision to boundaries of travel-to-work areas. Therefore the figures are not directly comparable.

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Paymaster General what is the latest figure of persons aged under 25 years who are unemployed; and how many have been unemployed for more than 12 months in the Castleford travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lang: On 10 April 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age and duration is available, there were 1,183,833 unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in the United Kingdom. The number of claimants aged under 25 years in the Castleford and Pontefract travel-to-work area was 3,460, of whom 928 had been unemployed for over 12 months.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General what is the percentage unemployment rate in the constituencies of Leicester, East, Leicester, West and Leicester, South; and what was the equivalent figure and the number of claimants in May 1985.

Mr. Lang: Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas. The following information on the numbers of unemployed claimants in the requested constituencies in May 1985 is in the Library. For the corresponding figures for May 1986, I refer my hon. Friend to my previous reply to him on 26 June at column 243.

Unemployed Claimants, May 1985

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what is the number of unemployed building and construction workers by region at the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: The available information which is derived from the labour force survey is as follows:

Uranium Workers (Health)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Paymaster General what information is available from his Department, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority or the National Radiological Protection Board on radiological assessments of the health and morbidity rates of workers at the uranium mines from which the United Kingdom obtains uranium for civil nuclear use.

Mr. Trippier: All uranium for the civil nuclear programme is obtained from overseas. No information on any radiological assessments or morbidity rates of workers at the mines from which the United Kingdom obtains uranium is held by my Department, the Health and Safety Executive, or the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority. The National Radiological Protection Board has accumulated some information on the radiation induced lung cancer mortality of uranium miners and I am asking the director to reply to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Career Development Loans

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General how many disabled people have (a) applied for and (b) received career development loans in each of the four pilot areas since their introduction.

Mr. Trippier: No information is available as applicants do not have to declare whether they are disabled as a condition of receiving the career development loan. Evaluation of these pilot experiments will include a follow up of successful and unsuccessful applicants and will seek more detailed information about personal characteristics, including disablement.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General if he intends to take steps to introduce training for banking staff to equip them to decide whether an applicant is suitable for a career development loan and, in particular, training taking account of the special needs of disabled people.

Mr. Trippier: No. All applicants are provided with guidance intended to help them decide whether a career development loan would be the best way to improve their employment prospects. A checklist suggests that health and any disabilities should be taken into account when choosing a course. Bank staff assess only eligibility and, taking account of the Government assistance available, the applicant's ability to repay the loan.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General if those organisations which provide training under the career development loans scheme will be given any guidance in assessing the needs of disabled people who apply for courses organised by them and in dealing with their special training requirements.

Mr. Trippier: The disablement advisory service of the Manpower Services Commission provides assistance to all training organisations which seek guidance about special needs of disabled people who apply for courses, whether or not the trainees in question are financed through career development loans.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the progress of the career development loans scheme; what action he is taking to assist disabled people to benefit from it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I am encouraged by the response so far. Career development loans make it easier for people, including those with a disability, to borrow money for training of their choice. The disablement advisory service of the Manpower Services Commission is aware of the experiment and will be drawing the possibilities to the attention of disabled people in the four pilot areas of Aberdeen, Bristol/Bath, Greater Manchester and Reading/Slough whenever it thinks it appropriate to do so.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General how many people have (a) applied for and (b) received career development loans in each of the four pilot areas since their introduction.

Mr. Trippier: Participating banks notify my Department only when an application has been accepted or rejected. Since the launch on 15 April the following notifications have been received:

	(a) Applications	(b) Approvals
Aberdeen	4	4
Bristol and Bath	0	0
Manchester	10	1
Reading and Slough	3	2
Total	17	7

Job Creation

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of job-creating schemes (a) for the current year and (b) planned for 1987 in the Castleford travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lang: The full range of employment, enterprise and training opportunities described in the "Action for Jobs" booklet is available to people living in Pontefract and Castleford. The only exception is the new career development loans initiative, which we are piloting in four areas.

Jobcentres

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Paymaster General how many jobs were available at jobcentres in (a) the Yorkshire and Humberside region and (b) the Castleford travel-to-work area in May 1979 and June 1986; and what are the latest figures available.

Mr. Lang: The following table shows the numbers of unfilled vacancies in the Yorkshire and Humberside region, and at Castleford, Knottingley, Pontefract and Normanton jobcentres, which cover an area closely corresponding to the Pontefract and Castleford constituency. Vacancy figures for June 1986 will be available in the Library on 17 July.

Vacancies at Jobcentres (excluding community programme)

	Yorkshire and Humberside Region	Castleford, Knottingley Pontefract and Normanton Jobcentres
May 1979	17,674	425
May 1986	10,623	303

Closures and Redundancies

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Paymaster General if he will list the largest 20 closures or redundancies in the Yorkshire and Humberside region since 1979, giving in each instance (a) the total jobs lost, (b) the date and (c) the company name.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 26 June at column 244.

"Action for Jobs—Opening More Doors"

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General what was the total cost of producing the booklet "Action for Jobs — Opening More Doors"; how much of this cost was as a result of work done by his Department and how much due to services supplied by the Central Office of Information; and if he will give a breakdown of the Central Office of Information costs.

Mr. Lang: The total cost to date of the "Action for Jobs" booklets produced by the Central Office of Information is £383,820 (excluding VAT). This figure includes COI editorial, design, artworks, and commercial printing/production costs for the 2,980,000 booklets so far produced.

It would be disproportionately expensive to attempt an estimate of the time spent on the project by departmental and MSC officials.

Radioactive Substances (Incidents)

Mr. Gould asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied that the advice and recommendations to local site authorities on the appliances and equipment to be deployed at incidents involving radioactive substances are being implemented; and if he will clarify and amplify that advice where necessary.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have been asked to reply.

I have no reason to believe that the comprehensive guidance issued to all chief fire officers is not acted upon. It is kept under review and will be amplified as necessary.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the likely effect of sanctions against South Africa on employment in the United Kingdom and in South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We receive a large amount of correspondence about South Africa, some of which deals with the effect that sanctions against South Africa might have on employment in the United Kingdom and in South Africa. We shall continue to take full account of this important negative aspect of economic sanctions.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give his estimate of the total number of persons resident in South Africa who are believed to be entitled to the right of abode in the United Kingdom, specifying their supposed British nationality status by birth, descent, registration and naturalisation, respectively.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 15 April at column 380.

It is not possible to specify the proportion of British nationals, resident in South Africa, who have acquired British nationality by each of the means mentioned in my hon. Friend's question.

Kyshtyu (Nuclear Accident)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of the representations made by Her Majesty's Government to the Soviet Government following reports in the British press on 18 March 1959 concerning an accident at a nuclear installation at Kyshtyu.

Mrs. Chalker: No representations were made.

Hong Kong

Sir Paul Bryan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the level of provision of facilities in Hong Kong for the teaching of the performing arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Satisfactory training and coaching facilities for students of the performing arts are provided by the Hong Kong Government and various voluntary associations and private organisations. There are over 100 independent arts institutions which provide training in dance and drama. The Hong Kong Government's music office also provides training in musical instruments, both Chinese and Western, for approximately 4,000 young students.

The Hong Kong Academy for Performing Arts, a prime example of private and public sector co-operation, has been established since September 1984 as an independent institution which aims to provide and encourage training, education and research in the performing arts and related technical fields. The facilities in the academy are among the most advanced in the world. At present, the academy has 205 full-time students and 120 part-time junior students, and on full establishment will provide training for 600 full-time students in the four major disciplines of dance, drama, music and technical arts. In its latest admission exercise which closed in May, over 2,000 applications for 140 places were received.

Sir Paul Bryan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the level of provision of facilities for outdoor leisure pursuits in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Outdoor leisure pursuits are the most popular form of recreational activity in Hong Kong and the territory's population are now able to pursue a greater variety of activities than ever before. Government planning standards aim to ensure that in spite of the territory's land shortages each district is adequately provided with open space and recreational facilities. Opportunities exist for participation in practically every outdoor sport. Increasing use is made of Hong Kong's 21 country parks, covering 40 per cent. of the land area of the territory, for hiking, camping and related activities.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Departmental Accommodation

38. Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 894, what steps he has taken to obtain more appropriate accommodation for his Department than is currently offered by the Royal High school building in Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I anticipate that the Crown Office will be accommodated on part of the site at Chambers street, Edinburgh on which the new sheriff court will be erected. However, this could not be achieved before 1992.

Procurators Fiscal (Warnings)

39. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will provide details of instructions given by his Department to procurators fiscal with regard to the issuing of warnings to individuals who have been charged by the police when the procurators have decided not to take the case to court.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The current instructions given by my Department to procurators fiscal with regard to the issuing of warnings remain the same in substance as those contained in Crown Office circular No. 1685, copies of which were deposited in the Libraries of both Houses in July 1980. I refer my hon. Friend to my predecessor's answer to my question on 9 July 1980 at columns 546-48.

Diligence (Crown Preference)

40. Mr. Pollock asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he has any plans to seek to amend the law relating to Crown preference in regard to the law of diligence.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate and I are both considering with our ministerial colleagues both the Commission's proposals and the related proposals of the Keith committee on enforcement powers of the Revenue departments.

Until our consideration of the proposals is completed I am not in a position to say whether, or in what way the law might be amended.

Crown Office Staff

41. Mr. Canavan asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many Crown Office staff are employed in the Scottish Assembly building.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The total number of persons currently employed in the Crown Office, Scotland, is 104.

Traders (Licences)

42. Sir Hector Monro asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many traders have been proceeded against by procurators fiscal under the Civic Government Act for failure to have the appropriate licences.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Statistics recording this information are not kept separately.

Violent Crime (Prosecutions)

43. Mr. Hirst asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions took place in 1985 in Strathclyde for serious crimes involving violence; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The provisional figure available for 1985 is 2,473 persons proceeded against. The Government welcome the fact that, overall, crime in Strathclyde has decreased but are concerned that there has been an increase in serious crimes of violence. Every effort possible will be made by this Government to support the law enforcement agencies in combating this problem.

Mr. Alan J. Pocock

44. Mr. Kennedy asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will explain the reasons for the length of time which has elapsed in replying to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye with regard to the case of Mr. Alan J. Pocock; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The matter is still being considered and further inquiries are being made. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman once these have been completed.

SCOTLAND

Birdlife Habitat

10. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Forestry Commission's policies towards the preservation of the birdlife habitat.

Mr. John MacKay: It is the Forestry Commission's policy actively to conserve legally protected species. The commission is increasing its consultations with bodies such as the Nature Conservancy Council and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds.

Leith (SDA Plans)

12. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the Scottish Development Agency's future plans in Leith.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The agency will continue its activities in Leith, though the Leith project has now completed its agreed five-year term. The work of the project will be carried forward by the Leith Enterprise Trust, and agency staff will be seconded to the trust. The agency has plans to spend about £1 million in the area in 1986-87.

South of Scotland Electricity Board

13. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board; and what was discussed.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. and learned Friend met the chairman on 10 June when a range of matters of current interest were discussed.

Colleges of Education

14. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has completed his consideration of the representations regarding the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council recommendation on colleges of education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. and learned Friend is still considering this matter and will make a statement in due course.

Student Grants

15. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to make adjustment to grants to students studying at Scottish universities who will have to pay a community charge in the period when students studying south of the border will not.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend will give careful consideration to the position of students in Scotland who become liable to pay the community charge, against the background of progress with the comprehensive review of all aspects of financial support for students announced on 18 June, at column 1046.

National Health Service (STUC Meeting)

16. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no recent request to discuss the National Health Service from the Scottish Trades Union Congress, but will consider any request for a meeting. I met the STUC on 24 March 1986.

Secondary Schools

17. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that each secondary school in Scotland should receive the same additional allocation of moneys as their English and Welsh counterparts in the current year for books and equipment, in order to implement the changes in the curricula and examination system.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government have already made substantial additional resources available for standard grade. Since 1984-85 we have allowed in our provision for local authority current expenditure for staffing of 6 per cent. above Red Book (significantly above the earlier recommended levels) and we have also allowed for additional non-teaching costs of £1·5 million in 1985-86 and £2 million in 1986-87. The Government are also spending £750,000 this year on development officers and course materials for standard grade in addition to the £4·14 million already spent on similar support in previous years. The concession allowing schools to close for up to 10 days a year for in-service training and preparation also still stands. Moreover, standard grade, unlike GCSE, is being introduced on a phased basis and ordinary grade examinations are being retained for the time being.

Dundee Airport

18. Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will pay an official visit to Dundee airport.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

Housing

19. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for increasing the housing supply in Scotland in the next two years.

Mr. Ancram: The Government will continue to seek to maximise the capital resources available to meet local authorities' housing needs, although the proportion of those resources devoted to increasing the housing stock is entirely for the authorities themselves to decide. Within the overall resources available for housing expenditure, we also intend continuing to give full support through the Housing Corporation to housing associations, the bulk of whose efforts will be devoted to the provision of housing for rent.

Planning authorities have been asked to ensure that structure plans make provision for at least a four-year supply of land for private housing. When structure plans and alterations thereto are submitted for his approval my right hon. and learned Friend considers whether sufficient land is allocated for private housing and, where necessary, makes modifications to increase the amount of land so allocated.

Local Government Finance

20. Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now meet Tayside regional council and local hon. Members to discuss the provisional capital allocations for 1987-88 and 1988-89, respectively.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has told the regional council that he would be happy to listen to any general points it wishes to make about future years when he visits it in October. If there are preliminary points that the region wishes to pursue, an official meeting can be arranged, but it will not be possible to take decisions until the Government have assessed the needs for all authorities later this year.

21. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the local authorities which have indicated their support for his proposals for the future funding of local government.

Mr. Ancram: It is not possible to provide a list in the form requested since most of the responses received so far from local authorities include comments in favour of some of the proposals and against others.

22. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss local government finance.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend next plans to discuss local government finance matters with the convention on 18 July.

Health Services

23. Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has issued any guidelines to area health boards on improving co-operation with the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Yes. Guidance on the powers available to health boards to make NHS facilities and services available to the private sector was included in general advice on private medical practice in NHS hospitals issued in NHS circular 1981 (GEN)1 and 1983 (GEN)6. Advice on the potential use by boards of contractual arrangements with private sector establishments for the provision of facilities and services for NHS patients was given in NHS circular 1981(GEN)30. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

Electricity Supplies

24. Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce measures to assist financially the South of Scotland Electricity Board and householders in rural areas in the initial provision of an electricity supply.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

Roads (Highland Region)

25. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet representatives of the Highland regional council to discuss roads provision in the Highland region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to meet Highland regional council for this purpose.

Owner-occupied Houses

26. Mr. Hugh Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of houses are now in owner occupation as a result of purchases from the public sectors of new towns, the Scottish Special Housing Association and district or regional housing authorities; and what proposals he has to review the social consequences of promoting further sales of such houses.

Mr. Ancram: It is estimated that about 10 per cent. of the stock in owner-occupation in Scotland at 31 December 1985 was formerly in public ownership. A major component of our housing policy is to encourage public sector tenants to exercise their right to buy their homes. Sales offer advantages to the purchasers, the selling landlords and their remaining tenants. 80,500 former public sector tenants have bought their homes since April 1979 and are now enjoying the benefits of home ownership; and sales over this period have released over £600 million additional resources for housing authorities and agencies to re-invest in the remaining public sector stock. We will continue to monitor the success of the right-to-buy policy.

Tourism

27. Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest indicators for tourism in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: It is too early to give an indication as to prospects for this year. The Scottish Tourist Board estimates that, last year, visitor spending in Scotland amounted to £1,439 million as compared with £1,423 million in 1984.

Commission for Local Administration

28. Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to extend the powers of the Commissioner for Local Administration in Scotland so that local authorities are required to implement his recommendations within a specified period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has not ruled out the possibility of introducing legislation to provide for enforcement although, as the commissioner has himself said, voluntary compliance by local authorities would be the better course. The recommendation of the Widdicombe committee on this point will be carefully considered, as will any recommendation bearing on the matter which may be made by the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Students (Community Charge)

29. Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken in response to the representations he has received from Scottish universities and central institutions concerning the implications of a community charge for students.

Mr. Rifkind: I am considering the comments made by Scottish universities and central institutions with all other responses to the rates reform proposals made during the current consultation period.

SHARE Formula

30. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the chairmen of the health boards in Scotland to discuss the operation of the SHARE formula.

Mr. John MacKay: I met health board chairmen collectively on 23 June when the operation of the SHARE (Scottish health authorities revenue equalisation) formula, and a further review being undertaken of certain aspects of the formula, were among the range of issues discussed. My next scheduled meeting with chairmen is to take place in November.

Geriatric Patients

31. Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional resources he proposes to make available to area health boards for the provision of additional accommodation, beds and nursing care of geriatric patients during the next 12 months.

Mr. Rifkind: For the current year the boards' hospital and community health services resources have been increased by 7·2 per cent. in cash terms compared with 1985-86. In using these funds, boards are expected to give high priority to services for the elderly.

The age structure of the population is one of the factors taken into account in determining the allocation among boards of resources.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

32. Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to meet the chairman of Greater Glasgow health board to discuss the level of funding for the board.

Mr. John MacKay: The chairman of the board was present when I met health board chairmen collectively on 23 June. The funding of boards under the SHARE (Scottish health authorities revenue equalisation) formula was among the range of issues discussed. My next scheduled meeting with chairmen is to take place in November.

Unemployment (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth)

33. Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to visit Cumbernauld and Kilsyth to discuss the level of unemployment with the authorities concerned.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Macaulay Institute

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the persons who are to be consulted about the feasibility study concerning the location of the proposed new Macaulay Institute; and if he will place a copy of the feasibility study in the Library.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend will arrange for a copy of the report of the steering group on the amalgamation of the Macaulay Institute for Soil Research and the Hill Farming Research Organisation to be placed in the Library when it is available. The document is being prepared as a report for my right hon. and learned Friend. While copies will be made available to interested parties for information, the report will not be a consultation document.

Labour Statistics

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table indicating the current total number of men, women and young people unemployed in the Glasgow, Rutherglen constituency for six months or over, one year or over, and two years or over, respectively; and if he will publish a comparable table for May 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: At 10 April 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of men, women and young persons (conventionally 16 and 17-year-olds) who were unemployed in the Glasgow Rutherglen parliamentary constituency and claiming benefit and who had been unemployed for six months or more, is shown in the table. Information on a constituency basis is not available prior to June 1983.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway in Scotland are lit and how many are unlit.

Mr. Ancram: Of a total of 151·5 miles of motorway in Scotland 22 miles are lit and 129·5 miles are unlit.

Greenock and Port Glasgow (Ministerial Visit)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to pay an official visit to Greenock and Port Glasgow in the near future.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. and learned Friend has arranged to visit the offices of the Inverclyde initiative in Greenock on Friday 4 July 1986.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the net decrease in the area of land maintained by the Forestry Commission since 1980.

Mr. John MacKay: Between 1 April 1980 and 31 March 1986 the net decrease has been 98,283 hectares.

School Buildings (Lothian)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 887, he will list by name those school buildings in the Lothian region which his Department has been informed are half empty.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Scottish Education Department currently has information on school capacities in respect of 18 individual secondary schools in Lothian region. Three of these were understood to be more than half-empty and a further 11 to have been operating at between one half and about two thirds of total capacity at September 1985. Since secondary school rolls are projected to decline even further, this degree of under-utilisation is likely to increase unless action is taken to remedy the position. Details are as follows:

Vocational Education and Training

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about arrangements for vocational education and training in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government's plans for vocational education and training in the United Kingdom are set out in a White Paper published today by my noble Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Points of particular significance for Scotland include the extension of the technical and vocational education initiative (TVEI), which will allow Scottish authorities to build on the success they are already enjoying under the pilot schemes. The curricular principles on which the extended TVEI scheme will be based are set out in a written answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey). They are fully consistent with the objectives of standard grade for 14 to 16s and action plan for 16 to 18s. As with the pilot scheme, my Department will be fully involved with the Manpower Services Commission in the management of TVEI in Scotland and in particular will continue to be represented on the national steering group.

In recognition of the stage which has already been reached in Scotland in securing the changes needed in the field of vocational qualifications through the successful implementation of the 16-plus action plan, I have decided that it would be inappropriate for the national vocational qualifications framework and the National Council for Vocational Qualifications to extend to Scotland at the present time. The Scottish Vocational Education Council (SCOTVEC) will, however, continue to be a member of the YTS certification board. The Government intend to consolidate the reforms already made in Scotland under 16-plus action plan and to press ahead with a number of new developments, including the accreditation of work-based learning, competency testing and a review of advanced SCOTVEC qualifications. In view of the need to secure mutual recognition of equivalent vocational qualifications obtained in Scotland and in the rest of the United Kingdom, close working relationships will be maintained between the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and Scottish interests. I will consider in two or three years' time whether there should be any formal change in the relationship between the National Council and Scotland.

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland were employed by the British Steel Corporation in each year since 1974.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 385]: The number of people employed by the British Steel Corporation in Scotland in each year since 1974 is set out in the table.

Year (end-September)	Employment
1974	27,570
1975	27,040
1976	24,250
1977	22,440
1978	20,540
1979	18,970
1980	14,840
1981	13,260
1982	11,250
1983	8,490
1984	8,200
1985	7,970

Incontinence Aids

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients in Scotland receive incontinence aids, including pads and pants, on prescription; what he estimates to be the annual cost of this service; and what estimate he has made of the cost if the service were provided through the health centres and district nurses.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 383]: In 1984 there were 150,000 general practitioner prescriptions for incontinence pads at a cost of £1·6 million. Incontinence pants and all other garments are provided through the district nursing service. The number of patients and administrative costs of provision by district nurses are not held centrally.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Research and Development

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is yet in a position to announce his Department's plans for the funding of research and development in 1987-88.

Mr. Jopling: In January 1985 I announced that expenditure by the agriculture departments on research and development would be reduced by £10 million in 1986-87 and £20 million in 1987-88. These changes reflected the Government's aim that industry should make a greater financial contribution towards the research and development from which it benefits. In line with that decision I announced in July 1985 that the savings required in the publicly funded research and development programme in 1986-87 would be found through rationalisation of the existing programme and the removal of less effective areas of work.

In order to achieve the savings required in 1987-88, it is now necessary for the public sector sponsors to identify the further adjustments which will be made to their research expenditure. In reaching decisions on the changes, we have been guided by the advice of the Priorities Board on future priorities and resource allocations. In the case of my own Department, the level of our commissioned expenditure with the Agricultural and Food Research Council in 1987-88 is expected to reduce from £47·9 million in the current year to £43·8 million next year. In parallel the funds allocated to research and development in the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service will reduce from £42·2 million to £39·4 million. Even after these reductions and those to be made by the other sponsors, the Government will still be funding nearly £200 million of research and development in relation to agriculture and food in 1987-88.

We are in close consultation with all sector interests to encourage the development of industry funding arrangements which could operate alongside the publicly funded programme. The positive response in the horticultural and cereals sector is most welcome and I know that other sectors are considering actively how they might be involved in funding such work. I am sure that the industry fully appreciates the benefits which flow from the research and development programme and I hope that all sectors will be willing to fund work that is likely to be of direct economic benefit to them. A partnership on this basis will ensure that work is targeted even more precisely on industry's needs.

River Pollution

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of river pollution from silage operations have been reported to his Department in each of the past five years.

Mr. Gummer: River pollution incidents resulting from farm silage effluent are reported by water authorities in England and Wales to my Department's farm waste unit. Their numbers for each of the years 1980 to 1984 were:

	Number
1980	376
1981	577
1982	373
1983	575
1984	573

The results of the survey for 1985 will be published shortly.

Butter

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the total value of the subsidy on open market butter purchased by non-profit-making organisations during 1985;

(2) what was the subsidy on each 250 gramme packet of butter on the open market purchased by non-profit-making organisations during 1985;

(3) what percentage of non-profit-making organisations have claimed the subsidy on butter purchased on the open market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Food Additives

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines he proposes to issue to food companies regarding policy on the future use of food additives.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will place in the Library the results of radioactivity monitoring on cows milk, sheep milk, sheep and vegetables for May 1985 for Cleveland, Cumbria, Durham and Northumberland;

(2) if he will place in the Library the results of radioactivity monitoring of sheep milk for 1 to 14 May for Cleveland, Cumbria, Durham and Northumberland;

(3) why no figures have been issued on the results of the monitoring of radioactivity in sheep milk in Cumbria between 3 and 14 May;

(4) if he increased the monitoring of vegetables in Cumbria following the discovery of readings of 1100 bq/kg of caesium 137 and 895 bq/kg of iodine 131 on cabbages and leeks in Cumbria on 9 May.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his advice regarding the safety of eating whimberries, wild bilberries, wild raspberries and blackberries growing in north Wales or the Lake District, as well as garden fruits, in the light of radioactive fallout in May in those areas.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Members as soon as possible.

Sheep (Caesium Levels)

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the likely long-term effects upon ewes in north Wales and Cumbria of exposure to radiation, and in particular how long such ewes are likely to give contaminated milk; whether movement to uncontaminated pasture would have a beneficial effect; and whether there is any risk to genetic mutations in sheep.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 308]: The Ministry's monitoring programme of foodstuffs instituted following the Chernobyl accident detected transient increases in radioactivity in ewes' milk during May but levels have now declined substantially. Movement to uncontaminated pasture is not necessary and in any case would have been impracticable.

There is no reason to expect that the slightly increased levels of radioactivity following the accident at Chernobyl will lead to any detectable increase in genetic mutation in sheep.

SOCIAL SERVICES

In-patients (Post-operative Infection)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the number of inpatients with post-operative infections in each regional health authority area in 1984 and 1985;

(2) what proportion of inpatients suffered from post-operative infection in each regional health authority in 1983 and each year since.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member all the information he seeks. Figures for 1985 are not yet available. The available information is given in the table. Between 1983 and 1984 the estimated number of in-patient cases undergoing operations increased from 2,135,890 to 2,251,820.

Overseas Visitors (Treatment)

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the number of non-British people treated by the National Health Service for the last year for which figures are available;

(2) if he is satisfied with the effectiveness of the provisions for the charging of those treated under the National Health Service who are not British nationals or taxpayers;

(3) if he will give the total amount recovered by the National Health Service from non-British people treated by the National Health Service in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: Comprehensive information is not available centrally on the nationality of patients treated in National Health Service hospitals. Legal eligibility for free treatment is based on residence, not nationality or the payment of taxes. Income from overseas visitors in 1985-86 is provisionally estimated at £2·3 million, but information is not collected on the number of patients charged.

Baby Milk (Cartons)

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what basis the decision was taken to change the sizes of baby milk cartons.

Mr. Whitney: The basis of this welfare food provision has not changed. The previous Order provided for recipients to receive two 450g packs of dried baby milk per week. The new Order permits recipients to receive either two 450g packs or one 900g pack.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have died prematurely from cervical cancer in the Yorkshire regional health authority since January 1980.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that information is not available in precisely the form requested. The figures in the table may be of help to the hon. Member.

Local Office Staffing

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present level of staffing of his Department's offices in the Castleford travel-to-work area; and what was the comparable figure for May 1979.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The approved complement for May 1979 and the staff allocation for 1 July 1986 in respect of each of the offices in the Castleford travel-to-work area are set out in the table. They reflect overall reductions in workload over the period mainly due to the introduction of housing benefit and statutory sick pay.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were in receipt of supplementary benefit (a) in the Yorkshire and Humberside Region and (b) in the Castleford travel-to-work area in 1979 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Major: The Castleford travel-to-work area is covered by the Department's offices at Castleford, Hemsworth, Pontefract and Wakefield, although their boundaries are not conterminous with that area.

The numbers of people receiving supplementary benefit in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside and (b) each of the four offices specified on 6 May 1986 and on comparable dates for each year since 1979 were as follows:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986

NHS (Property Sales)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of all National Health Service property sold since the review by Lord Rayner in 1984 was empty; and what proportion of property presently owned by the National Health Service is now standing empty.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

NHS (Pay)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he is making to the joint submission to his Department from the British Medical Association, the Royal College of Nursing and the Institute of Health Service Management about pay rises to National Health Service medical employees and ancillary workers in conjuction with improvement of services to patients.

Mr. Hayhoe: I responded to the original joint submission ("Public Expenditure on the National Health Service: Recent Trends and the Outlook") on 28 January and to the subsequent submission on 8 April. I am sending copies to the hon. Member and have also placed them in the Library.

NHS (Private Patients)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many private patient officers have been designated in National Health Service hospitals to reduce losses of charges from treatment of private patients; and if he will list the hospitals concerned.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department's handbook: "The Management of Private Practice in Health Service Hospitals in England and Wales", which was issued to health authorities under health circular HC(86)4, requires the designation of private patient officers at all hospitals where the treatment of private patients is authorised. 847 hospitals in England are so authorised.

Doctors (West Midlands)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors employed by the West Midlands regional health authority originally on a full-time basis have reduced their posts to a part-time contract during the last seven years.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret I cannot give the hon. Member the information she seeks as it can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Community Health Councils

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will indicate for each community health council the sex of the holder of the office of chairman;

(2) if he will list for each community health council the number of members; and of these, how many in each case are women.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Health Authorities

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will indicate for each regional health authority the sex of the holder of the office of chairman;

(2) if he will list for each regional health authority the number of members; and in each case, of these how many are women;

(3) if he will list for each district health authority the number of members; and, of these, how many in each case are women;

(4) if he will indicate for each district health authority the sex of the holder of the office of chairman.

Mr. Hayhoe: The 14 regional health authority chairmen are all men. Of the 191 district health authority chairmen, 30 are women. District health authority members are appointed by the appropriate regional health authority and relevant local authorities and I regret detailed information is not held centrally. The information requested on regional health authority members is as follows:

Broadmoor Patients (Day Trips)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what procedures are implemented before parties of patients from Broadmoor are allowed to go on day trips to seaside towns or other similar places; and if he will publish the regulations and procedures involved.

Mr. Whitney: The procedures relating to such outings are set out in standing instructions to all staff concerned at the hospital. They are reviewed regularly. Publication of the instructions could prejudice rather than improve security. Escort staff are of course trained and experienced in working with the patients for whom they are responsible.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the proportion of the party comprising staff that accompany groups of patients from Broadmoor when they go on day trips to seaside towns and similar places.

Mr. Whitney: This varies according to the needs of the patients and the circumstances of the outing.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action is taken to inform the police when parties of patients from Broadmoor are taken out on day trips or longer periods to seaside towns and similar other places.

Mr. Whitney: The staff escorting patients have the addresses and telephone numbers of the local police stations concerned. Should a patient abscond on an outing, standing instructions require staff to notify the police immediately and to stand by to give any assistance or information they might require.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many day trip patients from Broadmoor visited (a) East Sussex and (b) West Sussex in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and the latest figure for 1986; and which towns were included in the visits.

Mr. Whitney: Figures are not readily available for the years 1980 and 1981. Since then, the following day outings have been made:

East Sussex
1984: 1 outing to Brighton

West Sussex
1982: 3 outings to Littlehampton
1984: 1 outing to Chichester
1984: 1 outing to Worthing

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many day-trip parties of patients from Broadmoor visited the Brighton and Hove area in (a) each year since 1980 and (b) 1986 to date; and what was the total number in each party.

Mr. Whitney: Information about day outings in 1980 and 1981 is not readily available. There was one outing to the Brighton and Hove area in the later period, to Brighton in 1984, when the party consisted of four patients and two escort staff. There have been no outings to the area this year.

NHS (Resources)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of gross national product was devoted to expenditure on the National Health Service in each year since 1981; what equivalent information he has about other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries; and to what factors he attributes any difference between the figures for the United Kingdom and the average for the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1986, c. 154]: The table shows public expenditure on health in member states of the Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development expressed as a percentage share of gross domestic product for the period 1981 to 1983, the latest year for which OECD information is available. (Figures showing the share of gross national product are not readily available from other OECD countries.) Comparisons are affected by different definitions as to what constitutes health care, the proportion of total costs borne by patients as charges (excluded from the figures) or other payments; and the balance between private and public health care in each country. They are also affected by the relative costs of health care. It is widely recognised internationally that the National Health Service provides very good value for money.

Single Payments

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (a) how many single payments have been made under regulation 28 of the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulations for each year since November 1981 to the following categories of claimants: (i) pensioners, (ii) unemployed, (iii) sick and disabled, (iv) single parents and (v) others, (b) the cost by year and on average for each category, (c) how many of these payments have been made to the long-term unemployed, (d) how much the Government expect to save by their abolition and (e) what is the margin of error which should be taken into account in the figures.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will state (a) how many single payments have been made under regulation 28 of the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulations for each year since November 1981 to the following categories of claimants: (i) pensioners, (ii) unemployed, (iii) sick and disabled, (iv) single parents and (v) others; (b) what was the cost, by year and on average for each category, (c) how many of these payments have been made to the long-term unemployed, (d) how much Her Majesty's Government expect to save by the abolition and (e) what is the margin of error in the figures.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state (a) how many single payments have been made under regulation 28 of the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulations for each year since November 1981 to the following categories of claimants: (i) pensioners, (ii) unemployed, (iii) sick and disabled, (iv) single parents and (v) others, (b) the cost by year and on average for each category, (c) how many of these payments have been made to the long-term unemployed and (d) how much the Government expect to save by the abolition of this regulation.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state (a) how many single payments have been made under regulation 28 of the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulations for each year since November 1981 to the following categories of claimants: (i) pensioners, (ii) unemployed, (iii) sick and disabled, (iv) single parents and (v) others, (b) the cost by year and on average for each category, (c) how many of these payments have been made to the long-term unemployed, (d) how much it is expected to save by its abolition and (e) how much under or over estimation should be taken into account in the figures.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his replies, 26 June 1986, c. 295 and 30 June 1986, c. 432]: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The table following gives details of single payments under regulation 28 (costs where supplementary benefit is not paid or not claimed) up to 1984 the latest year for which data are available. Information is not readily available on the average payment for each separate category of claimant, nor on the number of payments to the long-term unemployed; and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Notes

1. The ASE data are derived from an analysis of a sample of cases and are therefore subject to "sampling error". Where the number of cases is less than 1,000 the effect of "sampling error" may be quite large. Further information can be found in the"Introduction to the Annual Statistical Enquiry", (particularly page 3 "Single Payments", and page 5 "Sampling Effects") a copy of which can be found in the House of Commons Library.
2. The Current regulation 28 was regulation 26 at the time of the 1981 ASE.
3. *less than 1,000
4. †less than 500
5. Rows may not sum to total due to rounding.
6. The information in the table relates to single payments made in the 12 months preceding the date of the Annual Statistical Enquiry to those in receipt of benefit at the time of the inquiry. As a result it does not record all the single payments made during the year.

Suicides

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many suicides have occurred in each year since 1974 amongst 16 to 19-year-olds, 20 to 21-year-olds and over 25-year-olds, giving figures for males and females separately.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 433]: The exact information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. The readily available information is given in the table.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Increases

Mr. Hubbard-Miles asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report taxes that have been raised in the United Kingdom since 1979 specifically for distribution to, and the financial benefit of, one sector of industry.

Mr. MacGregor: A number of levies involve raising money from an industry which is then deployed for the benefit of that industry; these are not treated as taxes. Examples are the Industrial Training Board levies and the Milk Marketing Board levy. The only levy I have identified which might meet the criteria set out by my hon. Friend and which is counted by the Central Statistical Office as a tax for national accounts purposes is the London Regional Transport levy which represents a partial recovery from London rating authorities by the Secretary of State for Transport of his grant to London Regional Transport.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for which employers in Northern Ireland the Fair Employment Agency has chosen, under part II, section 13(5)(a) or (b) of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976, to revoke or modify directions previously given under subsection 2(i) or 2(ii).

Dr. Boyson: I understand from the chairman of the Fair Employment Agency that while discussions on revocation or modification have taken place with some employers the agency have not formally served notice as required under section 13(6).

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many subscribers there were in Northern Ireland to the register of equal opportunity employers and organisations for each quarter since the enactment of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976, broken down by standard industrial classification; how many of such subscribers previously declined to become signatories to the Fair Employment Agency's declaration of principle and intent; and how many of such subscribers have been removed from the register each quarter since the enactment of the legislation.

Dr. Boyson: The table gives the numbers of new subscribers in each quarter:

I understand from the chairman that the Fair Employment Agency does not now list subscribers by standard industrial classification, a practice which ceased in 1981. A copy of the 1981 register of employers by classification is available in the Library. No figures are available for the numbers of subscribers who previously declined to become signatories to the declaration. No subscribers have been removed from the register.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what are the employers, excluding vocational organisations, for which the Fair Employment Agency (Northern Ireland) has completed or initiated formal investigations; what findings were made in each case; and which of the employers are signatories to the Fair Employment Agency's declaration of principle and intent; and when they became signatories;

(2) if he will list the numbers of investigations carried out and complaints received by date by the Fair Employment Agency under part III, section 17*(a)(b), section 18(1)(2), section 19(a)(b)*, section 20, section 22 and section 23; and if he will state the outcome in each case;

(3) to list those employers or departments in the case of public authorities in the Civil Service where a finding of failure to afford equality of opportunity has been made by the Fair Employment Agency, following an investigation under section 12 of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976 or a finding of unlawful discrimination in the case of an individual complaint for each year since the introduction of the Fair Employment Act.

Dr. Boyson: The information sought by the hon. Member is contained in the agency's annual reports, the reports of published investigations and the register of equal opportunity employers and organisations which are in the Library.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide estimates for the average length of time taken to conduct an investigation under (a) part II section 12 and (b) part II section 22, of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976; and if he will list the numbers and type of investigation carried out, and their start and competition dates.

Dr. Boyson: I have been advised by the chairman of the Fair Employment Agency that information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. Some relevant information can be obtained from the agency's annual reports, which are in the Library.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number and type of cases referred under the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976 to (a) the High Court, (b) the county court and (c) the number of findings upheld or overturned by each court.

Dr. Boyson: The table sets out details supplied by the Fair Employment Agency.

Appeals to County Court	Total	Findings upheld	Findings overturned	Pending
Appeal by respondent under section 28(2)	12	2	6	4
Appeal by complainant under section 28(3)	6	2	1	3
Total	18	4	7	7

No cases have been referred to the High Court.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the cases (a) in which an employer has made a compensation payment to a complainant and state the sums involved in each case, (b) the original date of each settlement as compared to the eventual date of payment and (c) specify the number of cases and amounts involved where the Fair Employment Agency has acted as a guarantor to a financial institution for an individual or paid the compensation itself, pending payment by the respondent.

Dr. Boyson: I understand from the chairman of the Fair Employment Agency that there have been 18 cases, the details of which are in the table:

Case	Amount £	Settled	Paid
C44/77	3,000	30 November 1982	21 December 1982

C330/84	2,000	5 March 1986	10 April 1986

The Fair Employment Agency has neither acted as a guarantor nor paid compensation from its own funds in anticipation of a settlement.

Discrimination

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Government intend to release the report of the review of initiatives on employment discrimination and inequality in the Northern Ireland Civil Service announced in his reply to a question on 3 July 1985, Official Report, column 161, and which he announced in a reply on 12 November 1985, Official Report, column 129, would be published early in 1986.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to the right hon. and learned Member as soon as possible.

Divis Flats (Rehousing)

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what offer has been made by the Catholic Church in Northern Ireland to release land for use by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for the rehousing of the present tenants of the Divis flats; what is the basis of such an arrangement; and when the land would become available.

Mr. Needham: I am not aware of any offer of land by the Catholic Church for use by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the rehousing of tenants of Divis Complex.

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans exist for the demolition of the Divis flats in Belfast; and what dates are planned for the completion of demolition and the completion of rehousing of the present residents of Divis.

Mr. Needham: Demolition of Pound block will begin shortly. St. Brendan's block will be demolished around the turn of the year. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive has made no plans for further demolition.

DEFENCE

Fylingdales (Early Warning System)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence in relation to the proposed modernisation of the Fylingdales early warning system, what account has been taken of the environmental impact of the proposed development on the landscape in the North York Moors national park; and what alternative sites have been investigated.

Mr. Freeman: Since we are proposing to modernise the existing ballistic missile early warning system at RAF Fylingdales, and not to construct an entirely new facility, alternative sites have not been considered. The modernised system will have a more compact, less visible profile than the present installation, but the environmental impact will be one of the issues to be discussed with the North Yorkshire moors national park committee in accordance with the normal planning procedures.

Richard Dix (Letter)

Mr. Douglas Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he proposes to reply to the letter dated 5 June and written to him by Richard Dix of Heathfield, Gorse Hill Lane, Caythorpe, near Grantham.

Mr. Lee: Mr. Dix's letter to my Department is being considered, and a reply will be sent as soon as possible.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there has been any recent change of policy regarding the standard of proof required as regards verification necessary for an effective comprehensive test ban treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No. We are looking for adequate verification that is sufficiently reliable to give confidence to all sides. The detailed requirements were set out by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the Adjournment debate on 26 March at columns 1047-52.

Armed Forces (Purchases)

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the total amount of purchases of goods and services made by the armed forces; and what proportion of the total was supplied by the private sector.

Mr. Lee: The information required to answer the question is not held in the form requested and to gather it would require the expense of a disproportionate amount of time and effort.

Trident

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence at what stage of completion Trident submarines, excluding missiles, will be (a) in one year's time and (b) in two year's time.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated that HMS Vanguard, which was ordered in April this year, will be approximately one third complete in two years' time. No other Trident submarines have yet been ordered.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the total cost of Trident will have been spent (a) one year from now and (b) two years from now.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to the answer given by the then Minister of State for Defence procurement the right hon. Member for Bosworth (Sir A. Butler) to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 21 June 1985 at columns 247-248. It is not the practice to give forecasts of cost profiles for projects on a year by year basis.

Arms Trade

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the figures for employment generated by Britain's arms trade and the basis for his Department's calculation of such figures.

Mr. Lee: Some 120,000 jobs were directly sustained last year by British defence exports. This figure is based upon the totals for such exports appearing in column 2.8 of volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763) divided by the estimated average output per head in the main defence industries.

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the industries and companies contributing to the United Kingdom arms trade.

Mr. Lee: The main companies concerned appear in the "British Defence Equipment Catalogue 1986", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Arms Control

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has undertaken into the conversion of arms production into civil production in the event of international arms control and reduction agreements.

Mr. Lee: No such studies have been undertaken by the Ministry of Defence.

Written Answers to Questions

PRIME MINISTER

Merchant Navy

Q36. Sir David Price asked the Prime Minister what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the minimum size of the British Merchant Navy necessary to be maintained for reasons of national defence; and what measures she intends to take to ensure that this minimum is sustained in future years.

The Prime Minister: At present the United Kingdom registered merchant fleet numbers some 656 ships. The requirement for merchant vessels to support Her Majesty's forces in time of tension or war is kept under continuous review. If deficiencies seem likely to arise, action will be taken appropriate to the type of vessel concerned.

La Belle Discotheque, Berlin

Q41. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have received, either before or since 15 April, any evidence alleging the involvement of individuals or Governments of countries other than Libya in the bombing of La Belle discotheque in Berlin on 5 April; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The German authorities are continuing their investigations, but there is no evidence of involvement of individuals or Governments of countries other than Libya in the bombing of La Belle discotheque.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 July.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 July.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 July.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 3 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall attend a dinner given by the President of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Disabled Persons (Conductive Education)

Mr. Ashley asked the Prime Minister what steps she is taking to increase co-ordination between the Department of Education and Science and the Department of Health and Social Security concerning conductive education for severely disabled people; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Conductive education is the subject of frequent discussion between the Department of Education and Science and the Department of Health and Social Security.

Officials of both Departments are jointly discussing with the Spastics Society a proposed study of current provision and an evaluation of the implications of wider development of conductive education in this country.

Drinking and Driving

Mr. Frank Field asked the Prime Minister if she has any proposals to improve ministerial co-ordination of policy on the misuse of alcohol and its resulting road traffic offences; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government attach high priority to reducing the incidence of drinking and driving. I believe that current ministerial arrangements are generally satisfactory for this purpose. However, one of our objectives in establishing the review of road safety policy, now nearing completion, was to consider whether any organisational changes might facilitate progress in road safety generally or in any particular aspects of it.

ENVIRONMENT

Hampton Court Palace (Fire)

Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received the report of the inquiry by Sir John Garlick into the role of his Department in relation to the fire at Hampton Court Palace on 30-31 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. I have recently received Sir John's report. Sir John was asked in April by my predecessor "to report on the discharge of the functions of the Secretary of State for the Environment in relation to Hampton Court Palace in the light of the events of 31 March 1986, with particular reference to—

(i) Maintenance.
(ii) Fire precautions.
(iii) The action taken when the fire was discovered, and to make recommendations."

I have this afternoon placed copies of this report in the Libraries of both Houses. There have been some very minor deletions for security reasons. They are indicated by asterisks.

The report refers to evidence that indicates that the fire started within an hour or two of midnight in the main bedroom of Lady Gale's apartment and that the cause of the fire was probably a naked flame.

The fire was discovered as the result of an intruder alarm being activated at 5.20 am. The automatic fire detection system did not operate until about 6.15 am. The delay in the discovery of the fire was a material factor in the extent of the damage that ultimately occurred.

Sir John concluded that earlier discovery would not have averted the death of Lady Gale. He also concluded that little blame attached to the custody officers or other staff at the palace. He praised their devotion and courage and that of the palace staff and the salvage squad in seeking to protect life and property once the fire was discovered.

Sir John said that the evidence did not enable him to establish with any certainty why the fire was not discovered earlier. He considered that the most likely cause of the apparent delay in the operation of the fire alarm was that part, or even all, of the automatic fire detection system had inadvertently been rendered inoperative. He criticised the arrangements that allowed an alarm system with design shortcomings to be installed, and then handed over with a less than adequate commissioning process.

Sir John described the exercise of responsibility at Hampton Court palace, divided among different parts of the Department of the Environment, as contributing significantly to the unsatisfactory state of affairs that had developed by the time of the fire. He recommended that responsibility and accountability for Hampton Court should be more clearly located among officials of the Department of the Environment. He also commented on the division of responsibility between the Department of the Environment and the Royal Household and recommended that consideration should be given to achieving a more unified basis of decision-making and authority at Hampton Court palace.

Sir John considered that the most immediate improvements in security against fire would be achieved by implementing 12 recommendations concerning technical improvements to the automatic fire detection system and changes in the procedures for its use and in the training of the staff concerned.

I am putting the procedural changes recommended by Sir John into immediate effect. I have set in hand an urgent evaluation by experts of the technical recommendations; the necessary changes will be implemented as soon as possible; some have already been set in train. I am urgently considering the conclusions and recommendations in the report relating to responsibility and accountability upon which I shall consult with the Lord Chamberlain, as appropriate. As soon as this consideration is concluded, I shall report to the House what further steps I propose to take to improve the security of Hampton Court palace and its management generally.

I deeply regret the fire and the loss of life and the damage it caused and I am determined that the lessons we can learn from it shall be applied to all other historic buildings in the care of the Department.

I am grateful to Sir John Garlick for his thorough report.

London Docklands

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes are currently under construction or creation by conversion in the area of the London docklands; how many are for sale and for rent, respectively; and of those for sale, what proportion will cost less than £40,000.

Sir George Young: A total of 3,282 homes are currently being constructed or created by conversion on sites owned by the London Docklands Development Corporation. Of these 2,846 are intended for owner-occupation, of which about a quarter will be priced at or below £40,000. The remaining 436 homes are intended to be rented. Homes are also under construction on other sites within docklands not in LDDC ownership, but no figures are available.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department has given to the London residuary body about whether it is a public or private landlord.

Mr. Tracey: Schedule 13 to the Local Government Act 1985 (which was amended by schedule 2 to the Housing (Consequential Provisions) Act 1985) sets out how the residuary bodies are to be treated for purposes of various enactments. No specific guidance as to the role of the London residuary body as a landlord has been considered necessary.

Catholic Chapel, Biddlestone

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Catholic chapel at Biddlestone, near Harbottle, Northumberland, has been listed since 18 May 1984.

Mr. Tracey: No.

Land Bank (Southampton)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the acreage of the land bank within the city of Southampton held by (a) Southampton city council, (b) Hampshire county council, (c) British Rail, (d) any other public bodies and (e) Associated British Ports.

Sir George Young: My Department does not hold information about land banks. What is recorded in the land register is unused and underused land in the ownership of public bodies. There are 96 acres of such land within the city of Southampton, 49 acres owned by Southampton city council, 35 acres by Hampshire county council and 12 acres by the British Railways Board.

Wind Damage

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what statistics have been produced by the Building Research Establishment in each of the last seven years to indicate the extent and cost of wind damage to buildings in the United Kingdom in respect of roofs, sections of wall, electricity pylons, cooling towers and sports grandstands.

Sir George Young: Statistics have been produced by BRE in each of the last seven years relating to the extent and cost of damage to buildings in the United Kingdom due to the wind (and not other causes). The statistics form part of a continuing survey of reports of wind damage started in 1962. Information from the last seven years has been published in:

Performance of buildings in the United Kingdom. N. J. Cook
Engineering Structures, Vol 6, October 1984, pp 248-255.
The designer's guide to wind loading of building structures. N. J. Cook. Butterworths, 1985. ISBN 0-408-00870-9.

Overall, during the last seven years, there have been wind damage reports from some 2,900 different locations in the United Kingdom, the number of buildings involved varying from one to several hundred at each location. During that same period, 20 people have been killed and nearly 300 have been injured as a result of the wind damage to the buildings. The total cost of the damage has varied considerably from year to year. On average since 1962, some 200,000 buildings are damaged each year by high winds at an annual cost of about £35 million (1986 prices).

The estimated total cost of all wind damage to buildings during the last seven years, together with the number of reports received in respect of specific categories—roofs, walls of buildings, electricity pylons, cooling towers and sports grandstands—is given below.

	1979 £ million	1980 £ million	1981 £ million	1982 £ million	1983 £ million	1984 £ million	1985 £ million
Estimated total cost of all wind damage to buildings (1986 prices)	12	2	9	11	23	62	2
Number of reports of damage to:
Roofs	222	43	336	352	773	3,101	44
Walls of buildings	62	17	33	50	112	262	7
Electricity pylons	—	—	—	—	4	3	—
Cooling towers	—	—	—	—	1	2	—
Sports grandstands	1	—	1	2	10	18	—

Subdivision of the total cost into those relating to each category cannot be made from the available information.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what design programmes have been produced for engineers by the Building Research Establishment to enable them to predict wind loading more accurately.

Sir George Young: In November 1985 BRE published a new book, "The designer's guide to wind loading of building structures" by N. J. Cook aimed at helping engineers predict wind loads more accurately. In December 1985, a suite of computer programs called STRONGBLOW was then produced as an extension to the information available in the book. STRONGBLOW is a user-friendly computer program suite in BASIC which generates design wind speed data accurately and reliably at any site for all wind directions and any height above ground for the assessment of wind loads on buildings. STRONGBLOW is orientated to sites in the United Kingdom but instructions are included to extend the scope to overseas sites. STRONGBLOW is available from BRE priced £300+VAT.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what surveys have been conducted by the Building Research Establishment to establish the extent to which buildings stand up to natural winds in the midlands, north and south of England; and what results have been produced.

Sir George Young: As part of the wind damage survey referred to in another question from the hon. Member answered today the location of all incidents has been recorded and, where possible, an estimate made of the wind speed at the time the damage occurred. The results of this assessment have been published in:

Performance of buildings in the United Kingdom, N. J. Cook. Engineering Structures, Vol. 6, October 1984, pp 248-255.
The designer's guide to wind loading of building structures. N. J. Cook. Butterworths, 1985. ISBN 0-408-00870-9.

In general it is noted that the wind speed at which damage starts to occur in the north of the United Kingdom are greater than in the south. This is due largely to variations of traditional building practices across the United Kingdom in response to geographical differences in wind climate.

The number of reports of damage since 1962 has not been sufficient to compare susceptibility of buildings to wind damage on a local regional basis. However, the reports have been divided into two sets, one for Scotland and northern England, the other for Wales and southern England. This division indicates that minor damage to building starts to occur at about 15 m/s in the South and 17·5 m/s in the North.

Homelessness

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families were placed in bed-and-breakfast type accommodation for homeless people in 1985 in Greater London.

Sir George Young: My Department collects from local authorities only figures of homeless households resident in bed-and-breakfast accommodation at the end of each quarter; this information is published regularly and is placed in the Library. As at 31 December 1985, there were 2,960 households resident in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in Greater London. Some information about households placed in such accommodation during the financial year 1984-85 is contained in "Homelessness Statistics, 1984-85 Actuals" published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy.

Shopping Areas (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to include in new or renegotiated leases for shops let by his Department near to the Palace of Westminster provisions relating to the quality and price of goods offered or exposed for sale and primarily intended for purchase by tourists: and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: It is intended to include provision for shops at ground floor level of the Bridge street frontage of the prospective redevelopment of that area. I have yet to consider on what conditions leases for these premises will be offered. I shall consult the Services Committee about the leasing arrangements in due course.

Housing Starts

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of council housing starts he anticipates that each London borough will commence during the year 1986-87 compared with the year 1980-81.

Sir George Young: My Department has made no such estimates.

Liverpool City Council (Rate Fixing)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of interest accrued to Her Majesty's Government as a result of payments being withheld from Liverpool city council during the period when that local authority delayed fixing a rate; and if this accrued interest was credited to the Liverpool city council on the final settlement of its rate.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not possible to give a figure since the calculation would depend on hypothetical assumptions about how central Government's financing would have been carried out in other circumstances.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total sum of money withheld by Her Majesty's Government from the Liverpool city council as a consequence of that local authority's delay in fixing a rate for 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Payment of some £8·2 million was held back because of the city council's delay in setting a rate in 1985-86.

Four central Government grants should not be paid before a rating authority has fixed its rate. These are:

(i) rate rebate subsidy;
(ii) grants towards rate relief for disabled persons and institutions;
(iii) compensation to local authorities for loss of rate income in enterprise zones; and
(iv) contributions in lieu of rates on Crown and diplomatic properties.

Payment of some £8·2 million of these grants to Liverpool city council was delayed in 1985-86 until after the council set a rate on 14 June.

Anti-litter Campaign

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the details of the anti-litter campaign to be headed by Mr. Richard Branson.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 20 June at column 651.

Degradable Plastics

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts are being made by his Department to encourage the development and use of degradable plastics by industry.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not the function of my Department to encourage the development of degradable plastics by industry. Rather it is for industry itself to seek out avenues of research and development. Such projects could be eligible for grant under the support for innovation scheme operated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

We would encourage the use of products which have environmental advantages provided they represented an economic and practical alternative to products already in use.

Hays Chemicals Ltd., St. Helens

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether compensation will be paid to (a) local residents for physical and material damage suffered and (b) local businesses for damages suffered by virtue of the emission and subsequent emergency procedures, as a result of the incident on 28 June at Hays Chemicals Ltd. plant, St. Helens.

Mrs. Rumbold: Although local authorities have powers to make grants or loans in the event of an emergency, questions about compensation for damage should be addressed in the first instance to those believed to be liable and/or their insurers.

Voluntary Organisations (Grants)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the programmes under which his Department and the non-departmental public bodies for which he is responsible offer grants to voluntary organisations.

Sir George Young: The Department of the Environment and its sponsored bodies have a wide range of grant programmes through which they assist the voluntary sector. The Department has just published a pamphlet outlining these grants which are given by the Department, Countryside Commission, Historic Building and Monuments Commission, Nature Conservancy Council and Sports Council. I have no doubt about the valuable role that is played by voluntary organisations across the entire spectrum of interests covered by the Department and its sponsored bodies. I am sure that voluntary organisations will find this leaflet a very useful guide when seeking support for their activities. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Housing Associations

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many homes were owned for rental by housing associations in England and Wales at the latest available date; and what were the figures for the same period for each of the last three years;

(2) how many homes have been built by housing associations for sale or shared ownership in each of the last three years;

(3) what is the total number of homes owned by housing associations at the latest available date; and what were the figures for the same period for each of the last three years.

Sir George Young: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Thames Water Authority

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made with plans to privatise the water authorities.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 25 June 1986, c. 309-11]: My consultations on privatising the water authorities have shown that, while preparations for their privatisation are well under way, more time is needed to prepare the necessary legislation. I have therefore concluded that we are unlikely to be able to introduce the Bill next Session.

I understand further powers may be needed to enable water authorities to prepare themselves for privatisation.

I reaffirm the Government's intention to proceed with water privatisation as soon as practicable.

Okehampton Bypass

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Dartmoor national park authority over the permanent siting of spoil heaps, arising from the construction of the proposed Okehampton bypass, within the boundaries of the national park.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply and will do so shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Kevin Taylor

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to his reply of 26 June to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, Official Report, column 267, what role the Director of Public Prosecutions has played in the investigations concerning Mr. Kevin Taylor, in so far as they relate to the matters in connection with which the deputy chief constable of Greater Manchester has been asked to take leave of absence; what action the Director of Public Prosecutions proposes to take on the preliminary report which he has received on the subject; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: The preliminary report concerning Mr. Kevin Taylor submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions was not intended to be, nor is it suitable as, a basis for advice as to possible charges; the role of the director has been to advise as to appropriate lines of inquiry. The investigation concerning Mr. Taylor is quite separate from that being conducted in relation to the deputy chief constable of Greater Manchester, and the nature and purpose of, and the issues involved in, the respective inquiries are different.

Northern Association of Sporting and Charitable Organisations

Mr. Thornton asked the Attorney-General if he will ask the Director of Public Prosecutions to institute proceedings against the Northern Association of Sporting and Charitable Organisations (NASCO) for breaches of the law relating to lotteries and the circumstance of the use for non-charitable purposes of the name of a well-known charity in the Merseyside area.

The Solicitor-General: The investigation of alleged criminal offences and the institution of proceedings is a matter for the police service which may seek the advice of the Director of Public Prosecutions in appropriate cases. The power conferred by section 3(2)(b) of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 on the director to institute proceedings himself is a reserve power which he may use in circumstances where the ordinary enforcement machinery appears to have failed or there are otherwise special circumstances why the proceedings should be instituted in his name. I am not aware of any circumstances which would justify the director doing so in the present case. I understand that the matters to which my hon. Friend refers are the subject of an investigation by the Merseyside police, and the decision whether to prosecute will be taken at the conclusion of the investigation, in accordance with the ordinary procedures.

SCOTLAND

Maternity Services (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest perinatal and neonatal mortality rates in the Rottenrow maternity hospital, Glasgow; and what are the figures for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John MacKay: The information on perinatal mortality rates is set out in the table. Information on neonatal mortality rates is not available centrally for individual hospitals.

Year	Rate per 1,000 births
1976	22·4
1977	18·1
1978	18·9

1981	15·0
1982	13·1
1983	7·6
1984	11·8
1985	10·3

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the main catchment areas for each of the maternity units in the city of Glasgow.

Mr. John MacKay: The Glasgow royal maternity unit provides a service to the east of Glasgow and also to some extent the Coatbridge/Airdrie area of Lanarkshire health board; the Stobhill maternity unit serves the north of Glasgow and the Cumbernauld/Kilsyth area of Lanarkshire; the Rutherglen maternity hospital serves south-east Glasgow and the East Kilbride area of Lanarkshire; the Southern general serves south-west Glasgow and the Renfrew and Argyll and Bute areas of Argyll and Clyde health board; and the Queen Mother's hospital serves west Glasgow and also some patients from the Renfrew area of Argyll and Clyde.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what size of maternity unit is envisaged on the site earmarked for such a unit in the plans for the Royal infirmary, Glasgow.

Mr. John MacKay: The Greater Glasgow health board has not yet submitted for approval its formal case for a new obstetric unit. The board has indicated that it plans to provide a 140-bed obstetric unit, to be located either at Stobhill or at the royal infirmary, Glasgow.

NHS (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average waiting time for patients on National Health Service waiting lists in Scotland in each year since 1978.

Mr. Rifkind: The mean waiting times (in days) for all in-patient treatment up to 1984 (the latest year for which statistics are available) were as follows:

Year	Days
1978	68
1979	79

Year	Days
1980	75
1981	73
1982	67
1983	98
1984	85

The general increases in 1979 and 1983 reflect the effect of previous industrial action.

Geriatric Beds

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the ratio of geriatric beds available under the National Health Service in Scotland to people aged over 60 years in each year since 1978.

Mr. Rifkind: The ratio of available staffed geriatric beds to people aged 60 and over is as follows:

	Ratio
1978	1:105
1979	1:102
1980	1:101
1981	1:99
1982	1:99
1983	1:97
1984	1:94
1985	*1:95

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table to show the average monthly count of persons registered as unemployed in Scotland, in each year since 1974 who were (a) school leavers and (b) aged 19 years and under.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 385-86]: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The following table gives annual average unemployment in Scotland from April 1974 to May 1986 for school leavers aged under 18 and from January 1979 to April 1986 for those aged 19 and under. Annual average unemployment figures are not available prior to January 1979 for those aged 19 and under. Because of various changes in the way unemployment statistics have been compiled over the period, the figures cannot readily be compared.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of people in Scotland, at the latest date, who have not been in full-time employment since leaving school; and how many of them are school-leavers from (a) 1986, (b) 1985, (c) 1984 and (d) 1983 or before.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 385-86]: The number of people in Scotland who, at May 1986, had not been in full-time employment since leaving school was 17,521. There is no information to indicate in which year they left school.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the average monthly count of persons registered as unemployed in Scotland for each year since 1974; and if he will give the percentage unemployment figure for each year.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 385-86]: The following table shows the annual average of the monthly count of unemployed persons claiming benefit in Scotland for each year from April 1974 to May 1986. Because of various changes in the way unemployment statistics have been compiled over the period, the figures are not directly comparable year by year.

Housing

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public sector houses, other than special needs houses, were built in each of the Scottish new towns in each year since 1974.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 314]: The information is not readily available in the form requested. The available information, for houses (other than special needs houses) built by development corporations in the new towns, is as follows:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Science and Mathematics

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many student places in universities and polytechnics in science, engineering and mathematics were unfilled in the last academic year.

Mr. Walden: Information on student places is not collected centrally. The University Grants Committee and the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education regularly monitor trends in student numbers and their relationship to planning totals. Such monitoring does not, however, extend to the numbers of empty places. Provision is also being made to monitor the engineering and technology programme and the effect this has on other similar courses.

Students (Industrial Sponsorship)

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out in tabular form the number and value of industrial sponsorships for home students in higher education in each year from 1970 to the latest available date.

Mr. Walden: The "University Statistics" shows that the following numbers of home university students were in receipt of financial support from industry and commerce between 1980 and 1984.

1. "Home" students are defined as those full-time students paying home fee rates (which includes some students domiciled in the EC) and all part-time students.
2. "Students" include those on full-time, part-time and sandwich courses and includes both undergraduates and postgraduates.

Figures for the years between 1970 and 1979 are not readily available. Information about the value of industrial sponsorships, and the number of home students in the public sector of higher education in receipt of such sponsorships, is not held centrally.

Higher Education

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students in (a) universities and (b) public sector institutions are now studying with the benefit of distance learning techniques; and what were the equivalent figures in each year from 1970 to the latest available date.

Mr. Walden: In November 1984, 460 advanced course students and 6,250 non-advanced course students were recorded as studying at further education colleges in England using distance learning.

The numbers of Open University undergraduate and associate students, all of whom use distance learning techniques, were as follows:

Calendar year	Thousands
1971	19·6
1975	53·5
1979	69·4

1981	67·0
1982	70·3
1983	73·8
1984	75·4
1985	76·4

The numbers of such students at universities, other than the Open University, and for earlier years at further education colleges are not available.

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total number of mature entrants into higher education in each year since 1974.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information for home full-time and sandwich initial entrants aged 21 and over to higher education in Great Britain is as follows:

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the older, mature participation index for higher education in each year since 1974.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Figures for the older mature participation index, which is defined as the number of home full-time and sandwich initial entrants aged 25 and over, expressed as a percentage of the population aged 25 to 34 in that year, are shown in the following table.

Older Mature entry indices to Higher Education in Great Britain

Note:

1. Due to a minor change in definition the figures for 1974 to 1978 are not strictly comparable with those for later years.

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what has been the total number of part-time students in higher education each year since 1970;

(2) what has been the total, full-time equivalent number of students in higher education each year since 1970.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information for selected years is as follows:

Notes:

1. Conversion factors vary in the different sectors and for different levels of course. For this table an illustrative factor of 35 per cent. has been used for all part-time students.

Civil-funded Research

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will undertake a review of the effects of Government expenditure cuts on civil-funded research carried out in universities and research establishments.

Mr. Walden: No. The Advisory Board for the Research Councils and the University Grants Committee advise my right hon. Friend on the financial needs of research undertaken in higher education and in research council establishments.

Scottish Universities (Funding)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet representatives of Scottish universities to discuss future funding of these institutions.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to meet representatives of Scottish universities.

Tertiary Colleges

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to which local education authorities have a single tertiary college, on multiple sites, with a single governing board.

Mr. Dunn: The only local education authority which currently provides all 16 to 19 education in a single tertiary college is the London borough of Richmond-upon-Thames. That college is on one site, and has a single governing body.

School Reorganisation

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to which local education authorities have reorganised their schools within the past five years and which have instituted different age ranges in schools in different parts of the authority.

Mr. Dunn: Full information on any changes in age range could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, but the list shows those local education authorities in whose areas major secondary reorganisations have been approved within the past five years.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy, when approving school reorganisations for the purpose of accommodating falling school rolls, to make available extra resources to deal with any problems arising from the transition from the existing organisation to the new one; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Priority is given in determining authorities' allocations of prescribed capital expenditure to projects resulting from approved statutory proposals. Budgeting for current expenditure is a matter for the individual authority.

Hampshire

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what study his Department has made of the transcript of Mr. Justice Taylor's judgment in the judicial review of decisions by the Hampshire local education authority, R. v. Hampshire Education Authority ex part J, 28 November 1985; what action he has now taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has considered the judgment in this case and has concluded that it is broadly in line with his Department's interpretation of the Education Act 1981. He has written to chief education officers and amendments will be made to the guidance contained in circular 1/83 in due course.

Universities (Revenue)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list what information the University Grants Committee has on the forecast surplus or deficit of revenue for 1986-87 for universities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Walden: I understand that this information was provided to the University Grants Committee in confidence. It has not been made available to the Department.

School Governors

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to which local authorities recruit or propose to recruit school governors on the basis of ethnic background.

Mr. Dunn: No information is collected on actual practice. I am looking into recent reports suggesting that the Inner London education authority intends to reserve certain governorships for ethnic minorities.

University Grants Committee

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what subjects he expects to discuss at his next meeting with the University Grants Committee.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend will be meeting the University Grants Committee on 10 July. He expects to discuss a wide range of issues about universities.

Universities (Grants)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish a list of the (a) learned bodies, (b) medical charities and (c) individuals with specialist knowledge which gave help to the University Grants Committee and its sub-committees in determination of recurrent grants to universities for 1986-87.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I understand that the main bodies which provided information and advice to the University Grants Committee and its sub-committees in their assessments of universities' research strengths were:

Agricultural and Food Research Council
Economic and Social Research Council
Medical Research Council
Natural Environment Research Council
Science and Engineering Research Council Engineering Council
Royal Society

Grammar Schools

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many grammar schools are provided by education authorities in England and Wales, and where they are located.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 26 June 1986, c. 249]: The number of grammar schools in local education authorities in England, as recorded in the annual census of schools in January 1986, are shown in the table. ENERGY

Electricity Prices

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to how the recent fall in electricity prices compares in the United Kingdom with other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Goodlad: Surveys conducted by the CBI in recent years have shown that the price of electricity to industrial users in the United Kingdom generally compares favourably with prices in other countries in the Community, except in France where consumers are reaping the benefits of a large nuclear power programme. I believe that this remains the position. The effects of movements in exchange rates has been to lessen the size of reductions in other countries in the Community in sterling terms, and in some cases has implied an increase in prices.

Oil and Gas Wells (Abandonment)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the discussions with the oil industry and other interests involved on the requirements for removal of (i) onshore and (ii) offshore oil and gas rigs and platforms and undersea equipment, and the requirement for sealing of wells on abandonment.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have had discussions with representatives from offshore oil industry organisations, and from fishermen's organisations on the Government's proposals for the abandonment of disused offshore oil and gas installations; my officials are continuing discussions with these organisations. No discussions have yet taken place on the question of the eventual removal of onshore oil and gas production facilities.

The requirements for the sealing of abandoned wells are well understood by the offshore operating companies and have been in operation for a number of years.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Energy what procedures are followed when it is proposed that (i) an onshore and (ii) an offshore oil or gas well is to be abandoned; and what proposed abandonments have so far been raised with his Department.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: When a company proposed to abandon a well onshore or offshore it must seek the Secretary of State's consent before commencing abandonment operations. The condition of the well and the proposed sealing arrangements are reviewed by my officials before giving consent. Over 1,000 offshore wells have been abandoned since exploration commenced in December 1964. A similar number of onshore wells have been abandoned.

EMPLOYMENT

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General what has been the value of the petrol component of the retail prices index for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Lang: Taking January 1974 as 100, the index figures for the "petrol and oil" component of the retail prices index for the 12 months to May were:

	Figures
14 May 1985	490·0
June 1985	488·3
July 1985	481·6
August 1985	478·6

Community Programme

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General how many community programmes were in operation (a) in 1985 and (b) in the current year; and how many of these were occupied (i) for the whole of the period of the programme and (ii) for part of the time.

Mr. Lang: It is not possible to give information in the form requested. However, at the end of May 1985, and at the end of May 1986 (the latest date for which statistics are available) the number of community programme projects and places were as follows:

	May 1985	May 1986
Projects operating	8,040	10,984
Places authorised	157,602	256,321

Hays Chemicals Ltd., St. Helens

Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General why no officer of Her Majesty's Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate was available to participate in Operation Cloudburst following an incident at Hays Chemicals Ltd., St. Helens, on Saturday 28 June; and when an officer of that establishment first made contact with St. Helens metropolitan council.

Mr. Trippier: The Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate did not become aware of the incident at Hays Chemicals Ltd., St. Helens, until Monday 30 June, on which date St. Helens metropolitan council was contacted.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to the age of the oleum tank that split at Hays Chemicals Ltd. plant, East Sutton, St. Helens on Saturday 28 June.

Mr. Trippier: Hays Chemicals Ltd. states that the tank was fabricated in 1969 and installed in 1970.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to what welding tests were carried out on welded seams of the oleum tank at Hays Chemicals Ltd. plant, East Sutton, St. Helens on 28 June.

Mr. Trippier: No tests were carried out on 28 June. Visual examination and non-destructive tests were carried out in November and December 1985.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to when the oleum tank that split at Hays Chemicals Ltd. plant, East Sutton, St. Helens on 28 June was last refurbished.

Mr. Trippier: Refurbishment was undertaken following the examination in November and December 1985.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to what certificate was issued, and by whom, after each refurbishment of the oleum tank that split at Hays Chemicals Ltd. plant, East Sutton, St. Helens on 28 June.

Mr. Trippier: No information is available at present.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to how many tanks of oleum are on the Hays Chemicals Limited site at East Sutton, St. Helens.

Mr. Trippier: There are four oleum tanks on site.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to whether the oleum tank that split at the Hays Chemicals Limited plant at East Sutton, St. Helens on 28 June was pressurised.

Mr. Trippier: The oleum tank is not normally pressurised. Preliminary investigations suggest that there was an accidental pressurisation on 28 June.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General (1) what information he has as to the temperature of the oleum in the tank that split at the Hays Chemicals Limited plant at East Sutton, St. Helens on 28 June at the time of the split;

(2) what information he has as to steps taken to keep oleum tanks at Hays Chemicals Limited plant, East Sutton, St. Helens within safe temperature control limits.

Mr. Trippier: No information is available at present.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to what warning devices are used on oleum tanks at Hays Chemicals Limited, St. Helens to give notice that a tank has split or is in any way in a dangerous condition.

Mr. Trippier: A contents level indicator was fitted to the tank.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General what regulations govern pressurised and non-pressurised tanks, including those containing oleum.

Mr. Trippier: It is not customary to store oleum in pressurised tanks. Tanks which operate at atmospheric pressure are not subject to any specific regulations. Tanks used for containing steam or air above atmospheric pressure and steam boilers are subject to sections 32 to 37 of the Factories Act 1961.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to what facilities there are for emptying tanks containing oleum at Hays Chemicals Limited, St. Helens.

Mr. Trippier: Rigid and flexible pipes and pumps are available for emptying oleum tanks into other static tanks or mobile road tankers.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Paymaster General (1) whether the site at Hays Chemicals Limited, East Sutton, St. Helens is governed by the Controls of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations.

(2) if he has any plans to designate installations that have tanks containing sulphur trioxide under Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard regulations.

Mr. Trippier: The site at present is subject to regulations 4 and 5 of the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 because an industrial activity is carried out there that involves sulphur trioxide which is a dangerous substance as defined in regulation 2(1).

A directive is expected to be adopted shortly which would require amendment to the CIMAH regulations. This would add sites with sulphur trioxide above a threshold quantity to the list of those to which the more stringent requirements in regulations 7 to 12 apply.

Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General if he will hold a public inquiry into the incident at Hays Chemicals Ltd., St. Helens, on Saturday 28 June in which a tank containing oleum fractured and sent a cloud of sulphuric acid mist over St. Helens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No. I will write to the hon. Member when the Health and Safety Executive has completed its investigation and place a copy in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radiation

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the likely long-term effects upon ewes in north Wales and Cumbria of exposure to radiation, and in particular how long such ewes are likely to give contaminated milk; whether movement to uncontaminated pasture would have a beneficial effect; and whether there is any risk of genetic mutations in sheep.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1986]: Results of monitoring data up to Wednesday 2 July show an encouraging reduction in radiocaesium levels in lamb in certain parts of the designated areas of south-west Cumbria which have been intensively sampled. The latest batch of results is being published today. On the basis of these results my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I will today be making a new order to come into effect at midnight under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to release certain areas from restriction while retaining restrictions on the remainder for a further three weeks.

A map showing the areas to be released has been placed in the Library of the House. It will free over 1,200 holdings, 549 with sheep, in Cumbria from restriction.

We hope to reduce further the size of the designated area in Cumbria as soon as additional sampling results confirm the expected fall in radiocaesium levels in the area still subject to restriction. The latest monitoring results are also being placed in the Library of the House.

In my statement on 20 June I said that, if it should prove to be necessary, the Government would be prepared to discuss cases of compensation for severe loss in particular circumstances to specific farmers. We have already had discussions with representatives of the farmer's unions on compensation and these will continue with a view to making a further statement as soon as we are in a position to do so.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the actions taken in response to the risk of radioactive contamination of food during May and June by his Department and by his counterparts in France, West Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium, Austria, Switzerland, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Poland and Czechoslovakia; and what arrangements were made for international co-ordination of precautions during the Chernobyl emergency.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 26 June 1986, c. 307]: As soon as news of the Chernobyl accident was reported my Department undertook monitoring which was intensified on and after 2 May when the cloud carrying radioactive material reached the United Kingdom. Other European countries also undertook monitoring. The extent of radioactive deposition varied depending on the length of time the cloud was overhead and rainfall during that time. Although the levels of radioactivity in foodstuffs in the United Kingdom have generally been well below the level at which action would need to be considered, levels of radiocaesium in young unfinished lambs, not yet ready for market, in certain areas of Cumbria and north Wales were sufficient to warrant the introduction of controls on movement and slaughter of sheep in these areas. I understand that a number of other European countries have had to institute similar controls on a range of their foodstuffs.

On 1 May the Department of Health and Social Security asked port health authorities to hold imports of certain foods from Poland and Russia for testing and extended this advice on 10 May to cover the range of foodstuffs from eastern bloc countries likely to be subject to a Community ban. The European Community reached agreement on 12 May on the imposition of a ban from 13 to 31 May on certain food imports, including fresh milk and milk products, and fresh fruit and vegetables from Bulgaria, Hungary, Poland, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia.

On 31 May, the ban was replaced by a Community regulation specifying maximum levels of caesium 134 and 137 in certain foods imported into the Community from third countries. The regulation expires on 30 September 1986. Procedures under the regulation allow for the issue in countries of origin, as part of the monitoring arrangements, of certificates to accompany consignments of foodstuffs confirming that the health standards required by the regulation are met. Discussions were held on 22-23 May by a group of Community scientists under article 31 of the Euratom treaty to discuss the trigger level for contamination of Community control measures.

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will place in the Library the results of radioactivity monitoring of sheep milk for 1 to 14 May for Cleveland, Cumbria, Durham and Northumberland;

(2) why no figures have been issued on the results of the monitoring of radioactivity in sheep milk in Cumbria between 3 and 14 May.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1986]: Immediately following the accident at Chernobyl the Ministry's monitoring programme concentrated upon cows' milk to ensure that there was no danger to human health from its consumption, particularly by infants. When we were satisfied that there was no hazard to health from cows' milk, my Department extended its monitoring to sheeps' and goats' milk to ensure that these, too, were safe for consumption.

The first results of monitoring of sheeps' milk in Durham and Cumria and Northumberland relate to samples taken on 12 and 14 May, respectively. These results were published in the data issued by my Department on 30 May and included in the compendium of data provided on 20 June which is in the House of Commons Library.

Fish Quotas

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the present European Community quotas for each type of fish imposed on the sea-fishing industries of each of the member states; and which of the quotas have been exceeded to date.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Fish Sizes

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken by Her Majesty's Government and other European Governments to ensure that no fish below the minimum size allowed to be caught are fished in European waters.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Persistent Plastics (Dumping Convention)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what methods are being used by Her Majesty's Government to monitor the effectiveness of the London and Oslo dumping convention in respect of persistent plastics.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Agriculture (Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the addition to national spending in consequence of the transfer of responsibility for agricultural spending from the European Economic Community to national Governments in the price review in respect of 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The decision to reduce the Community's reimbursement to member states for their national expenditure on intervention operations will cut Community expenditure by about 300 million ecu a year according to Commission estimates. As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) on 14 May the overall effect on United Kingdom public expenditure is expected to be broadly neutral.

Potato Marketing Scheme

Mr. Soames asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has decided to hold a public inquiry into the Potato Marketing Board's proposals to amend the potato marketing scheme.

Mr. Jopling: I and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales have carefully considered the objections we have received to the board's proposals. We have decided to direct that a public inquiry be held and have appointed His Honour Judge David Peck to be chairman. The inquiry will begin on 30 July and will be held in Church house, Westminster.

Food Additives

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines he proposes to issue to food companies regarding policy on the future use of food additives.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 2 July 1986]: I have no plans at present to issue specific guidelines to food companies regarding policy on the future use of food additives. The use of these substances is controlled by the Food Act 1984 and through specific regulations made under that Act and is based on the advice of expert committees and, where appropriate, implements Community controls.

WALES

Sheepmeat

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest information regarding the levels of radiocaesium in the parts of north Wales affected by the order made on 20 June prohibiting the movement and slaughter of sheep; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards [pursuant to his reply, 30 June 1986, c. 406]: Results of monitoring data up to Wednesday 2 July show an encouraging reduction in radiocaesium levels in lamb in certain parts of the designated area of north Wales which have been intensively sampled. The latest batch of results is being published today and a copy is being placed in the Library of the House.

On the basis of these results my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have today made a new order to come into effect at midnight under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to release certain areas, including south and west of the A5 in Anglesey and the Vale of Clwyd, from restrictions while retaining the remainder for a further 21 days.

A map showing the areas in Wales to be released has been placed in the Library of the House. It will free approximately 1,000 holdings in north Wales from restriction.

I am fully aware of the problems faced by those farmers still subject to restrictions and of the large numbers of lambs held on farms which are now ready to come to market. I hope to reduce further the size of the designated area in north Wales as soon as additional sampling results confirm the expected fall in radiocaesium levels in the area still subject to restriction.

I recognise that, now farmers in the newly released areas can market their lambs, there is a possibility that an abnormally high proportion of them may be rejected for variable premium through having become over fat because the restrictions have delayed their being marketed.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in his statement on 20 June, said that if it should prove to be necessary the Government would be prepared to discuss cases of compensation for severe loss in particular circumstances to specific farmers.

I have invited representatives of the farmers' unions to meet me next Monday for discussions on the effect of restrictions and on compensation. Their views will be taken fully into account. We hope to be in a position to make an early statement.

Conductive Education

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has issued any guidelines to local education authorities in Wales concerning the use of conductive education within their areas.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The introduction of conductive education, like other forms of special educational provision, would be a matter for consideration by local education authorities and individual schools.

Sheep (Restrictions)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) with which organisations representing farmers' interests he consulted prior to the announcement on 20 June of a 21-day ban on the movement of lambs in certain parts of Wales;

(2) on what dates he met representatives of (a) the Farmers Union of Wales and (b) the National Farmers Union to discuss either the possible introduction of a ban on lamb movements or the implications of such a ban on the farming community in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I met the chairman and deputy chairman of the National Farmers Union on 20 June about the imposition of the restrictions. Arrangements were made to inform the president of the Farmers Union of Wales at the same time.

The closest contact is being maintained with the farming industry and others both locally and centrally.

Radiation

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales at what centres, at what frequency and with what size of sample are radioactivity levels in sheep and lambs in Wales measured; and what is the estimated statistical accuracy of such tests.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Testing is being carried out at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food laboratories at Weybridge and Lowestoft and at other establishments in the public and private sectors. More than 500 sheep each week are currently being tested as part of the intensive monitoring programme. The statistical limits set will ensure that the prospect of sheepmeat with radiocaesium in excess of 1,000 becquerels/kilogramme level getting into the food chain is minimal.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he advised the public protection officers or trading standards officers of local authorities in Wales to be vigilant for any incidence of radioactive carcases of lamb on sale in butchers shops in their area.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The restrictions on the slaughtering and movement of sheep are specifically designed to prevent lambs with high radiocaesium levels reaching butchers' shops. There is no reason for the public to be afraid of buying and eating lamb in the shops. The attention of county emergency planning officers was drawn to the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) Order 1986 on 20 June. Subsequently further approaches have been made with a view to enlisting the aid of local authority officers in order to help Agriculture Department officials to check the movement of animals at livestock markets, showgrounds and slaughterhouses.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what measurements of bodily levels of radioactivity by body monitors, cytogenetic techniques and measurements of bodily excretions have been made by his Department.

Mr. Mark Robinson: No such monitoring is conducted by my Department although such measurements can be undertaken as part of the clinical care of patients utilising health service facilities.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what monitoring of the levels of radioactivity of estuarial silts have been made by his Department.

Mr. Mark Robinson: No such monitoring is conducted by the Department.

Radiation

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what monitoring of the levels of radioactivity of flotsam at sea has been made by his Department.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Monitoring of the marine environment around the Welsh coast for radioactivity, carried out by the Government, concentrates on fish, shellfish, beach silt and sand so as to represent the main pathways by which radioactivity discharged to sea may return to man. Flotsam does not constitute such a pathway and is therefore not regularly monitored around the Welsh coast.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the levels of radioactivity allowed for the disharge of low-level radioactive waste from establishments licenced to discharge such waste in Wales; and what the actual levels have been.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Authorisations for the disposal of radioactive waste are granted on a site specific basis and the levels of radioactivity prescribed vary accordingly. Guidance on the application of controls is set out in "Radioactive Substances Act 1960: A Guide to the administration of the Act", a copy of which is in the Library.

Actual discharge levels from premises subject to the provisions of the Nuclear Installations Act are published in numerous sources, including the Department's "Environmental Digest for Wales", a copy of which has been sent to the hon. Gentleman. Details of discharges from premises not covered by that Act are not maintained centrally. Such information is maintained as a condition of the authorisation and is subject to inspection by Her Majesty's Radiochemical Inspecorate.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the highest permissible levels of radioactivity for the sea around the coast of Wales; and what have been the actual levels in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Statutory controls are applied to discharges to sea from nuclear sites in order to ensure that the exposure of members of the public to artificial radiation is kept within internationally recommended limits. There are, therefore, no legal limits applying to the sea.

The results of monitoring in the marine environment around the Welsh coast carried out by the Government are published annually in a report entitled "Radioactivity in surface and coastal waters of the British Isles". Copies are placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the sources of radioactivity in the sea off the coast of Wales; and what proportion of the total each source contributes.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Levels of radioactivity in the sea around Wales vary with location, as do the relative contributions from different sources. However, Government scientists have estimated that, off the coast of north Wales, about 90 per cent. of the radioactivity in the sea originates from natural sources, whilst most of the remainder is attributable to discharges from BNFL Sellafield. The proportion of radioactivity originating from natural sources is greater further south, and along the mid-Wales coastline such radioactivity accounts for over 99 per cent. of the total activity present.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what testing is done to ascertain the levels of radioactivity in the environment in Wales; and by whom the testing is done.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Air, water, milk, fish and food are tested for levels of radioactivity in Wales. Analyses are carried out by the nuclear power stations and Amersham International (Cardiff) as a condition of their discharge authorisations, by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food as part of its programme of monitoring for radioactivity in the marine and terrestrial environments, by the National Radiological Protection Board, by the Atomic Energy Research Establishment, Harwell, and by HM Radiochemical Inspectorate.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales why the airborne radioactivity readings measured at Trawsfynydd station on the late evening of 2 May have been excluded from the data he has published to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: All monitoring data made available to the Welsh Office in response to the Chernobyl accident up to 15 May have been made available to the public, and none has been excluded.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what sites in Wales are licensed to use or to keep radioactive substances.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The CEGB power stations at Trawsfynydd and Wylfa, and Amersham International plc, Cardiff, are licensed under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965. In addition, under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, certificates of registration are issued in respect of premises for the keeping and use thereon of radioactive material. The Welsh Office index of such registrations is in the process of being computerised, and I am arranging for a copy of the provisional computerised list to be placed in the Library of the House within the next few days.

Prince Charles Hospital, Merthyr Tydfil

Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the average waiting time at Prince Charles hospital, Merthyr Tydfil, for operations in each of the categories of operations conducted at the hospital; and whether the review of waiting lists will include a specific analysis of the waiting lists at this hospital.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information on the average waiting times at Prince Charles hospital is available in the Welsh hospital waiting list bulletin 1986, No. 1, published on 23 June, a copy of which has been sent to the hon. Gentleman. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

Members of the Welsh Office catalyst team met representatives of Mid Glamorgan health authority on 30 June to consider the problem of waiting times at Prince Charles hospital. The team will be carrying out specific analyses of the most problematic waiting lists in conjunction with the health authority as a first stage in helping the authority to identify possible solutions.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Royal Wedding

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Royal Mint has any plans to commemorate the wedding of his Royal Highness Prince Andrew and Miss Sarah Ferguson on 23 July.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I am pleased to announce that approval has been given for the Royal Mint to issue a medal to commemorate the royal wedding. The obverse will show a portrait of Prince Andrew and Miss Sarah Ferguson and the reverse the rose window of Westminster Abbey.

EC (Value Added Tax)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his reply of 4 March, Official Report, column 94, a date has yet been fixed at the European Court of Justice for the application by the European Economic Community Commission for a declaration that the United Kingdom has breached the sixth directive by levying a zero rate on certain goods and services in relation to the levying of value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: A date has not yet been fixed. The Government's position remains as given in my answer of 4 March.

EC (Abatements)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in light of the paper produced on 22 May by the Vice President of the European Economic Community Commission, it remains the position of Her Majesty's Government that they are permitted to deduct their abatements or revised abatements from the United Kingdom's contributions to the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The paper produced by Vice-President Christophersen on 22 May (the 1986 Preliminary draft supplementary and amending budget) has no effect on the United Kingdom's right to continue to deduct the 1400 mecu abatement already contained in the 1986 budget. It simply proposes to increase the abatement provision by 500 mecu to 1900 mecu.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to introduce measures to permit building societies to offer personal equity plans to the public.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government believe that building societies have a potentially important role to play in encouraging the growth of wider share ownership through the personal equity plan scheme announced by my right hon. Friend in his Budget speech. To this end, the Government will be introducing amendments to the Building Societies Bill which would give the societies power to undertake investment business for the purpose of providing personal equity plans. This will enable the societies to be plan managers and to offer a wide range of schemes which will be possible under the Government's proposals. The power will be available only to those building societies with commercial assets of £100 million or more, and the business will have to be undertaken by a subsidiary of the society which may be wholly owned or a joint venture with another investment business, and which will require authorisation under the financial services legislation. Societies under the £100 million threshold will be free to market plans on behalf of a plan manager.

The amendments will be tabled as soon as possible.

EC (Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received a copy of Commission document No. 7113/86 issued by the Vice President of the Commission concerning the adequacy of their own resources of the European Community within a 1·4 per cent. rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Yes. It was deposited under cover of an explanatory memorandum on 17 June 1986.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he intends to take to seek to ensure that the Commission of the Common Market restricts its spending to the legal limit imposed by the 1·4 per cent. value added tax rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The 1·4 per cent. VAT ceiling is enshrined within the Community's new own resources decisions, which have treaty status. The Community is bound to keep its spending within this ceiling unless and until member states agree unanimously to change it, with the consent of their Parliaments.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy not to accept liability for expenditure incurred by the European Economic Community Commission in excess of the legal limits of spending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I think it is highly unlikely that such an eventuality will arise. The Commission is subject to public audit by the Court of Auditors.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to secure parliamentary approval before any supplementary or amending European Economic Community budget is implemented for 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Council and the European Parliament will be trying next week, in the light of the European Court's judgment this morning, to reach quick agreement on a new and valid budget for 1986. I regret, therefore, that there will be no opportunity for prior debate in the House. I have written to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) and my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins), about this.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the authorised limits on European Economic Community spending in 1986; and what spending commitments for 1986 have been agreed by the European Economic Community Commission.

Mr. Brooke: The authorised limits on commitments and payments this year are subject to the outcome of the Council's case against the European Parliament's adoption of a disputed budget for 1986. We expect to receive the judgment of the European Court of Justice on 3 July.

No figures are available for the total commitments entered into by the Commission so far during 1986.

TRANSPORT

Safety Barriers

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about methods and materials used in Europe and the United States of America for the construction of barriers to prevent cross-over accidents on motorways and other roads; what information he has as to their efficiency in terms of the trend in the number of cross-over accidents in those countries; if any such method or materials are currently being considered for introduction in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information available indicates that most European countries make extensive use of steel safety fences of a similar design and construction to those used on roads in this country. A few European countries have installed lengths of concrete safety barriers on some roads. No statistical information is readily available on the efficiency of safety fences or barriers in other European countries in preventing crossover accidents. The extensive use of steel safety fences implies confidence in their performance.

Extensive use is made of concrete barriers in the United States of America, where they are found to be reasonably successful in preventing crossover accidents for the types and speeds of vehicles used in that country. In England concrete barriers are permitted on roads with speed limits up to 50 mph. The Department has a programme of research and development on safety fences and barriers. There are no plans at present to introduce any major changes to their design or construction. I will write to the hon. Member to give more detailed information on concrete barriers.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what sums have been spent by the transport road research laboratory on investigating concrete safety barriers in the past 12 months; and what conclusions have been drawn as to the scope for preventing cross-over accidents on British motorways and trunk roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: £150,000 was spent on an investigation, including a series of full-scale impact tests, completed in May 1985. Nothing has been spent in the past 12 months. Some aspects of performance were unsatisfactory and potential design improvements were identified. An estimated £70,000 will be spent on tests of a modified barrier design, beginning this month. I shall write to the hon. Member with details of the conclusions drawn from tests to date.

Estuarial Crossings

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has of the annual cost over the next five years of accepting the proposals of the Transport Committee that Her Majesty's Government should buy in the debts of the existing estuarial crossings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Committee's report and its assessment of the cost of the proposals is under detailed consideration. A response will be sent to the Committee shortly.

Travel Cards

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set a service objective for London Regional Transport such that no passenger has to wait more than 15 minutes before being able to purchase a travel card; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am encouraging the development of service standards for the underground, but their detailed formulation is a matter for the management, taking into account the results of market research.

Tankers (Re-routeing)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail the further steps he proposes to take concerning the re-routeing of tankers out of the Minch and west of the Hebrides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Following the confirmation by surveys completed last year under the Government's civil hydrography programme that there is a route suitable for deep draught vessels to the west of the Outer Hebrides, I have decided to seek formal approval from the International Maritime Organisation for a deep water route in the area surveyed. If accepted, this will mean that the route will be prominently marked in magenta on charts of the area issued by all nations, which will also carry a recommendation that large tankers should use the route in preference to passing through the Minches. I am confident that the IMO's adoption of the proposed route will greatly assist in attracting tanker traffic away from the Minches.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will extend the terms of reference of the joint consultative committee examining the environmental impact of the Channel tunnel to include London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The joint consultative committee to which the hon. Member refers consists principally of representatives of Kent local authorities, and focuses on problems in Kent. The specific effects of the scheme in London are all connected with alterations to the railway. BR is consulting interested parties, and I have met local residents in the Waterloo area with the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Mr. Holland).

NORTHERN IRELAND

Security

16. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the current security situation.

18. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current security situation.

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current security situation.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply that I gave to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) earlier today.

Political Talks

17. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by what methods he intends to consult leaders of political opinion in Northern Ireland, following the dissolution of the Assembly.

Mr. Tom King: I shall ensure that party leaders in Northern Ireland and interested Members of this House representing Northern Ireland constituencies receive the proposals for draft orders and other consultation documents which would have been sent to the Northern Ireland Assembly. As always, my ministerial colleagues and I will be willing to discuss their concern.

New Companies

19. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the net number of new companies formed in Northern Ireland in the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Dr. Boyson: The most comprehensive information on the formation of new businesses in Northern Ireland is that derived from VAT records. In 1984, the most recent year for which figures are available, the net increase in the number of VAT registrations in Northern Ireland, was 1,100. Information on new company registrations is available from the Registrar of Companies for Northern Ireland. During the period April 1985 to March 1986 there was a net increase of 179 in the number of registered companies.

NHS (Funding)

20. Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the impact of Health Service funding in Northern Ireland for the financial year 1986-87 will be on jobs and services for each of the health and social services boards.

Mr. Needham: The increases in revenue allocations to Health and Social Services Boards in 1986-87, together with the funds realised by their cost improvement programmes, should enable boards to meet pay and other pressures while still allowing a range of valuable service developments to proceed. The precise impact on jobs will depend on the content of boards' final operational plans, including their cost improvement programmes.

Subsidies

21. Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the latest total annual cost of all subsidies to Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: The subvention, defined as the difference between revenue raised in Northern Ireland and total public expenditure in Northern Ireland, excluding the extra cost of the Army's task and certain receipts and refunds, is expected for 1985-86 to be around £1,533 million.

Prisoners (Costs)

22. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state the cost of keeping a prisoner in jail in Northern Ireland as compared with keeping such a prisoner in a special compound.

Mr. Scott: The average cost of keeping a prisoner in Northern Ireland was £727 per week during 1985-86 or £838 per week when Prison Department headquarters and other central costs are included.

The average cost of keeping a prisoner in the compound accommodation at HM prison, Maze, was £1,325 per week during 1985-86.

With the reduction in special category prisoners, now 118, the compound and cellular accommodation at HM prison Maze is now being managed as one unit under the control of one governor. The use of central administrative and other facilities for prisoners housed in both types of accommodation should reduce the future cost of keeping prisoners in compound accommodation.

Democratic Forum

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with the Northern Ireland political parties about a democratic forum.

Mr. Tom King: As I informed my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison) on 30 June 1986, at columns 391-92, I have recently met the leaders of the Social Democratic and Labour and Alliance parties. To my regret the leaders of the Ulster Unionist and Democratic Unionist parties have not yet accepted my offer of dialogue with the Government.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subjects he expects to be discussed at the next meeting with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Scott: The next meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference will discuss relations between the security forces and the community, electoral matters and economic and social issues, including international support for the promotion of economic and social development in both parts of Ireland. The conference will also hear further reports on legal matters and cross-border security co-operation.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Dealer McDope (Board Game)

Sir Edward Gardner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ban the sale in the United Kingdom of an American board game Dealer McDope which is based on drugs and drug dealing.

Mr. Mellor: I have seen press reports of this game, which appears to be most distasteful. We have no present plans to prohibit its sale, but we shall monitor developments.

Motorists (Traffic Lights)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure better motorist compliance with traffic light signals in the Metropolitan area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The enforcement of road traffic legislation within the Metropolitan police district is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Community Radio

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will compensate those community groups who responded to the Government's invitation to bid for 21 experimental community radio licences for the full costs of the preparation of the submission of application, now that the experiment has been cancelled.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The guidance notes sent to prospective applicants made clear that they were not expected to incur the cost of elaborate applications. Nevertheless, I will consider the issues raised by the hon. Member, and respond more fully in due course.

Police Officers (Personal Injury Compensation)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims for personal injury compensation because of negligence have been made by policemen and women in the last year for which figures are available; what was the total amount paid out to those who won their cases; what proportion of the cases have been concluded; what proportion have been lost; and what proportion are still not concluded.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not held centrally.

Carter Street Police Station

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many occasions in the past five years compensation has been paid to people as a result of misconduct by officers based at Carter street police station, S.E.17; and how much was paid on each occasion.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many disiciplinary proceedings have been taken in the last five years against police officers based at Carter street police station, S.E.17, for misconduct relating to the public; and what was the outcome of such proceedings.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Hays Chemicals Ltd. St. Helens

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why no medical personnel from the St. Helens and Knowsley district health authority were included, or were part of, the emergency services who participated in Operation Cloudburst following an incident at Hays Chemicals Ltd., St. Helens, on Saturday 28 June.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that ambulance officers in attendance were able to deal with the incident without seeking further aid.

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Merseyside as to why the police denied councillors access to their constituents who reside in the area adjacent to Hays Chemicals Ltd., St. Helens, following an incident at the plant which necessitated the declaration of Operation Cloudburst on Saturday 28 June.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The area referred to was threatened by a cloud of sulphuric acid vapour following a leak at the plant. I understand the police advised the public, including some local councillors, not to enter the area for their own protection.

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the efficiency of the emergency services which participated in Operation Cloudburst following an incident at Hays Chemicals Ltd., St. Helens, on Saturday 28th June.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Yes. I understand that by rapid implementation of their contingency plans, the emergency services contained this incident quickly and effectively.

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why no officers of the metropolitan borough of St. Helen were included in the emergency services who participated in Operation Cloudburst following an incident at Hays Chemicals Ltd., St. Helens, on Saturday 28 June.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The initial response to any emergency is made by the fire brigade, ambulance service and police, as appropriate. Others need to be involved only when there is a specific contribution for them to make.

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which individual was in overall control of the emergency services in St. Helens on Saturday 28 June following the declaration of Operation Cloudburst following an incident at Hays Chemicals, St. Helens; and if he will make a statement on the implications for emergency service cover to other chemical plants in the area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In accordance with normal practice, the emergency services' response was co-ordinated by the senior police officer present, the divisional chief superintendent. As to the implications for emergency service cover for other plants in the area, the speed and efficiency of their response in this case demonstrated the effectiveness of their normal contingency plan for this sort of incident.

Births in Custody

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many women gave birth while remanded in custody in each year from 1980 to 1985;

(2) how many women who gave birth while remanded in custody subsequently received a custodial sentence in each year from 1980 to 1985;

(3) how many prisoners serving sentences of (a) one to six months, (b) six months to one year, (c) one year to 18 months, (d) 18 months to two years, (e) two years to three years, (f) three years to four years and (g) more than four years gave birth during their sentences in each year from 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Open Prisons

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) female and (b) male prisoners were accommodated in open prisons in each year from 1980 to present.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information which is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (table 1.2 of the latest issue, Cmnd. 9622 for 1984) is given in the table.

Average population of open prisons in England and Wales: by sex, 1980-85
Number of persons

	Males	Females
1980	3,190	422
1981	3,013	347
1982	3,094	331
1983	3,105	319
1984	2,971	308
1985	3,194	336

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners were eligible for accommodation in open prisons in each year from 1980 to date.

Mr. Mellor: Since allocation to an open prison depends upon a number of factors including a prisoner's security category, his or her medical condition, and suitability for the type of accommodation available (typically dormitories) and since at a number of open prisons there are agreements with the local authorities restricting the type of prisoner who may be sent there, it is not possible to give an accurate figure of the number of prisoners eligible for open prisons.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A female prisoners there were in each year from 1980 to date.

Mr. Mellor: The table sets out the information requested.

Category A female prisoners in custody: at 30th June

	Number
1980	7
1981	6
1982	4
1983	3
1984	3
1985	3
1986	*1

* In addition there were 3 provisionally categorised A.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the training, education and recreation of female prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: In recent months various individuals and organisations have expressed views on the treatment of women prisoners, but my right hon. Friend has not received any representations directed specifically and solely to their training, education and recreation.

Recidivism

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) female and (b) male prisoners were sentenced to prison again within (i) six months, (ii) six months to one year and (iii) one year to two years of their original conviction in each year from 1980 to 1985;

(2) how many (a) female and (b) male prisoners were convicted of another offence within (i) six months, (ii) one year and (iii) two years of their release in each year from 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information relates to sentenced persons reconvicted within two years of discharge from a Prison Department establishment and is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales". (Information about those discharged in 1981 is given in tables 8.1, 8.3 and 8.5 of the latest issue, for 1984, Cmnd. 9622). Figures for persons released in 1982 will be published in the issue for 1985 and information about persons released in later years will be published in subsequent issues. Additional information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners (Injuries)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents there were of (a) male prisoners injuring other prisoners, (b) male prisoners injuring themselves, (c) female prisoners injuring other prisoners and (d) female prisoners injuring themselves in each year from 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Mellor: During the period 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985 there were 983 incidents of deliberate self injury by 921 male prisoners and 734 incidents of deliberate self injury by 461 female prisoners.

The other information requested is not available centrally.

Prisons (Drug Administration)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received regarding the variations amongst prisons as regards giving drugs;

(2) if he will publish Her Majesty's Government's guidelines for the giving of drugs to prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: Prison standing orders provide that whenever possible medicines will be administered under supervision and that no medicine should be administered for more than 28 days without the medical officer's further instructions. I am not aware of any recent representations about variations in local practice.

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were arrested or detained in each police authority area for each month since July 1985 under the Prevention of Terrorism Act; what was the length of time each person was held; with what offences they were charged; and how many were served with exclusion orders.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 16 June 1986, c. 415]: The quarterly information available is given in the tables. During the period covered by the tables one exclusion order was made against a person detained under the Act.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is gathered centrally regarding respite care schemes for severely mentally disordered adults.

Mr. Whitney: No information is collected centrally by this Department on respite care schemes for this group of people. Most local services are now making some provision for respite care and we understand that the Health Advisory Service and the good practices in mental health project, which receives funding from the Department, have some information about good local schemes which may be useful for service planners.

Mentally Handicapped and Mentally Ill People

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the standard of care of the mentally handicapped and mentally ill in hospitals and in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We are never complacent with regard to standards, which we are always seeking to improve.

In paragraphs 90-100 of the Government's response* to the report from the Social Services Committee on community care, we discuss guidance on standards, and the ways in which health and social services for mentally handicapped and mentally ill people are monitored in England. Central policies need to be implemented locally on the basis of local consultation, professional assessment of individual needs, and local circumstances. In England, the national development team for mentally handicapped people and the Health Advisory Service aim to help authorities to monitor and improve their activities and inform my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services of the state of those aspects of mental health services with which they are variously concerned. The Mental Health Act Commission's work is also relevant. No one can be satisfied with some of the gaps, weaknesses and prejudices to which they draw attention in their reports, but my colleagues and I learn from these and from our own visits and in other ways of good quality services and achievements that are real, widespread and encouraging. They show what can be done to make the best use of resources, and promote the spread of good practice by their example.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of approved posts by region for community psychiatric nurses, and how many of these posts were filled at the last convenient date.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that information on the number of approved posts for community psychiatric nurses or the number of nurses holding such qualifications in mental illness and mental handicap nursing is not available centrally. Information for the total nursing staff, in each region at September 1984, working in the community psychiatric and community mental handicap areas of work is shown in the table.

NHS (Services)

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health authorities operating an in-house laundry service have now awarded the tender for future service provision to a private firm; how many have now awarded contracts in-house; and how many have not yet awarded contracts.

Mr. Whitney: Seventeen district health authorities have awarded a total of 20 laundry contracts to private contractors. Fifty-six in-house laundry tenders have been successful in 52 district health authorities. I regret the information on the number of contracts still to be awarded is not available centrally. However, at 31 March 1986 tenders had been invited for 52 per cent. of the total value of laundry services.

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the total annual costs for each regional health authority for providing (a) laundry, (b) linen and (c) staff uniforms, including supply, replacement, maintenance and all overheads.

Mr. Hayhoe: Expenditure in 1984-85, as recorded in the annual accounts of regional and district health authorities, and special health authorities for the London post-graduate teaching hospitals, was as follows:

Region	Laundry Services £ million	Linen Services £ million
Northern	4·0	6·6
Yorkshire	4·7	8·6
Trent	5·1	10·0
East Anglian	2·6	4·3

South Western	4·0	7·3
West Midlands	6·3	12·1
Mersey	4·6	6·7
North Western	5·5	10·2
Special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals	0·8	1·7

Expenditure on staff uniforms is not recorded separately but is included in the figures for linen services. The figures include all direct pay and materials costs but not overhead expenses such as energy, transport and engineering maintenance, which are not apportioned between particular activities in the accounts.

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals to review the tendering procedures for laundry, cleaning and catering services within the National Health Service, in so far as health authorities tendering in-house adjudicate on all tenders submitted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Department reviewed the procedures for competitive tendering for laundry, cleaning and catering services last year. As a result of this review the chairman of the National Health Service Management Board issued further guidance to regional chairmen on 3 January 1986. A copy was placed in the Library. This includes the advice that the evaluation team assessing tenders should not include anyone who was directly responsible for putting together the in-house tender.

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much supplementary capital has been allocated to support services in-house tenders for laundry, cleaning and catering services since the competitive tendering process began.

Mr. Whitney: No specific provision is made for this in capital allocations to regional health authorities which relate to the population served and in small part to the state of regions' capital stock. (The latter element is now being phased out of the allocation formula).

It is for regional health authorities to allocate capital to their districts in accordance with agreed plans and programmes. In doing so they take account of any capital requirements for successful in-house tenders. Any such capital cases are reflected in the tender price. Information is not collected centrally on this expenditure.

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals to introduce competitive tendering for linen rental within the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Health authorities were sent specimen contracts and guidance notes for tendering for linen and garment rental services on 12 October 1984. This did not lead to the issue of tenders for linen hire and on 3 January 1986 the Department asked regional health authorities to encourage the districts to examine this option. I shall keep the situation under review.

General Practitioners

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many general practitioners worked in the National Health Service in each year since 1970.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following is the information for unrestricted principal general medical practitioners in England:

Doctors and Dentists

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors and dentists were employed in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1970.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested, expressed in both numbers and whole-time equivalents, is set out in the following table.

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses were employed in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1970.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is shown in the table. Figures for 30 September 1984 are the latest currently available to this level of detail.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the gross national product has been spent on the National Health Service in each year since 1970.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following table shows gross expenditure on the National Health Service, (including patient charges), expressed as a percentage of the gross domestic product at market prices, for each year from 1970 to 1984. In accordance with international convention, gross expenditure on the National Health Service is expressed as a percentage of gross domestic product rather than as a percentage of gross national product as requested by my hon. Friend.

Alcohol (Health Warnings)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he will make to the British Medical Association's request for health warnings on cans and bottles of alcohol and on advertisements for the same.

Mr. Whitney: The Government have considered the possibility of introducing health hazard warnings for alcoholic drinks and taken the view that this would not be appropriate as it is the misuse, not the use, of alcohol which causes harm. As an aid to consumers measures have just been agreed in the European Community which will require the alcoholic strength to be indicated on the labels of all alcoholic drinks containing more than 1·2 per cent. of alcohol by volume.

Hospital Accommodation

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service hospital wards were closed in 1985; how many medical and ancillary workers were made redundant as a result; and how many National Health Service hospital beds were made available for accommodation and treatment of private patients.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that information is not collected centrally about the number of wards closed or about numbers of medical and ancillary workers who are made redundant. At December 1985 the number of National Health Service beds authorised for accommodation and treatment of private patients was 2,970.

Goods and Services

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate of the total value of purchases of goods and services made by the National Health Service; and what proportion of the total was supplied by the private sector.

Mr. Whitney: Purchases of goods and services in the Health Service are currently of the order of £2 billion a year. We do not keep a detailed analysis of purchases by sector.

However, as I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 25 March, at columns 459-60, we believe that there is scope for improving the use of National Health Service purchasing power to strengthen suppliers' competitiveness and I am, with the help of a small group, reviewing actions to help support the development and maintenance of a strong, internationally competitive, health care industry.

Board and Lodging

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many young people he has exempted from the supplementary benefit board and lodging time restrictions using his discretionary powers since November 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Twenty-six.

Secure Units

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many, and which, regional health authorities have set up regional secure units;

(2) how many people can be accommodated in regional secure units;

(3) how many more regional secure units are being planned at the present time;

(4) what Her Majesty's Government are doing to encourage more regional secure units to be set up.

Mr. Whitney: The Government are anxious to see regional secure units provided in each region. Ten out of the 14 regions now have permanent regional secure units in operation; an eleventh, North West Thames, has completed the building (and commissioning) of a unit and hopes to begin admitting patients in a few weeks' time. Developments in Regions still without a RSU

South West Thames

A unit is planned at Netherne Hospital, near Coulsdon and will function in association with several "close supervision" units in existing hospitals.

Oxford

A14 bed unit at Borocourt Hospital, near Reading, is under construction and is expected to open in 1987. The region is also planning two other units.

West Midlands

A unit at Rubery Hill Hospital, Birmingham (100 beds), is under construction and is expected to be completed before the end of 1987.

Additional developments in Regions which already have an RSU

Trent

Additional local psychiatric intensive care units are being developed throughout the Region.

North East Thames

The Region has plans for two further units.

South Western

Construction work on a second 30-bed unit at Glenside Hospital, Bristol is expected to commence towards the end of 1986.

We are funding a research study on the work of RSUs. When it is completed its findings will have to be evaluated, along with other research and relevant evidence, before decisions can be taken about the ultimate capacity to be planned, either for RSU accommodation or for the wider range of facilities to cover the range of patients requiring different degrees of security and types of care (including, in particular, patients with chronic mental illness which is unlikely to respond to treatment and severely mentally handicapped patients, neither of which groups is appropriate for the RSU regime).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South West Africa People's Organisation

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the extent and character of British Council involvement with the South West Africa People's Organisation.

Mrs. Chalker: The British Council administers on behalf of the Overseas Development Administration an educational aid programme to Namibians, including some who may be associated with the South West Africa People's Organisation. The assistance consists of training awards for study in Britain, book presentations and specialist advice in English language teaching. Similarly, the British Council also administers awards funded under the United Nations education and training programme for southern Africa.

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards contacts with the South West Africa People's Organisation.

Mrs. Chalker: As we have made clear previously, we are willing to have contact with representatives of all the political parties involved in the Namibia negotiations.

British Council

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the activities of the British Council within southern Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: The British Council has offices in Botswana, the Republic of South Africa and Lesotho (which also covers Swaziland). It is responsible for the administration of the educational aid programmes funded by the Overseas Development Administration.

The offices in Botswana and South Africa participate in the administration of the programme for Namibians. The British Council additionally provides its own programmes in support of education, libraries and the arts.

Helsinki Final Act

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the implementation by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Eastern European countries of the provisions of the Helsinki final act during the last six months.

Mr. Renton: During the six-month period to 30 June 1986 no significant improvements were recorded in the implementation of the Helsinki final act and the Madrid concluding document, although the pattern varied from country to country. Overall, the level of compliance continues to reflect the Warsaw pact countries' selective interpretation of the CSCE final act. There have again been widespread breaches of the provisions relating to human rights and fundamental freedoms, most notably in the Soviet Union.

Security in Europe: Principles Guiding Relations Between Participating States; Confidence-Building Measures and Certain Aspects of Security and Disarmament (Basket 1)
The most striking feature of Eastern performance over the period was the continued violation of principle VII which covers

"respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief."

Notwithstanding the isolated instance of Anatoly Shcharansky's release, the Soviet Union continued its repression of religious groups, dissidents and ethnic minorities without abatement. Neither was there any evidence of impending change for the better in Soviet policy on human rights.

The Jewish community continued to face difficulties over emigration and in practising its religion and culture. Confiscation of religious material from the homes of Soviet Jews, particularly of refuseniks, was widespread and the pressures on the teaching of Hebrew maintained. In June, the Moscow Hebrew teacher Alexsei Magarik was given the maximum sentence (three years) for alleged drugs possession: more generally, the practice of accusing dissidents of drug possession appears to be growing. Many other Jewish activists such as Vladimir Lifshitz faced harassment and arrest on charges of "anti-Soviet slander".

Other religious groups also suffered persecution. Soviet law requires any such group to register with the authorities. Believers, therefore, face a choice between participating in a group controlled and closely monitored by the authorities or breaking the law by refusing to be registered. Soviet laws are aimed at ensuring that religious groups play no part in the wider community except when called upon to support official policies or deny reports of persecution. Assertion of religious and cultural identity has led to the arrest of Jews, Ukrainians, Pentecostal Christians, Baptists and others during the period under review. Russian Orthodox Deacon Vladimir Rusak was arrested in March and charged with "anti-Soviet propaganda". Groups such as the Jehovah's Witnesses and the Uniate Catholic Church remain prescribed organisations. The Soviet authorities continued to exert steady pressure to encourage Muslim inhabitants of central Asia and Azerbaijan to abandon their religion. Very few mosques in these regions are open for use and there are few officially recognised clergy.

Members of the group to establish trust between the USSR and USA continued to be subject to considerable official harassment. Human rights activists continued to attract persecution. In March Kirill Popov was sentenced to six years in the camps and five in internal exile for anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda, while in May Sergei Khodorovich, who had been sentenced to three years in 1983 for channelling charitable funds to political prisoners and their families, received a further sentence of three years. Details of the ill treatment and poor health of the poetess Irina Ratushinskaya (serving a 12-year sentence) became known, as did information on the fate of the unofficial trade union leader Vladimir Klebanov after a silence lasting several years: he has reportedly been a patient in the Tashkont special psychiatric hospital since 1983. Apart from the release of Anatoly Shcharansky and emigration permission granted to a few well-known refuseniks, such as Boris Gulko and his wife and the Goldstein brothers from Tbilisi, few improvements took place in the position of other better known individual cases, although Mrs. Yelena Bonner's journey to the West for medical treatment was a welcome development. Dr. Sakharov, however, remained in internal exile in Gorky, the subject of films secretly made by the KGB. Psychiatrist Dr. Anatoly Koryagin was reportedly sentenced during 1985 to a further two-year term for resisting force feeding during a hunger strike. There was continuing evidence of the abuse of psychiatry in suppressing dissent, a practice which Dr. Koryagin helped to expose.

Bulgarian implementation of CSCE commitments remained poor. When criticised for human rights violations, Bulgaria repeatedly invoked principles I (sovereignty) and VI (non-interference in internal affairs) whilst commitments under principle VII were virtually ignored. The practice of religion, in particular that of Islam, remained difficult with many mosques sealed and locked. Unregistered Pentecostal churches faced a new wave of persecution. The Bulgarian authorities continued to exert a total control over all other religious communities and to limit their rights to practice. The forced Bulgarisation of the Turkish minority is a particularly striking example of the dismal Bulgarian human rights performance.

In Czechoslovakia, the approach to human rights has not improved over the last six months, with continued reports of persecution of religious activists. There has been no visible improvement in Czechoslovakia's performance in the dissemination of information, which falls under rigid state control. The right to know and act upon rights was similarly restricted, with continued pressure on human rights' groups such as Charter 77.

In spite of the improvements which have taken place since 1975, East Germany's implementation balance still showed a considerable deficit. Restrictions on human rights and individual freedoms remained a central problem. There was little or no relaxation in the restrictions on freedom of movement. The GDR attitude towards the Church remained rather more forthcoming than in most other East European countries, although Christians continued to face problems and discrimination, particularly in the field of education. There was evidence of a more extensive and positive treatment of GDR churches in the official press.

Overall, Hungarian compliance with CSCE principles improved during the six months, and remained comparatively good in comparison with other East European states. Relations between churches and the state remained settled. However, freedom of expression was limited and selective action was still taken against internal opposition.

In Poland there were fewer new repressive measures than in the period May to December 1985, but there was no overall relaxation. The number of political prisoners increased to over 250. The leader of underground Solidarity in Warsaw, Zbigniew Bujak, was arrested in May and further arrests have followed. The harsh sentences imposed on three prominent Solidarity prisoners were modified only slightly on appeal, but the case against Lech Walesa was dropped on the first day of his trial. Religious freedom and freedom of travel abroad remained greater than in other Eastern European countries and, in spite of general censorship, the level of genuine debate in the press was relatively high.

The human rights situation in Romania remained abysmal. Basic rights such as freedom of speech, freedom of press and freedom of assembly were ruthlessly denied. The Department of Religious Affairs retained a firm grip on the direction of church policy. Members of religious groups who did not keep within the strict limits prescribed by the laws of 1948 and 1950 were liable to harassment and even imprisonment.

Confidence and security-building measures

The Soviet Union provided notification of one major military manoeuvre involving approximately 250,000 personnel which took place from 10 to 17 February. Observers were not invited. There was no evidence of other manoeuvres involving more than 25,000 troops in Warsaw pact countries and there were no notifications of manoeuvres below that level.

Co-operation in the field of economics, of science and technology and of the environment (basket II)

In general, the procedures for conducting business in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe remained unchanged with Western business men confronted by considerable obstacles of a purely practical nature. Poor economic and trade performance in some countries, coupled with a general tendency to secrecy, have resulted in an unwillingness to publish information and statistical data. However, in Poland and Hungary new laws designed to facilitate foreign involvement in joint ventures have been enacted, and the position may be easing slightly in the Soviet Union and other countries. Joint commissions on economic, scientific and technical co-operation were held in the first half of 1986 with the USSR, Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary. They took place in a helpful and positive atmosphere. Similar exchanges with other East European countries are scheduled for later this year.

Co-operation in humanitarian and other fields (basket III)

Most East European countries continued to show a largely negative record in the fields of family visits, family reunification and contacts with individuals from states outside the Warsaw pact. Hungary and Poland were notable exceptions. Overall, emigration to the West continued at a low level. In the Soviet Union the number of exit visa permits granted to ethnic Germans in 1985 reached the lowest level since 1970; the number of Soviet Jews who emigrated during the review period was marginally higher than the figure for the preceding six months, but the figures still fell a long way short of the high levels of emigration observed a few years ago. The Soviet authorities continued to claim that virtually all Jews wishing to leave have already done so. The GDR continued to limit severely travel by its citizens to non-Communist countries — only a small fraction of those wishing to leave the GDR were allowed to do so. With very few exceptions restrictions remained in force in all Warsaw pact countries on individuals wishing to visit the West, as well as on access to Western diplomatic missions. In the field of information, restrictions on access to Western sources of information continued. So too did interference with Western broadcasts, especially by the Soviet Union which consistently jams BBC Russian and Polish service broadcasts on shortwave. The lack of progress on Anglo-Soviet bilateral cases in the margins of the Berne experts' meeting on human contacts, which took place in April and May, was disappointing.

Co-operation and exchanges in the field of culture and education

Bureaucratic and economic constraints were the main impediments to active bilateral relations. On the whole, existing agreements and projects were implemented in a satisfactory manner.

South African Armed Forces

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the number of personnel assigned by British companies to the South African armed forces in persons per year, and as to the top-up pay being made to such personnel.

Mrs. Chalker: We are not aware of any instance of British companies assigning personnel to the South African armed forces.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to seek to stop British companies operating in South Africa from supplying personnel to the South African armed forces.

Mrs. Chalker: It is not our policy to restrict the freedom of individuals to work overseas.

Falkland Islands (Penguins)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to receive the results of the examination by the Veterinary Affairs Investigation Centre into the deaths of Falkland Islands penguins; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Investigation by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's veterinary investigation centre at Norwich into the causes of death of 15 rockhopper penguins from the Falkland Islands indicates that the seabird disease Puffinosis and unusually high concentrations of lead in the birds' tissue were important contributory factors leading to the birds' emaciation and subsequent mortality. Further tests are being carried out to see whether other factors may also be involved.

THE ARTS

Globe Theatre

Mr. Proctor asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the Globe Theatre project in Southwark.

Mr. Luce: My predecessor had a number of representations. I was very pleased to learn the Globe Theatre Trust and Southwark borough council have now settled their dispute about the site.

Works of Art (Export)

Mr. Faulds asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendations of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art during the half-year ended 30 June, specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was eventually exported or retained, with particulars, in the latter case, of the acquiring institutions; and whether he will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not decided, specifying in each case, (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit.

Mr. Luce: The items for which export licenses were withheld for a period on the advice of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art are as follows. The vaulation has been omitted in two cases where the owners wished it to remain confidential.

Objects in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will specify the allocations made to public institutions in the United Kingdom during the half-year ended 30 June of individual works of art and museum objects pre-eminent for national, scientific, historic or artistic interest which have been accepted in satisfaction of capital transfer tax, together with information, where applicable, as to the conditions or wishes expressed in the matter of allocation by testators and executors; and whether he will list the works of art and museum objects which are still awaiting allocation, with the respective dates of their acceptance in satisfaction of capital transfer tax.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

CIVIL SERVICE

Departmental Duties (Emergency Cover)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Minister for the Civil Service what steps are taken to provide emergency cover in Government Departments on those days in addition to statutory holidays and annual leave entitlement which civil servants are permitted to take as leave; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 1 July 1986, c. 508]: The overriding consideration affecting the additional holidays in the Civil Service is that sufficient staff should remain on duty to meet the demands of any public business that might arise. The detailed arrangements are left to the discretion of individual Departments.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EUREKA Programme

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the direct effects on the United Kingdom which have been recorded during his Department's chairmanship of the EUREKA programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: During the period of United Kingdom chairmanship EUREKA has gathered considerable momentum. At the third ministerial conference held in London on 30 June 1986, 62 new EUREKA projects were announced over and above the 10 announced at the second ministerial conference in November 1985. A project information network is now in place and a small secretariat is to be set up in Brussels to strengthen the machinery and to provide guidance to firms and research institutes. United Kingdom participation in EUREKA projects has grown substantially: out of the 10 projects announced at Hanover, United Kingdom firms and research institutes were involved in three, with a total value of some £70 million. Of the 62 new projects, the United Kingdom is involved in 28, with a total value of over £730 million. EUREKA is a vital collaborative programme which can help British companies compete in world markets for advanced technology.

DEFENCE

Radar Facilities (USSR)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what estimate he has made of the date of the initial operational capability for the large phased array radar currently being constructed by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics at Krasnoyarsk;

(2) what evidence he has on the strength, air defences and operational capability of the large phased array radar currently being constructed by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics at Krasnoyarsk;

(3) what assessment he has made of the potential role of the large phased array radar currently under construction at Krasnoyarsk in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in providing coverage of potential flight corridors for incoming cruise missiles.

Mr. Stanley: Our assessments of the Krasnoyarsk radar, and the evidence on which it is based, are classified.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government will be able to determine independently of the United States of America the precise military attributes of the large phased array Soviet radar when it becomes operational at Krasnoyarsk.

Mr. Stanley: The Government form their own assessments on the basis of the available evidence.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence why he has decided to award the contract for the re-fit of Her Majesty's Yacht Britannia to the Royal Dockyard, Devonport, without seeking tenders from private sector shipyards.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 28, to the hon. Member for Plymouth, Drake (Miss Fookes) concerning the refit of the royal yacht, what tenders were sought prior to award of the contract; and what consideration was given to putting the contract out to a private shipyard.

Mr. Lee: The possibility of inviting commercial tenders for the refit of Her Majesty's Yacht Britannia was originally considered based on our concern that the capacity to undertake this refit would not be available in the desired timescale at Devonport dockyard. However, local management and trades unions have agreed to adopt a series of measures which provide for flexible working practices and the avoidance of delay through industrial action, which will enable the work to be accommodated within the dockyard programme.

Dog School, Newton

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is now considering the report entitled "Establishment of a Joint Service Dog School at RAF Newton"; and whether he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Freeman: The report entitled "Establishment of a Joint Service Dog School at RAF Newton" is an internal MOD document under consideration. I do not intend to place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has now supplied to the Comptroller and Auditor General a copy of the report entitled "Establishment of a Joint Service Dog School at RAF Newton", following the previous investigation by the National Audit Office into this proposal.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

RAF North Luffenham

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made by the investigating team looking at RAF North Luffenham; and when it is expected to report.

Mr. Freeman: The study into the future of RAF North Luffenham is proceeding well and it is due to be completed by 31 July 1986. Subsequent consideration of the study within the MOD is likely to take some months.

Tigerfish Torpedo

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of the Tigerfish torpedo programme.

Mr. Lee: Total expenditure (development and production) on the Tigerfish programme up to March 1986, at July 1985 prices, is £1,055 million.

Stingray Programme

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of the Stingray programme; and what is the timetable for its full production.

Mr. Lee: Total expenditure (development and production) to March 1986 at July 1985 prices is £959 million. Stingray is in production and the first batch of torpedoes has been delivered.

Spearfish Programme

Mr Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of the Spearfish programme to date; and what is the timetable for its production.

Mr Lee: Total expenditure (development and production) on Spearfish to March 1986 at July 1985 is £267 million. On present plans it is expected that Spearfish will begin to enter service in the early 1990s.

Training Land

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans to find further land for training purposes; and if any potential sites have yet been identified.

Mr. Freeman: There is a need to acquire additional land for training purposes. The opportunity is taken whenever possible to expand existing training areas. Proposals now exist to acquire land at Stainmore, Cumbria; Holcombe Moor, Lancs, and Hollingbourne, Kent.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers' Salaries

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what a scale 1 teacher was paid on 1 May of each year since 1974, at outturn and at current prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: The table shows the salary (excluding all allowances) of teachers in maintained and primary and secondary schools at point 13 of scale 1 on 1 May of each year since 1974 in cash prices and in 1986 prices (adjusted by reference to the RPI).

1 May	Cash prices £ per annum	*Constant prices £ per annum
1974	2,553	9,159
1975	3,744	10,745
1976	4,056	10,088
1977	4,239	9,005
1978	4,662	9,195
1979	5,082	9,086
1980	6,228	9,134
1981	7,317	9,603
1982	7,755	9,296
1983	8,142	9,412
1984	8,556	9,409
1985	9,147	9,400
1986	9,804	9,804

* RPI-adjusted to April 1986 level.

Notes:

(1) Although point 13 is the maximim point for scale 1, there are two further points on the scale which are granted to teachers who are good honours graduates.

(2) The 1974 figure excludes the Houghton award which was implemented with effect from 24 May.

Educational Maintenance Allowances

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the estimated cost of providing an educational maintenance allowance of £27 at 1985-86 prices for all pupils remaining in schools or colleges for one year after the school leaving age, for one week, 38 weeks, 40 weeks, 46 weeks and 52 weeks, after deducting child benefit and existing educational maintenance allowances; and if he will give projections on the same basis for each of the next three years.

Mr. Dunn: The estimated cost, based on provisional 1985-86 pupil and student numbers and projected numbers for the following three years, would be as follows:

£ million

	Weeks
	1	38	40	46	52
1985-86	6	230	243	283	322
1986-87	6	222	235	273	312
1987-88	6	229	242	281	320
1988-89	6	219	231	269	307

Note: These costs are based on the proposed allowance of £27 per week, less child benefit at the current rate of £7 per week, and assume no change in the estimated 1984-85 level of local authority spending on maintenance grants, which has been converted to 1985-86 prices for the purpose of the current calculations.

Mature Students (Grants)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average grant paid to a mature student in full-time higher education for the last year for which a figure is available.

Mr. Walden: The mandatory awards regulations do not define a mature student. However, from their mid-20s, students may, in addition to a full grant, receive certain supplementary allowances, including an older students allowance and an allowance for dependants. In the academic year 1984-85 the average allowance paid to students in these categories was £530 and £1,355, respectively. This was in addition to a grant (for students not living with their parents) of £2,100 (London rate) of £1,775 (elsewhere rate).

Education Budget

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of gross domestic product has been spent on the education budget in 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Total public expenditure on education in the United Kingdom was 5·1 per cent. of gross domestic product in 1984-85. Final figures for 1985-86 are not yet available, but on the basis of estimates published in the public expenditure White Paper and the financial statement and Budget report, outturn for public expenditure on education in that year represents 4·8 per cent. of gross domestic product.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much the Government will be spending in the current year on research into the causes of schizophrenia; if he has any plans to increase this amount; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom. I understand that in the financial year 1985-86, the latest year for which information is available, the MRC spent £525,000 on projects exclusively on research into schizophrenia and a further £1,573,000 on projects which have schizophrenia as a minor component. The MRC is always willing to consider soundly based scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

Research work relevant to schizophrenia is also being conducted in universities and medical schools, financed from the block grant to universities allocated for teaching and research on advice from the University Grants Committee. Figures are not available.

I would also refer the right hon. Member to my reply of 1 July at c. 469 to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson).

DEFENCE

Airborne Early Warning Radar System

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that all bidders for the airborne early warning radar system will be subject to identical deadlines in all respects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: This is already our policy.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has extended the deadline for the testing of airborne early warning radar systems in operational environmental conditions beyond 3 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No.

Military Bands

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much is being spent currently by his Department on military bands and musical training in the armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 24 March at c. 395.

Costs of musical training in the armed forces cannot be separately identified.

ENERGY

British Gas

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide details of the provisions for employee shareholdings to be made for the chairman and senior and area management of British Gas under privatisation.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's announcement on 18 June at columns 537-39. The chairman and management of British Gas will be eligible for the Government share offers on the same basis as other staff.

Domestic Consumers (Disconnections)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will discuss with the gas and electricity boards measures to prevent disconnection of a consumer when the contents of a pre-payment meter have been stolen.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The code of practice on disconnections ensures that disconnection is used only as a last resort; the options that are examined before disconnection is pursued are shown in this code. The British Gas Corporation and the electricity supply industry consider individually each case of theft from a meter. Where they are satisfied that the theft was the work of a third party, unconnected with the household, they may waive the obligation on the consumer to make good the losses.

Northern Engineering International Nuclear Systems

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will discuss with the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. the implications for standards of quality and safety of the proposed closure of Northern Engineering International Nuclear Systems, Gateshead, and the consequential transfer to other suppliers of 11 of a 15-module order for the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield, currently in production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a commercial matter for BNFL.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Guyana

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the amount of aid given by Her Majesty's Government to Guyana in each of the past five years.

Mr. Raison: Gross British official aid to Guyana was as follows:

1981	2,475
1982	1,724
1983	1,555
1984	419
1985	354

Afghan Refugees

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial and other assistance the United Kingdom is providing to Afghan refugees in Pakistan.

Mr. Raison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) on 21 April at column 35.

Jamaica

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost of the emergency relief Her Majesty's Government have provided to Jamaica to assist in the repair of damage caused by recent floods; if he is proposing any long-term rehabilitation schemes to follow the immediate assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: The total cost of the emergency relief is expected to be around £300,000. In response to a request from the Jamaican Government, we have also provided 150 tonnes of Bailey bridging and associated material under an additional £250,000 programme aid loan. The bridging has already been shipped. We have no current plans for assisting with long-term rehabilitation.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the 150 tonnes of Bailey bridging materials Her Majesty's Government are providing to replace bridges destroyed by the recent floods in Jamaica to arrive.

Mr. Raison: The Bailey bridging materials are expected to arrive in Jamaica on 27 July.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent in Wales on the technical and vocational education initiative and community programme vocational education schemes in each year since their inception.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am advised by the Manpower Services Commission that expenditure under the technical and vocational education initiative for the financial years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 was £1,449,568, £2,375,573 and £3,105,377, respectively.

The CPVE is administered by the Joint Board for Pre-Vocational Education and figures for the Board's expenditure in Wales are not separately available. The Welsh Office contributes to the grant paid by the Department of Education and Science to the joint board for the development of the CPVE. For the financial years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 the contribution was £48,000, £41,000 and £57,000, respectively.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been spent on provision for Welsh-medium instruction of the technical and vocational education initiative and community programme vocational education schemes in Wales in each year since their inception.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: It is not possible separately to identify expenditure on provision for Welsh medium teaching under the TVEI and CPVE schemes.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Executive (Offices)

Mr. Gow asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the tender price accepted for the building of the new offices of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive at Coleraine; and what has been the final cost for the completion of the building.

Mr. Needham: A fluctuating price tender of £492,918·91 was accepted by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive on 24 October 1984 for the construction of a new office building at Coleraine. The building reached practical completion on 20 June 1986. The estimated final cost is £534,250.

Mr. Needham: The chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive was referring to the Government's previously announced intention to introduce legislation on homelessness for Northern Ireland.

Voting Rights

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the discussion by the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference of the voting rights of Irish citizens in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: Before the meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference on 17 June, the Irish Government put forward proposals concerning the voting rights of certain Northern Ireland residents in some Northern Ireland elections. The position of those voters (both British and Irish citizens) who may vote at parliamentary and European elections but not at local government or Northern Ireland Assembly elections, was subsequently discussed at that meeting. The United Kingdom representatives confirmed the Government's view that the provisions governing the franchise for parliamentary elections throughout the United Kingdom should also be applied to local government elections in Northern Ireland, as they are in Great Britain, and to elections to the Northern Ireland Assembly; and they stated their intention of taking appropriate legislative action.

Irish Language

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the discussion by the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference of the treatment of the Irish language in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: The Irish Government put forward proposals concerning the position of the Irish language in Northern Ireland at the conference on 10 January. At its meeting on 17 June the United Kingdom Government described current administrative practice, and indicated as areas for possible future development the provision of dual language street names where the local community so desires; ascertaining more precisely the number of Irish speakers in Northern Ireland; and financial support for Irish language-related cultural activities.

Flags and Emblems

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the discussion of flags and emblems by the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

Mr. Tom King: The Irish Government put forward proposals relating to flags and emblems at the conference on 10 January. At its meeting on 11 March the United Kingdom Government described the public order legislation for Great Britain before Parliament; explained the desirability of bringing Northern Ireland public order legislation so far as possible into line with that for Great Britain; and indicated that the question of flags and emblems would be considered in the context of the extension, as appropriate, by Order in Council, of this legislation to Northern Ireland. That remains the position.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Shipbuilders

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what current discussions are taking place between his Department and British Shipbuilders about contracts for (a) new merchant vessels and (b) merchant vessel refits.

Mr. Peter Morrison: British Shipbuilders keeps my Department in close touch about possible contracts. Details are commercially confidential.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what account has been taken by Her Majesty's Government in estimating the net number of jobs at risk from the possible imposition of sanctions against South Africa, of any offsetting job gains resulting from the manufacture in the United Kingdom of goods previously imported and the investment in the United Kingdom of capital previously exported to South Africa; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what method of calculation has been used to arrive at a figure of 120,000 job losses in the United Kingdom if full economic sanctions were applied to South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any contingency plans exist for alternative sources of supplies of strategically important minerals currently supplied by South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Telecommunications Act (Licences)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he intends to take in respect of pre-1984 Telecommunications Act licences which will cease to be valid on 5 August.

Mr. Pattie: I shall be making an order under the 1984 Act which will have the effect of extending their validity by up to a further three years depending on the licence involved.

TRANSPORT

Safety Barriers

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorway and trunk road cross-over accidents have occurred in the past five years involving the rupture or crossing of safety barriers; and what form of construction was used for those road barriers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The most recent figures available are given in the table.

Year	Motorways	*'A' Road Dual Carriageways
1980	28	32
1981	38	26
1982	21	43
1983	40	52
1984	29	56

* Includes both trunk and non-trunk roads, because separate statistics are not collected for these categories of roads.

National statistics on the types of barriers involved in cross-over accidents are not collected. For motorways the barrier would almost certainly have been a steel safety fence or either the tensioned corrugated beam or untensioned open box beam type, as these designs are used most widely. For dual carriageways it is reasonable to assume that in most cases the barriers would have been of the types mentioned above.

Air Travel Reserve Fund Agency

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the annual report and accounts of the Air Travel Reserve Fund Agency for 1985-86.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes. The agency's final report is published today and copies are available in the Library. In acknowledging the report I would like to pay tribute to the work undertaken on behalf of holidaymakers by the chairman Sir Kenneth Selby, the members of the agency and their few executive staff. The history of the agency included in the report is itself testimony to the agency's efforts over the past 11 years.

I have read with interest the important points which Sir Kenneth has made in the report and I am sure that the trustees of the new Air Travel Trust, and the independent committee which advises them, will consider the report carefully. The committee will benefit from the expertise of members who were also members of the agency, and their presence will ensure an element of continuity with the experience of the agency.

Catholic Church, Biddlestone, Northumberland

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Forestry Commission has completed the sale of the Catholic chapel at Biddlestone, near Harbottle, Northumberland; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I have been asked to reply.

Contracts for the sale of the chapel have been exchanged, but the sale is not yet completed.

PRIME MINISTER

"The SOE in Scandinavia"

Mr. Beith asked the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received about the accuracy of the volume of the official history of the war entitled "The SOE in Scandinavia"; what response has been made; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am aware of no such representations.

Nuclear Accidents (Effects)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 30 June, if she will now provide the information requested concerning estimates of the possible scale of the financial, material and human costs of an accident at a British nuclear installation of similar magnitude to that which began at Chernobyl on 26 April; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to my previous answer on 30 June at column 412.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on Monday 30 June, if she will specify the fundamental differences between the nuclear steam supply system in the reactor at Chernobyl and those reactors operating in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: The Chernobyl design involves cooling the nuclear fuel by boiling water. The water and fuel are contained in pressure tubes running through the reactor core. The steam from the boiling water goes directly to the turbine generators in a direct cycle system.

BNFL's and generating boards power reactors operate at much lower pressures and moderator temperatures and are cooled by carbon dioxide gas. This gas heats separate boilers to produce the steam, and this steam, which is never in contact with the nuclear fuel, drives the turbine generators.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Servants (Political Adherence)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Minister for the Civil Service in what circumstances he collects information on the political adherence of civil servants.

Mr. Luce: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Guyana

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have recently made to the Government of Guyans concerning human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: None. We have regularly made clear at the United Nations and in other international human rights bodies our concern that human rights should be respected in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the two international covenants on human rights, to which Guyana is a party. The Guyanese Government are well aware of our views.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Guyana.

Mr. Renton: We enjoy good relations with Guyana and are represented by a high commissioner resident in Georgetown.

South Africa

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, when he visits South Africa, he will make it his policy to refrain from meeting any person who has given support to the practice of murder by the placing of burning tyres around the neck of a living human being; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have consistently condemned the use of violence on all sides in South Africa. My right hon. and learned Friend's visit, on behalf of the Twelve member states of the European Community, is a further effort to promote the dialogue and the suspension of violence that are so urgently needed.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money was allocated in 1985-86 for research on verification of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Lee: I have been asked to reply.

The most important verification technology is seismology. Government expenditure on unclassified work in this area during 1985-86 was £1·5 million. The Government also undertake classified work in related areas, details of which cannot be revealed on grounds of national security.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Psychopathically Disordered Prisoners

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many psychopathically disordered patients were resident in the four English special hospitals at the time of the implementation of the Mental Health Act 1983; how many patients since that time have been discharged from hospital by the mental health tribunals; and of those cases discharged by the mental health tribunals, how many are known to have subsequently offended by committing an offence similar in nature and equal or worse in degree compared to their index (admission) offences.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. At the end of 1983 there were 411 patients suffering from psychopathic disorder in special hospitals in England, of whom 339 were subject to the special restrictions set out in section 41 of the Mental Health Act 1983. Two restricted patients admitted to special hospitals by reason of psychopathic disorder were discharged by a mental health review tribunal between the coming into force of the Act on 30 September 1983 and the end of 1983; 24 were so discharged in 1984; and the provisional figure for 1985 is 12. Of these 38 patients, four are known to have committed subsequently a serious offence of a similar nature to their index offence.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted prisoners in the last five consecutive years for which figures are available have been transferred to the four English special hospitals for treatment of their psychopathic disorder; of these cases, what was the average time, to the nearest month, which elapsed between their conviction and transfer to the special hospital; and of these, how many remained in special hospitals after the expiry date of their sentence.

Mr. Mellor: The number of such prisoners and the average time between their conviction and transfer are as follows:

	Prisoners	Months
1981	10	24
1982	6	27
1983	7	24
1984	13	31
1985	*19	21

* Provisional.

Information about how many of these prisoners remained in hospital after the end of their sentence is not readily available.

India (Kabbadi)

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will grant limited entry into the United Kingdom for amateur sportsmen from the Indian sub-continent who are kabbadi players;

(2) why he is insisting on work permits to be presented by amateur kabbadi players from the Indian sub-continent coming to Britain every summer.

Mr. Waddington: Whether sportsmen require work permits depends on the terms of their engagement. I have considered the question of the admission of kabbadi players and have decided that they may be admitted without work permits unless the immigration officer is not satisfied that they meet the requirements of the immigration rules as visitors.

Immigration

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for permanent settlement in the United Kingdom from (a) the West Indies, (b) Pakistan, (c) India and (d) Bangladesh; and how they compare with the comparable figures for settlement in each of the past five years.

Mr. Waddington: The numbers of persons accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom, by nationality, are published annually in Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom". The following table gives the figures for the nationalities requested where they are separately identified in the published statistics.

Number of persons accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom, 1980 to 1985

Nationality	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985

India	7,930	6,590	5,410	5,380	5,140	5,500
Bangladesh	5,210	5,810	7,020	4,870	4,180	5,330
Barbados	100	80	60	40	50	60
Guyana	240	220	180	190	190	200

Crime Prevention

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the crime prevention initiatives taken since May 1979.

Mr. Hurd: Among the many crime prevention initiatives taken since May 1979 are the following:

— the establishment of the Home Office crime prevention unit to undertake research, formulate policy, monitor implementation and to provide advice;
—the expansion of the Home Office crime prevention centre at Stafford which trains police officers in crime prevention matters;
— the formation of the ministerial group on crime prevention to carry forward the crime prevention strategy and to review the arrangements within and outside of Government of the co-ordination, development and implementation of initiatives;
— the holding of two national seminars at No. 10 Downing street;
—encouraging the expansion of neighbourhood watch and similar schemes;
— raising the profile of crime prevention in the community at large by way of conferences and seminars;
—stimulating crime prevention activities and initiatives now being carried forward by non-Government bodies;
—encouraging the production of British standards on the security of buildings and vehicle security;
— the dissemination of crime prevention advice and guidance: through leaflet, poster, press, radio and television publicity campaigns;
—the provision of funds for crime prevention measures under the urban programme and through the urban housing renewal unit;
— the approval of some 5,000 places for crime prevention projects under the communty programme;
—the dissemination of information about good practice in police and local authority crime prevention schemes;
—the setting up of working groups, to report to the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention, on residential burglary, car security, commercial robbery, shop theft and the prevention of violence associated with licensed premises;
— the production of revised guidelines for crime prevention panels;
—the establishment of five local demonstration projects to stimulate a multi-agency involvement in tackling crime problems of particular concern to communities in specific locations;
— urging local authorities, commerce, voluntary groups, industry, trade unions and all other sectors of the community to identify and act upon the crime prevention potential within their fields of activity.

Passports

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what means have been employed to ascertain the demand for bilingual passport application forms.

Mr. Waddington: The two passport offices serving Wales have sought to record requests for forms in Welsh and receipt of forms completed in Welsh. Since 1980 they have recorded three requests for such forms and receipt of two forms completed in Welsh.

Mentally Ill People

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and the chief constable of the West Midlands police as to the number of people who have been escorted to police custody for behaviour or offences warranting detention in a mental hospital or psychiatric institution under section 136 of the Mental Health Act; and what proportion of them were, after consultation in police custody with a psychiatrist or social worker (a) committed to one of the above establishments and (b) sent home.

Mr. Mellor: Statistics of persons detained by the police under section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983 are not maintained locally or centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for St Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 19 May at c. 13.

Prisons (Mother and Baby Units)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mother and baby units there are in each prison accommodating female prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: The Prison Department has three mother and baby units — at Holloway, Styal and Askham Grange.

Afghan Refugees

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Afghan refugees have been granted asylum in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested was published in tables 2 and 3 of Home Office statistical bulletin No. 12/86, "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1985" on 1 May 1986.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average weekly dose by volume per capita of each of the main categories of drugs given in (a) each prison for male prisoners and (b) each prison for female offenders, during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: Medicines administered to prisoner patients are not statistically recorded by volume. Information on the use of medicines in prison service establishments, including information about the use of certain categories of medicines, is published annually in the report on the work of the Prison Department, copies of which are in the Library. The most recently published report is that for 1984-85 (Cmnd. 9699).

Immigration Rules

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will amend the immigration rules to prevent men who come here as visitors and who then advertise for a bride being allowed to settle in the United Kingdom on the basis of marriage.

Mr. Hurd: No. The immigration rules already prevent marriage being used in this way as a device to obtain settlement. One of the requirements of the existing rules is that the Secretary of State must be satisfied that the marriage was not entered into primarily to obtain settlement here. A man who entered this country as a visitor and advertised for a bride would be most unlikely to be able to satisfy that requirement of the rules if he then applied to remain permanently on the basis of the marriage.

SCOTLAND

Life Sentence Prisoners

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the average period of time taken to make review board decisions in the case of prisoners serving life sentences in Scotland (a) from 1979 until 1984 and (b) from 1984 onwards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Information is not available in the form requested. The initial review of the suitability or otherwise of an indeterminate sentence prisoner for release on life licence is carried out by a local review committee at the penal establishment concerned. Detailed reports and consideration by the local review committee normally take about 3 to 4 months to complete. The time taken to complete other stages of the review process, which under statute has to include consultation with the judiciary and a favourable recommendation from the Parole Board for Scotland before a provisional release date is granted by my right hon. and learned Friend, varies according to the circumstances of the individual case and the number and complexity of cases currently under consideration.

A new form of record keeping introduced last year has shown that in recent months the time taken to complete reviews has increased, but steps are being taken to improve the turnover as quickly as possible.

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the average period of time taken to make review board decisions in the case of those categories of prisoners serving a minimum life sentence of 20 years following legislation introduced in 1984 (a) in Scottish prisons and (b) in Saughton prison, Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Information is not available in the form requested.

On 18 December 1984, at columns 90-91, my right hon. and learned Friend announced that he had made clear to the Parole Board for Scotland that only in exceptional circumstances would he feel that release earlier than 20 years would be appropriate for a prisoner sentenced to life imprisonment for certain categories of murder (in particular, murders of police officers or prison officers, murder by terrorists, sexual or sadistic murders of children or murders committed by firearm in the commission of crime). These cases are subject to the same procedures of review as those of other indeterminate sentence prisoners although the timing of reviews may reflect the longer period in custody which the individual may be expected to serve.

Reviews of cases for especially grave offences may take longer to complete because of their serious nature or the potential risk to public safety on release.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the total European regional development fund moneys for each year since 1979 for Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Total awards from the European regional development fund for Scotland from 1979 are as follows:

£ million

	Total	Infrastructure	Industry	Non-Quota
1979	37·9	35·9	2·0
1980	27·9	17·1	10·8
1981	70·7	55·3	15·4
1982	71·6	61·7	1·9	8·0
1983	83·5	63·9	19·6
1984	103·2	59·4	33·8	10·0
1985	121·4	*100·4	21·0
Total	516·2	393·7	104·5	18·0

* Including £68·2 million for the Glasgow national programme of community interest.

Homelessness

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many families were placed in bed-and-breakfast type accommodation for homeless people in 1985 in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: 3,019 households in Scotland who applied during 1985 under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 were housed initially in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. Of these, 2,781 were in Strathclyde region.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General how many community programme managing agents or sponsors have been excluded from the scheme or had their work curtailed since 1983; and what were the reasons for exclusion.

Mr. Lang: Information on the number of managing agents and sponsors whose scheme contracts have not been renewed, or which have terminated early, is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General what is the rate of unemployment in the south of England, defined as south of a line from Bristol to the Wash; and what is the rate in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lang: On 8 May 1986 the rate of unemployment in the South of England, defined as those counties* south of a line from Bristol to the Wash, was 10·3 per cent. The corresponding figure for the rest of the United Kingdom was 15·9 per cent.

* Avon, Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire, Cornwall, Devon, Dorset, East Sussex, Essex, Greater London, Hampshire, Hertfordshire, Isle of Wight, Kent, Norfolk, Northamptonshire, Oxfordshire, Somerset, Suffolk, Surrey, Wiltshire and West Sussex.

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General what has been the change in numbers and percentage in the size of the civilian employed labour force in the south of England, defined as south of a line from Bristol to the Wash, since 1966 and since 1976, respectively; and what are the comparable figures for the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lang: The available information is as follows:

Civilian employed labour force

	Change between June 1966 and June 1985		Change between June 1976 and June 1985
	Numbers	Percentage	Numbers	Percentage
South of England*	544,000	5·3	551,000	5·3
Rest of the United Kingdom	−1,408,000	−9·6	−973,000	−6·9

* South East, East Anglia and South West regions.

Mr. Marlow asked the Paymaster General how many unemployed people under 25 years old drawing benefit there have been in the south-east for each of the last 10 years; and what percentage this was of (a) south-east unemployment and (b) United Kingdom unemployment.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in the south-east region for April of each year from 1983. The figures relate to unemployed persons claiming unemployment benefit, supplementary benefit or national insurance credits at unemployment benefit offices. Comparisons over the period are affected by the change in the timing of compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Analyses of unemployed claimants are not available before October 1982.

Unemployed Claimants—under 25 years

	South East	Percentage of South East Total	Percentage of United Kingdom Total
April	Number	Per cent.	Per cent.
1983	261,089	35·7	8·2
1984	265,627	36·3	8·5
1985	275,665	35·2	8·4
1986	262,714	33·1	7·9

Part-time Employment

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General what is the official definition of part-time employment.

Mr. Lang: Part-time employment is not defined as such in employment legislation. The criterion most widely used in the Department of Employment's statistics is whether an individual works 30 hours a week or less, excluding overtime, but other definitions are also in use.

Lost Working Days

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General what criteria his Department uses to define a strike for the purposes of the statistics of the numbers of working days lost due to industrial disputes.

Mr. Lang: The statistics relate to stoppages of work in the United Kingdom due to industrial disputes between employers and workers, or between workers and other workers, connected with terms and conditions of employment. No distinction is made between lawful and unlawful stoppages, and both are included in the statistics. Disputes which do not result in a stoppage of work—for example, work-to-rules and go-slows — are not included in the statistics, as their effects are not readily quantifiable. Stoppages involving fewer than 10 workers or lasting less than one day are excluded, unless the total number of working days lost in the dispute is greater than 100.

In measuring the number of working days lost, account is taken of the time lost in the basic working week by workers both directly and indirectly involved at the establishments where the dispute occurred; workers indirectly involved are those who are not themselves parties to the dispute but are unable to work as a result of the dispute. Overtime work is not included and neither is weekend working where this is not normal. Allowance is made for public and known annual holidays — for example, factory fortnights.

In disputes where an employer dismisses his employees and replaces them with another work force, it is assumed that no further working days are being lost once the new work force is recruited.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report details of money held back from use by local authorities in England for housing purposes through the capital receipts limitation imposed at the present time; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Information about local authorities' accumulated capital receipts is available only in respect of the position on 31 March 1985. At that time, the total spending power theoretically available to authorities in England, from their accumulated housing receipts was £4·1 billion but £1·3 billion of this had been used for purposes such as debt repayment. All accumulated receipts are available over time to permit additional capital expenditure, but the Government have set limits on the rate at which they can be used for this purpose, so as to minimise adverse effects on the public sector borrowing requirement.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the bids submitted for housing investment programmes since 1981 and the respective allocation made in each case.

Sir George Young: In their housing investment programme submissions local authorities are asked to specify the total programme of capital expenditure they propose to undertake in the relevant year. The figures are therefore intended to cover not only expenditure financed from allocations, but also the very considerable amount of expenditure financed from other sources. Proposed programmes and allocations for the years 1981-82 to 1986-87 have been as follows:

£ million

	Proposed Programmes	Allocations
1981-82	*2,917	1,795
1982-83	†2,968	2,192
1983-84	3,559	2,233
1984-85	4,481	1,853
1985-86	4,868	1,600
1986-87	5,416	1,465

All figures are in cash terms unless otherwise indicated.
* November 1979 prices.
† November 1980 prices.

Urban Development

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what appraisal his Department has undertaken to assess how far, and in what respect, housing projects for which urban development grant aid has been provided have helped urgent local housing needs; and what information is available to his Department concerning the proportion of dwellings provided under such projects which have been (a) let, or (b) sold under a low cost home ownership scheme, or (c) sold at open market value to (1) homeless households, (2) households registered on local authority waiting lists, (3) households registered on local authority transfer lists and (4) first-time buyers.

Sir George Young: All housing projects which have been supported by urban development grant (UDG) have been approved on the basis that the dwellings concerned would be sold or let under assured tenancies at full market value. Information about the personal circumstances of purchasers is not available at present but some housing projects are included in current research into the impact of UDG.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment according to what criteria his Department assesses whether housing projects submitted by local authorities for urban development grant aid would be economically unviable were such grant aid not made available; and what appraisal his Department has undertaken to evaluate whether, when urban development grant aid has been provided for housing projects, it has in practice proved essential for their execution.

Sir George Young: All applications for urban development grant (UDG) receive a detailed development appraisal in order to establish whether the project could or would not proceed without grant. Research into the outcome of a representative sample of completed UDG projects is under way.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any housing projects for which urban development grant aid has been provided where the local authority has clawed back profits from the developer under the terms of grant aid and list in each case (a) the profit allowed to the developer under the terms of the grant before clawback, (b) the profit clawed back by the local authority and (c) the profit retained by the developer.

Sir George Young: Almost all offers of urban development grant for housing projects have included conditions requiring grant to be repaid to the local authority if during the period between grant approval and the completion of the project house prices increase more rapidly than building costs. It is not the practice to disclose financial details of individual projects, but clawback conditions are known to have come into operation in five cases.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any housing project for which urban development grant aid has been provided where the developers' approved expenses for the project have included (a) the provision of white goods in the dwellings, (b) the establishment of a show house and the running expenses for a sales office and (c) advertising and agent fees for the dwellings; and if he will list in each case the reasons why his Department judged such expenses to merit urban development grant aid.

Sir George Young: Urban development grant is not paid in respect of specific items of expenditure but rather to cover the gap between the total costs that the developer will have to incur in order to carry out the project and the estimated value of the completed project. Housing projects invariably involve marketing expenses and some projects have included "White goods" packages. Such expenditure would normally reduce rather than increase the grant requirement because it enables the completed housing to be sold sooner or at a higher price than would otherwise be the case.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those firms from which members of his Department's urban development grant appraisal team have been seconded, the members seconded, and the periods of their secondment;

(2) if he will list any former members of his Department's urban development grant appraisal team who to his knowledge have subsequently been employed as consultants by local authorities wishing to submit urban development grant applications.

Sir George Young: The following have been or are members of the Department's urban development grant appraisal team whilst on secondment to the Department:

Appraiser	Firm	Period of secondment
D. Barker	Norwich Union Insurance Group	October 1982—April 1983
J Cooper*	Hillier Parker May & Rowden	October 1982—April 1983
P. Hilling	Authur Young McClelland Moores & Co.	October 1982—October 1983

Appraiser	Firm	Period of secondment
A. H. Mallinson*	Thomson McLintock Associates	October 1982—March 1984
J. F. Reid*	Costain Group Ltd.	April 1983—March 1985
N. F. Smith	Drivers Jonas	May 1983—May 1984
T. A. S. Russell*	King & Co.	July 1983—January 1985
R. N. C. Cowley	Peat Marwick Mitchell & Co.	August 1983—December 1984
M. C. Gloster	Grimley & Son	May 1984—August 1985
M. J. Barrington	Spicer and Pegler	October 1984—July 1986
N. J. Sadler	Richard Ellis	January 1985—March 1986
A. G. Vining	John Laing Construction Ltd.	April 1985—April 1987
G. M. Seeff	Stoy Hayward Associates	July 1986—to be determined.

* Former appraisers known to have acted for local authorities in connection with applications, or prospective applications, for Urban Development Grant.

There is in general no restriction on former appraisers or their firms acting for local authorities or other persons in connection with applications for urban development grant, but the terms of secondments preclude former appraisers from getting involved in any way with projects which were before the Department during their periods of secondment.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has received a copy of the recent report by the district auditor to members of Langbaurgh borough council, drawing attention to the financial implications of their decision to dispose of part of the Spencerbeck housing estate to Barratt (Urban Renewal Northern) Ltd for refurbishment for sale with urban development grant aid; and what steps his Department plans to take to ensure that in future before urban development grant aid is approved for such projects, that the short and long term financial implications of the disposal of its housing stock for refurbishment for sale have been fully appraised.

Sir George Young: The Department has not received a copy of the auditor's report. It is for local authorities to assess the impact that disposals for sale will have on their housing revenue accounts.

Public Buildings and Works (Expenditure)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of annual expenditure on public buildings and works is spent in the south of England, defined as south of a line from Bristol to the Wash.

Sir George Young: Expenditure figures on this basis are not available.

Council House Building

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of council house building in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland was represented by (i) public direct labour schemes and (ii) private contractors' schemes in the period 1982 to 1984.

Sir George Young: In the period 1982 to 1984 it is estimated that for England and Wales the proportion of council house building, measured in current values, carried out by direct labour organisations was about 8 per cent. and by private contractors 92 per cent. For Scotland the corresponding figures were 2 per cent. and 98 per cent.

Nursing and Rest Homes

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority in England the total amount of rate relief granted under the Government's obligations to provide reimbursement of 90 per cent. of such relief to (a) registered nursing homes and (b) registered rest homes.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information is not available for particular types of premises receiving rate relief under the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978. Figures are given for the amount of relief for all institutions, and the amount reimbursed to the local authority by my Department, for each local rating authority in England for the latest available year, 1984-85. In some cases the figures are still subject to audit.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the working of the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978 in so far as it relates to the relief from rates of registered nursing homes and registered rest homes.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978 was amended by the Rates Act 1984. As amended, section 2 provides for full or partial rate relief for institutions accepted by the local rating authority as being used wholly or predominantly for specified purposes, mainly the accommodation or employment of ill or disabled people.

Nursing homes, rest homes and similar premises fall within the scope of the relief when they are used wholly or predominantly to provide residential nursing and domestic care for people who are or have been suffering from illness or who are disabled, but not if their clients are there solely because of factors such as age, being otherwise fit. No distinction is drawn between public sector and private sector institutions. Last year, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services strengthened the regulatory and inspection procedures for such institutions under the provisions of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

To minimise the effect on local resources, particularly in areas where such premises are concentrated, my Department reimburses to local authorities 90 per cent. of the amount of the relief. The remaining 10 per cent. is taken into account when block grant entitlement is calculated.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many cases relating to the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978 have been heard in the High Court since the Act came into operation; and what effect the outcome of these cases has had on the working of the legislation.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am aware of six cases. Only two of them have affected the operation of the Act: Morgan v. Windsor and Maidenhead Royal Borough Council and Glenherne Nursing Services Ltd. v. Same, heard together in 1981. The judgment clarified the meanings of "care" and "illness" defined in section 2 of the Act in such a way as to bring within its scope premises providing for those who, as a result of illness or disability, could no longer live at home. A number of local authority and privately-run institutions which had previously been thought not be eligible have since successfully applied for relief.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish, for each class of local authority and for local authorities in total, the percentage of increase in current expenditure in cash between (a) 1978-79 and 1986-87 and (b) 1981-82 and 1986-87.

Mr. Ridley: The information based on returns made by English authorities is as follows:

Percentage changes in net current expenditure

Class of authority	1978-79 to 1986-87	1981-82 to 1986-87
Shire counties*	114·7	38·1

*Northumbria police authority expenditure is included in shire counties in 1978-79, 1981-82 but in the metropolitan area in 1986-87.

‖Including Isles of Scilly.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will rank in descending order, using their 1986-87 budgets, all English local authorities on the basis of the percentage above or below their grant-related expenditure assessments for 1986-87.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed the information in the House of Commons Library.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of expenditure performance and growth tables for 1981-82 to 1986-87, showing also the figures from 1978-79 to 1986-87.

Mr. Ridley: The information will be placed shortly in the House of Commons Library.

Faslane Bay

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now in a position to make a statement about dredging in Faslane bay and the means by which he intends to dispose of the waste, and in particular that part of it which is contaminated with asbestos.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 30 June 1986, c. 361-62]: The contract for dredging in Faslane bay was not in fact let on that day but will be let shortly.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many mortgage repossessions have taken place in each of the years 1979 to 1985 in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 1 July 1986, c. 459]: Information is available only in respect of England and Wales and cannot be shown separately for the two countries. The following figures include both domestic and non-domestic premises, and do not refer to domestic premises only, as stated in the heading to the table in my reply to the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Raynsford) of 10 June at column 129.

Housing Associations

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many homes were owned for rental by housing associations in England and Wales at the latest available date; and what were the figures for the same period for each of the last three years;

(2) how many homes have been built by housing associations for sale or shared ownership in each of the last three years;

(3) what is the total number of homes owned by the housing associations at the latest available date; and what were the figures for the same period for each of the last three years.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 3 July 1986]: The available information for England is as follows:

Housing associations: England

Co-ownership and shared ownership housing association dwellings are included in the owner-occupied stock statistics and are not separately identified.

For information on housing associations in Wales, I refer the right hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Swine Fever

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration he has given to the imposition of import restrictions on possible sources of swine fever; what recent discussions he has had with other European Community countries to seek to improve the effectiveness of measures designed to combat the disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: Measures for eradicating classical swine fever and rules for preventing its spread by intra-Community trade in pigs, fresh pigmeat and pigmeat products are the subject of Community directives. Representations have been made to me that I should take national action to restrict imports of certain pigmeat products. However, although the source of all but the most recent outbreak has been linked directly or indirectly to the feeding to pigs of imported pigmeat products, it is impossible to say from which country the infected imports came. In present circumstances I am advised that we would not be justified in making use of the relevant safeguard clause to impose additional restrictions and that any attempt to do so would be legally unsound, and would be overruled in Brussels.

I am, however, in touch with the Commissioner for Agriculture in the European Commission to underline the Government's serious concern at the classical swine fever situation which has existed in other member states for a number of years. I am urging on him the need for more stringent measures to be applied in the Community to stamp out disease when it occurs, and for a fresh assessment to be made of the degree of processing required to render pigmeat products safe. Officials are also pursuing these matters in the standing veterinary committee and direct with the member states concerned.

Radiation

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a report on his Department's reaction to the Chernobyl emergency with particular reference to its state of readiness to monitor radioactive fallout from any source, the suitability of the relevant resources and contingency plans and the need for national and international agencies to adopt common and comprehensible measurements of contamination and standards of safety for exposure to or ingestion of contaminated materials.

Mrs Fenner: No. I am satisfied that my Department's contingency plans enabled us to detect immediately the presence of radioactivity arising from the accident at Chernobyl, and to make a prompt and realistic assessment of its implications for food and agriculture. The safety levels applied in the United Kingdom were agreed by the Government on the advice of the National Radiological Protection Board and are derived from recommendations published by the International Commission on Radiological Protection. Discussions were held on 22-23 May by a group of Community scientists under article 31 of the Euratom treaty to discuss the trigger level for Community control measures, and my officials will be considering how best to participate in any work following up the European Council's consideration of the need for tolerance levels to be set on a scientific basis within the appropriate international fora.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in how many instances readings of 1,000 becquerels per kilogram or higher have been found in vegetables following the Chernobyl disaster; and what action his Department took in consequence.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 1 July 1986, c. 514]: One result from Cumbria relating to a mixed sample of cabbages and leeks taken on 8 May 1986 showed the combined radiocaesium level of 1165 Bq/kg. This was a transient contamination and well below the level at which action would need to be considered. Subsequent results for the monitoring of vegetables in the area showed lower levels of caesium.

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the results of radioactivity monitoring on cows milk, sheep milk, sheep and vegetables for May 1985 for Cleveland, Cumbria, Durham and Northumberland.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1986, c. 572]: My Department's terrestrial monitoring programme commenced in January 1986. No data are therefore available for the period requested for milk, meat and vegetables. This complements the environmental monitoring programme conducted by nuclear site operators as a condition of their licence under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. The results of this monitoring are published annually by the site operators.

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he increased the monitoring of vegetables in Cumbria following the discovery of readings of 1100 bq/kg of caesium 137 and 895 bq/kg of iodine 131 on cabbages and leeks in Cumbria on 9 May.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1986, c. 572]: The readings of 1100 bq/kg of caesium 137 and 895 bq/kg of iodine 131 found in cabbages and leeks in Cumbria on 8 May represented a transient contamination well below the level at which action would need to be considered. Subsequent results for the monitoring of vegetables in the area showed lower levels of caesium.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his advice regarding the safety of eating whimberries, wild bilberries, wild raspberries and black berries growing in north Wales or the lake district, as well as garden fruits, in the light of radioactive fallout in May in those areas.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1986, c. 572]: Levels of radioactivity in all crops tested are now extremely low in all parts of the country. However, we are continuing to test commercial fruits and wild berries as they come into season to ensure they are safe for human consumption.

Sheepmeat (Caesium Levels)

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, for the area of Cumbria in which there is a ban on the movement of lamb, what is (a) the total lamb population, (b) the total number of lambs sampled on each occasion a sample is taken to test for radioactivity, (c) an analysis of the radioactivity levels by convenient range of radioactivity within these samples for each day on which testing has taken place since 1 May.

Mrs. Fenner: The information requested is as follows:

(a) approximately 400,000 lambs under one year of age are in the designated area in Cumbria.

(b) Ministry staff have been taking 100 to 200 lambs per week for testing within the designated area since the introduction of the emergency order on 20 June. All animals taken as samples are analysed for radioactivity.

(c) Information on the number of samples taken and the results obtained were published by my Department in a press notice on 20 June, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The results of further monitoring will be published by my Department on a regular basis.

Butter

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total value of the subsidy on open market butter purchased by non-profit-making organisations during 1985.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1986, c. 571]: The amount of subsidy paid in 1985 on open market butter purchased by non-profit-making organisations was £5·689 million.

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the subsidy on each 250 gramme packet of butter on the open market purchased by non-profit-making organisations during 1985.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1986, c. 571]: During 1985 the subsidy on open market butter purchased by non-profit-making organisations was 24p per 250 gramme pack from January to May and 23p per 250 gramme pack from June to December.

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of non-profit-making organisations have claimed the subsidy on butter purchased on the open market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1986, c. 571]: I regret this information is not available. Records are kept only of those non-profit-making organisations claiming subsidy under Commission regulation 2191/81. We have no means of establishing the total number of organisations which might be eligible to apply.

Fish Quotas

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the present European Community quotas for each type of fish imposed on the sea-fishing industries of each of the member states; and which of the quotas have been exceeded to date.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 3 July 1986]: The information regarding quotas is set out in the annexes to the following Council regulations:

(a) Community Waters
Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3721/85 dated 20 December 1985
Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3777/85 dated 31 December 1985

(b) External Waters
Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3551/85 dated 12 December 1985
Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3725/85 dated 20 December 1985
Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3730/85 dated 20 December 1985
Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3732/85 dated 20 December 1985
Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3783/85 dated 31 December 1985
Council Regulation (EEC) No. 114/86 dated 20 January 1986 extended the validity of Regulations (EEC) Nos. 3721/85, 3730/85, 3734/85 and 3777/85 until 31 December 1986.

The regulations were published in the Official Journals of the European Communities, Nos. L 339 of 18 December 1985, L 361 and L 363 of 31 December 1985 and L 17 of 23 January 1986, copies of which are available in the Library.

Official catch returns by member states are made available by the Commission of the European Communities on a monthly basis. The most recent figures, covering the period January to April 1986, indicate that the following quotas have been exceeded:

(a) Netherlands: Cod in I.C.E.S. Areas VII (excluding VIIa) and VIII (EC zone)

(b) Netherlands: Whiting in I.C.E.S. Area VII (excluding VIIa)

(c) Germany: Saithe in I.C.E.S. Areas Vb(EC zone) and VI.

Further fishing by vessels of these two countries for the stocks concerned have been prohibited by Commission regulation.

United Kingdom catch returns are available for the period January to May 1986 and they show that no quotas have been exceeded.

Fish Sizes

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken by Her Majesty's Government and other European Governments to ensure that no fish below the minimum size allowed to be caught are fished in European waters.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 3 July 1986]: In its report of 16 June 1986 to the Council of the European Communities, the Commission has underlined the need for effective enforcement of the total allowable catch/quota system and the technical conservation measures if the common fisheries policy is to work fairly. The Government fully endorses that approach.

The report, which was laid before the House on 2 July (document 7717/86), has identified various shortcomings in the way some member states enforce control on undersized fish. The Commission intends, where the circumstances require, to undertake infringement proceedings against member states in the European Court.

The United Kingdom is regarded as having effectively discharged its enforcement obligations, although we are criticised for taking little action on the landing of undersized nephrops tails in Northern Ireland. We will be discussing this criticism with the Commission to determine what further measures, if any, are necessary.

Persistent Plastics (Dumping Convention)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what methods are being used by Her Majesty's Government to monitor the effectiveness of the London and Oslo dumping convention in respect of persistent plastics.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 3 July 1986]: The effectiveness of these conventions is regularly reviewed by member countries on the basis of statistical data and scientific assessment of the state of the sea. Both organisations recognise that persistent plastics enter the sea mainly from coastal tipping, littering, or from ships' garbage, and not from sea dumping as such.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of supplementary benefit claimants, and the value of the claims, for claimants (a) under 26 years and (b) 26 years and over in receipt of the no fixed abode allowance for 1981, and in each subsequent year to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Major: Separate statistical information on this subject is not maintained and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, our monitoring of the impact of the 1985 boarder changes does not show any evidence of general increases in homelessness among young people attributable to those changes.

Pensions

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the additional full-year costs of advancing the date of qualification for retirement pension to the beginning of the week within which the qualifying birthday falls.

Mr. Major: To advance the date of qualification for state retirement pension in this way would entail paying pensions for periods for which no entitlement exists, because the qualifying birthday is the minimum age at which state retirement pension becomes payable. The gross full year cost would be in the order of £20 million on the benefit rates applicable from July 1986.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Burnley at the latest date for which figures are available were receiving (a) rate rebates, (b) rent rebates and (c) rent allowances; and how many of these are certificated claims.

Mr. Major: On the basis of information from Burnley borough council's latest subsidy claim, it is estimated that the average number of people in receipt of rate rebate, rent rebate and rent allowance is:

	Rent rebate	Rent allowance	Rate rebate
Certificated	2,930	1,050	6,260
Standard	2,330	570	4,640
Total	5,260	1,620	10,900

Unemployment Benefits

Mr. Prescott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, for the latest year for which figures are available, what is the total number of unemployed people who, during the course of the year, exhausted their unemployment benefit entitlement but were not subsequently eligible for supplementary allowance.

Mr. Major: The precise information requested is not available, but it is estimated that of those who exhaust their entitlement to unemployment benefit something like 15 to 20 per cent. are not subsequently eligible for supplementary allowance.

Hospital Schemes

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will identify and list in the Official Report (a) the hospital schemes started and completed since May 1979, and (b) the hospital schemes of more than £2 million now being planned, designed or constructed; and if he will give the costs of all these schemes in (a) and (b).

Mr. Hayhoe: The information held centrally is as follows. Cost estimates for schemes in planning and design are not published in advance of the invitation to tender.

Drug Abuse

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evaluation has been made of the impact which anti-drug abuse videos have had on teenagers' attitudes to drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Institute for the Study of Drug Dependence holds information in its library about videos which have been evaluated. In January 1986 this Department launched a drug misuse video package for 12 to 15-year-olds. Over 4,700 secondary schools in England and Wales have applied for a free copy. We shall be evaluating our package when schools have had sufficient time to make proper use of it.

Children's Deaths (Balconies)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have (a) been injured and (b) died through falling off balconies during each of the last five years for which records are available; and of what ages they were.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that information is not available on the numbers of children injured through falling off balconies. The table shows the total number of accidental deaths registered with an underlying cause of death as "fall from or out of building or other structure" in England and Wales in each of the last five years for children aged under 15 years, and also, of those, the number specifically stating "fall from balcony" or similar term.

Computerisation

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which officials in his Department are to be offered increments in pay of £1,000 for helping to administer new computerisation methods and procedures; what salaries they currently earn; what consultations he has had with Civil Service unions about these new methods and procedures; and what was the outcome.

Mr. Major: In line with other Departments, this Department pays automatic data processing (ADP) allowances to the following specialist computer staff:

	Salary Scale	ADP allowance paid after Qualifying period of 1 year
		1st year	2nd year	3rd year
Executive Officer	£5,250-£9,685	£700	£1,400	£1,800
Higher Executive Officer	£9,430-£11,941	£600	£1,200	£1,500
Senior Executive Officer	£11,639-£14,629	£500	£1,000	£1,200

The Department is also considering, as are other Departments, the payment of a discretionary allowance on top of the current ADP allowances; the terms and conditions for making payments have yet to be decided.

Mental Patients

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have been detained in a mental hospital or psychiatric unit in each of the last seven years under the provisions of section 36 of the Mental Health Act.

Mr. Whitney: Section 36 of the Mental Health Act 1983 was implemented on 1 October 1984. Between that date and the end of 1984 there were six admissions to mental illness hospitals and units in England. Figures for 1985 are not yet available.

Single Payments

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current average length of time for a decision on an application for a single payment in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Lothian and (d) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Major: Claims for single payments are determined as soon as possible after all the information required has been collected; and urgent claims are given priority. Owing to a recent upsurge in claims in Scotland, resulting from a number of "take-up" campaigns mounted by local authorities and other agencies, claims are taking longer than usual to process.

Decisions on urgent claims are being given in one to two and two to three weeks, respectively at the Port Glasgow and Greenock local social security offices. Routine claims are taking longer, up to 15 and 8 weeks, respectively. Similar figures for Strathclyde, Lothian and Scotland are not available.

Children (Malnutrition)

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have been (a) admitted to hospital and (b) diagnosed as suffering from malnutrition in each of the last five years.

Mr. Whitney: I will let the right hon. Member have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Food (Nutritional Content)

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies are currently being undertaken into the nutritional content of the food eaten by pensioners, those on low incomes and those on supplementary benefit.

Mr. Whitney: A dietary and medical survey of adults aged 16 to 64, beginning in October, will provide data on a randomly selected sample of the United Kingdom population, including those on low incomes and supplementary benefit. In addition, consumption in low income and pensioners' households is included in the continuing survey undertaken by the national food survey committee. Details appear in its annual report.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy towards resources to combat schizophrenia in the light of the launch of "Schizophrenia: A National Emergency".

Mr. Whitney: A substantial proportion of the £1 billion which is spent annually on mental illness services is spent on the care and treatment of people with schizophrenia. We do not have statistics available centrally that would indicate the precise proportion. We mean to ensure that these funds are used to the best possible advantage. Early this year we set aside £6 million over the next three years to establish mental illness development projects in each

National Health Service region, to assist their progress towards improved patterns of care. (This supplements three projects, specifically on aftercare for schizophrenia, which were launched in 1983.)

When the development projects were launched we also set aside resources for additional research studies in mental illness; four new studies — all including people with schizophrenia and one including such people only — are already under way. We welcome the progress that has been made in recent years towards understanding this disease and finding the most effective methods of care.

We welcome, too, the part which voluntary bodies can play in the mental illness field, in co-operation with the statutory authorities both in raising additional funds and in increasing the knowledge of the public in a non-sensational way, so dispelling unfounded fears.

Residential Care Homes

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken, in the context of the Government's policy towards deregulation and in the light of the recommendations contained in the White Papers on that subject, Cmnd. 9571 and 9794, to review the regulations covering old people's residential homes; what assessment he has made of the implications of any relaxation in those regulations for the control of abuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short), on 12 June at column 288, and reaffirm that there are no proposals to deregulate residential care homes.

I further refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels), on 3 June at column 548, on the two-year study which is being carried out by the Social Services Inspectorate. When the inspectorate's further report is available the regulatory arrangements will be reviewed and account will then be taken of the responses to the enterprise and deregulation unit's recent consultation with local authorities and other interested bodies in connection with the review of licensing described in the White Paper "Building Business . . . Not Barriers".

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 100

SESSION 1985-86

23rd June-4th July 1986

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
